The Senator from New Jersey is fundamentally wrong in his diagnosis of the case. What business needs is not pap, is not subsidy, is not supervision; it is air, a chance to breathe. It is not a few hundred yards more of red tape about its puissant limbs, but it is somebody with wisdom enough and somebody with courage enough and somebody with candor enough to admit that no party, Democratic or Republican, and no government that ever was devised by the wit of men, ever made this or any other people rich or prosperous. The only thing that government can do for business, the only thing that doctors can do for the human body, is to give it a chance to cure itself, give it a wholesome atmosphere. Give business all the liberty consistent with the peace and security of society and with the legitimate rights of others engaged in similar occupations.

The trouble now is, and the trouble from the beginning has been, that you have attempted all sorts of legislative nostrums. The Senator from North Carolina has very wisely called the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the fact that but a few years ago we had an industrial commission which spent nearly a million dollars, and compiled tomes of statistics, which now litter the cellars of this Capitol, hundreds of thousands of pages. You can find in the report of that commission every conceivable plan by which Governments ever attempted to make men rich or prosperous, and they are so much waste paper.

I say, Mr. President, that from the beginning this Government has done but two things for business. I maintain, and I invite contradiction on the part of the Senator from New Jersey, that neither the Government of the United States nor the Government of any other country in the history of the civilized world has or ever can do more than two things for business. One is to subsidize and the other is to supervise it. That is all. It is all any Government ever will do. The first is always pernicious and the last is usually unnecessary, and generally unwholesome.

Let us get down to the bedrock. Prosperity means nothing more nor less than an industrial state in which the great majority of the citizens of the United States or any other country engaged in productive enterprises are operating at a profit, are accumulating wealth.

Wealth can only be accumulated in one of two ways. You must either make it or you must take it away from him who has made it. There are only two sources of wealth in this country. One is production and the other is plunder. You may plunder like a medieval marauder. You may plunder with a battle ax and a mace. You may plunder with a dark lantern, a club, and a jimmy, or you may plunder by the misuse of the law, but money that is made by crudely taking it away from the man who produced it, or money that is made by perverting the powers of government to make an unprofitable support a profitable business, are essentially immoral—are industrially pernicious.

Why should we waste months of time and millions of money in a vain and foolish effort to find new ways to either subsidize or supervise the business of the United States? You have exhausted a morbid ingenuity in that direction already. If there is any new way by which the powers of this Government may be used to subsidize those who are politically persona grata, and to plunder those who are helpless, I believe you will fail to find it.

Let us see what this resolution does. After a multitude of whereases, it provides:

> That it shall be the duty of the committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States and the markets of foreign countries, in so far as the same directly affect industry and commerce of the United States, including questions as to production, distribution, labor, and business methods, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation, if any, as it may deem best upon these subjects, with a special reference to the most effective ways and means to revive industry and to stimulate foreign and domestic trade—> to stabilize business conditions as to the future, to minimize the danger and distress of recurring periods of business depression with their resultant cycles of general unemployment, and to define the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade.

Think of it!—

You have covered the scope of inquiry of every political economist from Adam Smith to the present day. You have covered everything that every parliamentary, legislative, and judicial body has ever attempted to do since the governments were ordained by man. It is said that Sir Francis Bacon took all knowledge for his province, but the scope of this inquiry makes the activities of Bacon seem narrow and contemptible in comparison.

If this committee does what this resolution proposes it shall do, it will be wiser than Bacon, more patient in its inquiries than Adam Smith, more ingenious than John Stuart Mill, and you will evolve from six Members of the House and Senate more wisdom than the House and Senate have ever displayed since the first Congress was assembled. All this is just plain "moonshine," legislative "bunk."

Here is the milk in the coconut; it is proposed to distinguish between illicit combinations in restraint of trade and cooperative organizations of various kinds. That is the essence of the thing when you clear the rubbish out of the way. To quote a homely expression we use in the South, that is "the nigger in the woodpile," and I know it, because the Senator from New Jersey introduces with it a companion piece, which proposes the creation of a commission, to be composed not of lawyers but of hard-headed business men, who shall investigate all the business concerns of this country, their methods of operation, their by-laws, constitutions, and minutes, and shall determine, from the method of their organization and the method of their operation, whether or not they are violating the Sherman Act. If they are, they shall be told to cease and desist. If they are not, they are to be given a certificate of good character. They shall receive a certificate which they can file with the Department of Justice securing absolute immunity from Federal interference or indictment by any court in the United States.

Such a combination, so fraught with folly and corruption, has not been proposed since I have been a Member of either the House or the Senate. Think of it! This is proposed by a leader in that administration which solemnly promised the people of the United States that it was going to take politics out of business and take business out of politics. This creates a great and infallible tribunal with the power to grant a plenary indulgence, without the right of appeal, to every crooked concern between Cape May and the Golden Gate, between the north woods and the Everglades of Florida.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. Does the Senator assume from the line of argument that if such a bill became a law any governmental tribunal that should be delegated with administrative and interpretative authority, as the term is used, would be crooked and would give to business the right to do those things which they should not do under the law? He must assume, from what he says, that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which to-day has very large powers to give orders, as I understand it, is not honest. Does he for one moment assume that these governmental bureaus are not honest?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly not. Suppose the Senator from New Jersey should introduce a bill to do away with the right of trial by jury and I should oppose it as a pitiless and archaic piece of tyranny. Would the Senator from New Jersey rise in his place and say that I assumed that judges were cruel and pitiless because I did not give them the right to draw the halter about the neck of every man charged with crime in this country? The greatest Attorney General of his day, Jeremiah S. Black, declared that the judge who does away with the functions of a jury and sends a man to his doom murders him as effectually as if he rolled up the sleeves of his robe and stabbed him through the heart.

If it should be proposed that that provision of the Constitution prohibiting the union of church and state, or the guaranties of liberty of speech and freedom of the press should be abolished, would the Senator from New Jersey rise in his place and say that I assumed that Congress and the Executive are corrupt and that they would abuse a power to supervise the press, to censor it?

Mr. EDGE. No; Mr. President.

Mr. STANLEY. I say to the Senator from New Jersey that the power to say who is obeying the law and who is not, save alone the courts that have been tried by a thousand years of experience, save alone by the process of law that is hoary with the proscription of centuries, is replete with danger and is the fecund mother of possible corruption.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I think the Senator would agree as a lawyer that if legislation can be devised which would provide for business information from properly constituted Federal bureaus which would keep business out of the courts, that through cooperation with such a bureau, discussing the possibilities of the activities of the trade associations, not giving them immunity, as he puts it, but with an understanding between them and the Government, as far as it is possible, just as the Interstate Commerce Commission, as I understand it, now administers a portion of their responsibility, certainly it is for the best interests of the people of the country to keep them out of the courts. The courts we all know are very congested. If we can devise a method to lessen litigation, with its terrific expense and burden, it seems to me we are accomplishing something in the interest of all the citizenship of the country.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I wish there were a Santa Claus; I wish there was such a thing as an infallible source of wisdom and power that could tell the people just what to do to be saved and tell the people just what to do to be rich. But I do not share the faith of the Senator from New Jersey. I regret that the same pernicious delusion, from which, thank God, the founders of the Constitution were eternally free, that there is vested in the men in the aggregate, clothed with the pomp and circumstance of power, a wisdom which ordinary men not in office do not enjoy, can not once and for all be sent to the eternal depths of exploded delusions. In Kentucky, away back yonder shortly after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, her legislature approved certain resolutions written by Thomas Jefferson, in which they declared, in opposition to the alien and sedition laws, that governments are a necessary evil; that they must be constantly watched with eternal vigilance; that they have a tendency to insidiously increase and to abuse their powers; and that only delegated powers, tested by experience, should ever be given to any Government, however wise, or to any officer, however good and pure. Personally there are few better men than that poor Czar whose body festers in an abandoned mine in northern Siberia, but that did not make him a good tyrant. Few men were more exemplary in their early youth than Commodus or Caligula, but that did not prevent authority from festering their very souls and converting well-meaning men into monsters.

After years of experience, after declaring from the foundation of the Government that the vesting of unlimited power anywhere in any body for any length of time and for any purpose was eternally pernicious, it is proposed in the twentieth century, it is proposed after 150 years of experience, to create an industrial tribunal which the Senator from New Jersey admits has absolutely unrestricted power, in the hope that its wisdom will increase with its power and that it will not abuse its authority.

Why, Mr. President, think what it would mean. The Senator proposes to create a commission, unbound by any of the precedents or forms or mandates of the law, from which there is no appeal, which is not required to try causes in the white light of day, which does not give defendants or plaintiffs an opportunity to meet and confront and to cross-examine the witnesses against them, which holds its sessions in some dark corner of some marble sarcophagus here in Washington, which can issue decrees that can make and unmake fabulous wealth, which can divert billions in or out of the coffers of great concerns, with no means of detection, or redress, or review.

The Senator says we must give these plenary powers to this crazy commission because they are honest men. They were honorable men whose daggers stabbed Cæsar. The way to keep men honest is to keep them where they can not be dishonest without detection. That is plain common sense.

Why, the Senator from New Jersey, if he would pursue the same policy in ordinary business for himself that he is attempting for the people of the United States would smash every cash register in his concern, because it is of no earthly use if all men are going to be honest even in the handling of a few dimes.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Kentucky I would not come to him for advice in connection with a matter of that kind.

Mr. STANLEY. It is a pity the Senator does not do so. The Senator from New Jersey does not need to come to me. If in governmental matters he would wait at the back door of some high school and get a boy who had read the Constitution five minutes before and had studied civil government for two hours, that boy would tell him that this thing was puerile, wicked, and absurd. I feel that I waste the time of the Senate, to say nothing of my own time, in exposing the folly of such a proposition. Of course, the Senator would not come to me for advice, nor to any other man who is supposed to have any insight into the thinly veiled iniquities that this proposal—I will not say is designed, I will not say it is the purpose—but the result of this legislation will make every crooked concern from Androscoggin to Yubadam call its author blessed.

Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is very simple and very plain. For years and years business concerns—and I am not blaming big business for it—all over the world have desired to make money. The easiest way in the world to make money is to keep the other fellow from underselling. Men invest hundreds of millions in great concerns and they naturally object to the dangerous and embarrassing effect of some competitor with more ingenuity and more enterprise getting into the same business and underselling. The doctor feels resentful toward the charlatan who makes a visit to his patient more cheaply than he does. I know as a lawyer that the reputable lawyer does not enjoy it when some shyster who has not half his ability takes a case for a third what he would charge. So the great head of some great industry, who has built it up and believes he is charging a reasonable price for his product, naturally looks for some method of coming to an understanding with his competitors and preventing a fall in price.

We all want to make just as much money as we can by the exertion of our energy and our talent. I am not inveighing against business because of self-interest, because of that desire to accumulate and to prosper which is inherent in the hearts and minds of all of us. But it remains, nevertheless, Mr. President, that the good of society demands that doctors should not have the right to get together and fix fees; that lawyers should not have the right to absolutely fix their charges; that merchants nor farmers nor anybody else should have the right to violate or to prevent the operation of the wholesome laws of supply and demand. For that reason, not the Sherman Act, but the common law has prohibited, has inhibited, has punished combinations in restraint of trade from the dawn of Anglo-Saxon civilization.

This is nothing new. The Sherman Act simply applied the rules of common sense and of common law to interstate trade. Away back in Addyston Pipe case the present Chief Justice of the United States, a former President, in Eighty-fifth Federal Reporter, very aptly declared:

> It is certain that if the contract of association which bound the defendants was void and unenforceable at the common law because in restraint of trade, it is within the inhibition of the statute if the trade it restrains was interstate.

In other words, the only thing the Sherman Act, that they talk so much about, ever did was to apply the rules of the common law to interstate trade, to apply principles that are as old and as immutable as justice and civilization itself.

What was it that the Sherman antitrust law was intended to prevent? Does that law deprive men, as the Senator from New Jersey would have us believe, of the enjoyment of the rights that are necessary to prosperity, of privileges that are essential to a revival of business? Is there anything that men are to gain by violating the Sherman law, which ought to be the foundation and the basis of honest and legitimate business?

Mr. President, no man ought to know better about the things which the Sherman law was intended to prevent and to prohibit than the great former president of the Steel Corporation, who, in my opinion, is the greatest genius the steel industry has ever produced; a man who is to steel what Edison is to electricity; the greatest executive which that great business has produced in the history of steel in the United States—Charles M. Schwab. No man had a more accurate knowledge of the character and effect of such agreements than Charles M. Schwab, once the president of the United States Steel Corporation. Speaking of the very combinations which the Senator from New Jersey says we ought not to try to prohibit, Mr. Schwab says:

> No man has a clearer appreciation than myself of the evils that lurked in the trust scheme. * * * It was founded on misconception and promoted along the lines of self-destruction. Its fundamental principles were the restraint of trade, increase of price, and the throttling of competition—a trinity that would wreck any proposition, business, political, or social.

The whole idea of combining and restraining trade, which the Sherman Act was designed to prevent, the whole idea of cooperative selling and cooperative buying for great industrial concerns, says Mr. Schwab—> was founded on misconception and promoted along the lines of self-destruction. Its fundamental principles were the restraint of trade, increase of price, and the throttling of competition—a trinity that would wreck any proposition, business, political, or social.

And there never was a business association which had no desire to throttle competition, to restrain trade, or to increase prices which was in any danger of violating the Sherman law, and there never will be.

Mr. President, I know of nothing in which men have shown a greater or more morbid ingenuity, except in the desire to create perpetual motion, than the idea of business men that they can devise some means under which, by agreement among themselves, they may restrict competition or fix prices or restrain trade; by which they may sell cooperatively, without violating the plain letter of that brief act. It looks so easy that they have not yet ceased the attempt. Occasionally, as in the Knight case and a few others, they have managed temporarily to avoid the meshes of that wonderful act, but ninety-nine out of one hundred of them sooner or later have come to grief in the courts when the purpose of the combination was understood.

Mr. President, think of the wonderful ingenuity that these men have exercised. For instance, if I own a share of stock, there is absolutely no harm in my selling that share of stock to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON]; it could hardly be called commerce; it is absolutely innocent; and yet that is all that was done in the formation of one of the most gigantic monopolies that ever menaced the industrial peace of the world.

The Great Northern and the Northern Pacific first invented that device. It was hatched in the fecund brain of Victor Morawetz, the man who, it is said, wrote the charters and by-laws of the Northern Securities Co., of the United States Steel Corporation, and of the Standard Oil Co. He said, "It is easy enough to get around that law; all that the stockholders have to do is to sell their stock, transfer it to a holding company"—that is what was done in the case of the Northern Securities Co.—"and on the basis of that stock issue other stock." So the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific put their stock into hodgepodge, into a pool; the stock was preserved, and the holding company issued pro rata stock of the securities company in lieu of the old stock of the several companies. There was not a word said about freight rates; not a word said about wages; not a word said about concurrent operation; not a word said about pooling interests or anything of that sort; but that immortal jurist, Mr. Justice Harlan, said, "It matters not how innocent the thing which was done; to a practical, hard-headed, common-sense man it is a moral, physical, and intellectual impossibility for a hundred thousand to have all done the same thing at the same time, except for one purpose, and that purpose was to secure the union of these two great corporations for the purpose of regulating rates and fares and controlling prices"; and so the court dissolved the Northern Securities Co. on the face of its organization.

The Steel Corporation drew up its charter and by-laws with that in view, and attempted to avoid it. It is very difficult to prove that the Steel Corporation ever in its history entered into a combination with any other concern to fix the price of a nail or a lock or a plate of tin. It found out that they could leave the whole field of coal and ore and semifinished steel untouched. They were charged with forming a coal trust. I examined into that allegation for six months, and stated publicly that there was not a suspicion of a trust in coal; there was not and is not now. They did not pay any attention to the coal fields or the ore fields; but it takes $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 to operate a battery of blast furnaces, the most costly apparatus in the whole business. So they seized upon the idea of controlling pig iron, and then they adopted the custom of charging for the cost of converting pig iron. That simple expedient gave the United States Steel Corporation an iron hold upon the steel industry of the world. It took me 18 months, with a committee composed of some of the ablest Members of the House of Representatives, among whom were some of the greatest jurists who ever adorned bar or bench, to find that out. It took years and twenty-odd volumes of investigations for a half dozen Federal courts and the Supreme Court of the United States to detect the sinister, subtle arrangements by which the Standard Oil Co. evaded the law.

Now, will the Senator from New Jersey tell me that a commission composed of a few "hard-headed" business men can do what the greatest jurists who ever sat on a bench have only been partially able to do, to discover the purpose and the effect of these subtle arrangements? They would know as little about it as would the Senator from New Jersey. They would make monkeys, cats'-paws, dupes, of any "hard-headed business men" who ever sat as a body to play pins with Victor Morawetz and the greatest lawyers in the world. Think of it—

> Six men of Hindustan,
> To learning much inclined,
> Each went to see the elephant,
> Though all of them were blind.

A select set of hard-headed business men, appointed by a Republican administration, are going to regulate everybody's business; to give one a certificate of good character and another the privilege to plunder. Not one of these hard-headed business men must know anything about the law, because the Senator from New Jersey says a knowledge of the law is a "suspicious circumstance," while the greatest lawyers in the world would be plying them with every cunning lie a lawyer ever uttered. If it were not so tragic it would be pathetically absurd.

I do not believe lawyers are any better than anybody else, but I do believe it takes a thief to catch a thief; I believe that it takes a lawyer to understand the machinations of a lawyer. More than that, where is the Senator from New Jersey going to find the wise men—2 or 10 or 20 wise men—who will know more about everybody's business than the persons directly interested know about it themselves? Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate are paid $7,500 a year. Members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are paid $12,000. That would not pay a healthy millionaire's cook for six months; that would not pay a decent overseer. A man who has sense enough, a man who has technical skill, a man who has the patience to understand the details of any great business, whether it be the production of oil or steel or copper or anything else, can command $100,000 a year; and surely the Senator from New Jersey is aware of the fact that they are only expected to know their own business; but the members of the proposed commission are expected to know about everybody's business.

The trouble, Mr. President, is not that we have not regulated business enough, but that we have regulated it too much. The trouble, I say to the Senator from New Jersey, with business to-day is not that there is no power, civil or ecclesiastical, to grant immunity to those who wish to violate the law, or to grant plenary indulgences to those who wish to plunder; the trouble is that somebody has not smashed half of the commissions which have been attempting to regulate business; the trouble is that we do not go back to the plain old rule that every man is entitled to manage his own business just as he pleases so long as he does not violate the simple principles of law and decency, and so long as he does not invade the tangible rights of his neighbor.

I would say to every individual in the United States: "Regulate your own household, your own appetites, your own aspirations, your own faith, your speech, your personal relations to God and to man, and so long as you concede that every other man has the same right and so long as you do not invade the legal rights of your neighbor you shall be absolutely secure and absolutely immune." I would say to every business in the United States, from the highest to the lowest, no matter how rich or poor: "So long as you obey the plain dictates of common law and common sense and refrain from doing that which the combined wisdom of the world and civilization has said is pernicious and immoral and industrially unsafe and unsound, so long as you keep within the plain, common-sense rules of the law of the land you may proceed as you will." I would take spies out of factories and inspectors out of warehouses; I would remove the long, pernicious, everlasting, cadaverous nose of every unnecessary inquisitorial supervisor into the morals, business, and health of this people, and I would put them to plowing corn or cracking rocks or doing something to earn their bread, instead of becoming nuisances and menaces to the peace and security and the honor and the safety of my country.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I did not want to interrupt the Senator's flow of oratory at that particular moment.

Mr. STANLEY. That is not oratory; that is truth.

Mr. EDGE. I wanted to thank the Senator that he seemed to be in agreement with me in one direction at least, and that is that business is decidedly overregulated.

Mr. STANLEY. "I thank thee for teaching me that word."

Mr. EDGE. That is exactly the thing we are endeavoring to bring about by such legislation as has been suggested—to do away with some of this regulation and overregulation and give business an opportunity to go to some tribunal that has some authority to help them out a little bit without their being continually haled into court.

The Senator speaks about investigating committees and says he has nothing to do with any of them. I am sure the Senator recalls the committee known throughout the country as the Stanley committee, which it seems to me was well known as an investigating committee years before I ever came to Congress. Apparently the Senator was in sympathy with his own investigation; was he not?

Mr. STANLEY. I wish the Senator from New Jersey could have been on that investigating committee.

Mr. EDGE. I wish I could.

Mr. STANLEY. He would not have diagnosed one disease and prescribed for another. Why, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that I endeavored to lay that great corporation upon the dissecting table, not to destroy it, but, as a kindly surgeon would do, to cure its ills. My purpose was not further to regulate and restrict its activities, but to discover what device these people were using, if any, and not they particularly, but all concerned—for the purpose of restraining competition, stifling trade, interfering with the free course of commerce. I am an advocate of personal liberty, but I would not hesitate to take a jimmy away from a burglar who was about to break into a house. I did not want to destroy the legitimate rights of that corporation or any other, but I wanted to find its jimmy, if I could, and I think I did.

I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that I have not changed one iota, I have not moved an inch, I have not stirred from my tracks since I pursued that investigation for 18 long months, on an average of 14 hours a day, without one feeling of anger or resentment toward the Steel Corporation or toward organized wealth, without one thought of personal hostility or aggrandizement; in a sincere desire to find the truth I labored as the chairman of that great committee. We did not have any experts. The work was done by the committee. My only reward, my only purpose, was to find out some way to keep open the great channels of commerce. Yet every great daily, almost without exception, in the United States at one time or another took me for its text. I was a "red-handed anarchist." I was a "flannel-mouthed demagogue." I was "playing to the wild, unclean, unholy passions of an ignorant mob"; and to-day many of those same great metropolitan dailies are good enough to speak of me as a conservative.

I said then to the chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation, I said in an address before the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, that I was a conservative, and that unless great corporations obeyed the law they would find themselves in the hands of pernicious, inquisitorial governmental tribunals like the Trade Commission and like this abominable thing the Senator from New Jersey would have if he gets a chance. I went before the President of the United States and pled with him with all the earnestness of my soul not to approve the creation of any kind of a trade commission; to leave the regulation of trade to the courts, where it belongs, and not to Congress, and not to bodies exercising legislative authority; and I to-day reaffirm with emphasis all I said and all I stood for as chairman of the committee investigating the United States Steel Corporation. That report of nearly 200 pages, that I wrote with my own hand, I shall leave as a heritage to my children and my children's children; and if they will read it when they are able to read, before they are out of their teens, they will repudiate the heresies of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention in conclusion to the fact that our greatest prosperity, perhaps, was enjoyed at a time when there was absolutely no industrial supervision over the business activities of the people of these United States. There perhaps never was a time in the history of this country—perhaps the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] knows better than I do about that, but it is my opinion that there never was a time in the history of this country, from the discovery of America until now—when the people of what are now these United States advanced more rapidly in culture, refinement, knowledge of government, and all the things that make for great and prosperous citizenship, than during the 30 years prior to the American Revolution. Considering their numbers, their wealth and their mastery of new enterprises was the marvel of the world.

The greatest English statesman, the most learned, the most versatile of all the parliamentarians of Great Britain—he towers in my mind above Fox and Grattan and Pitt and Chatham in the versatility of his knowledge, in the splendor of his intellect, and in the vast range of his clear and unobstructed vision; I refer to Edmund Burke. In defending these Colonies in the British Parliament he paid the wonderful tribute to which I would call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey:

"As to the wealth which the Colonies have drawn from the sea by their fisheries," he continued, speaking specially of the bill then in its last stage before the house, "you had all that matter fully opened at your bar. And pray, sir, what in the world is equal to it? Pass by the other parts and look at the manner in which the people of New England have of late carried on the whale fishery. Whilst we follow them among the tumbling mountains of ice, and behold them penetrating into the deepest frozen recesses of Hudsons Bay and Davis Straits, whilst we are looking for them beneath the Arctic Circle, we hear that they have pierced into the opposite region of polar cold, that they are at the antipodes and engaged under the frozen serpent of the south. Falkland Island, which seemed too remote and romantic an object for the grasp of national ambition is but a stage and resting place in the progress of their victorious industry. Nor is the equinoctial heat more discouraging to them than the accumulated winter of both the poles. We know that, whilst some of them draw the line and strike the harpoon on the coast of Africa, others run the longitude and pursue their gigantic game along the coast of Brazil. No sea but what is vexed by their fisheries. No climate that is not witness to their toils. Neither the perseverance of Holland nor the activity of France nor the dexterous and firm sagacity of English enterprise ever carried this most perilous mode of hard industry to the extent to which it has been pushed by this recent people; a people who are still, as it were, but in the gristle, and not yet hardened into the bone of manhood. When I contemplate these things—

And I commend this to the attention of the Senate—

When I contemplate these things; when I know that the Colonies in general owe little or nothing to any care of ours, and that they are not squeezed into this happy form by the constraints of watchful and suspicious government, but that, through a wise and salutary neglect, a generous nature has been suffered to take her own way to perfection—

I bespeak for the business of this country from the Senator from New Jersey, from the Federal Congress, from pernicious interference everywhere, that wise and salutary neglect. Better, a thousand times better, leave us as old England did, in the wilderness, to work out our own salvation, than to bind our limbs, fetter us, manacle us, wrap us in red tape, subtle, silent, resistless and suffocating as the coils of a boa constrictor.

Forty years ago, Mr. President, the greatest of foreign critics of our institutions—in 1840, I think, nearly a hundred years ago—saw the first symptoms of this pernicious, devastating, damnable paternalism. In the sixth chapter of his Democracy in America de Tocqueville has wisely warned us:

I had remarked—

Says de Tocqueville—

during my stay in the United States that a democratic state of society, similar to that of the Americans, might offer singular facilities for the establishment of despotism. * * *

I seek to trace the novel features under which despotism may appear in the world. The first thing that strikes the observation is an innumerable multitude of men all equal and alike. * * * Above this race of men stands an immense and tutelary power, which takes upon itself alone to secure their gratifications, and to watch over their fate. That power is absolute—

Oh, think how he describes the legislation of the Senator from New Jersey, how minutely he describes a propaganda that is in the air, making at times the atmosphere of the Senate Chamber fetid and debasing as the dungeon of a slave!

That power is absolute, minute, regular, provident, and mild. It would be like the authority of a parent if, like that authority, its object was to prepare men for manhood; but it seems, on the contrary, to keep them in perpetual childhood. It is well content that the people should rejoice, provided they think of nothing but rejoicing. For their happiness such a government willingly labors, but it chooses to be the sole agent and the only arbiter of that happiness; it provides for their security, foresees and supplies their necessities, facilitates their pleasures, manages their principal concerns, directs their industry, regulates the descent of property, and subdivides their inheritances—what remains—but to spare them all the care of thinking and all the trouble of living.

* * * * * * *

I have always thought that servitude of the regular, quiet, and gentle kind which I have just described might be combined more easily than is commonly believed with some of the outward forms of freedom, and that it might even establish itself under the wing of the sovereignty of the people. Our contemporaries are constantly excited by two conflicting passions—they want to be led and they wish to remain free; as they can not destroy either one or the other of these contrary propensities, they strive to satisfy them both at once. They devise a sole, tutelary, and all-powerful form of government, but elected by the people. They combine the principle of centralization and that of popular sovereignty; this gives them a respite; they console themselves for being in tutelage by the reflection that they have chosen their own guardians. Every man allows himself to be put in leading strings, because he sees that it is not a person or a class of persons, but the people at large, that holds the end of his chain.

Oh, deliver us from this wild, this insane, this pernicious political delusion that because everybody can vote, a mass of voters can not destroy the last vestige of personal liberty, of our industrial independence, our security, and prosperity.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 19, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 18, 1922.

PROMOTION IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

To be major.

Capt. Theodore Whiting Sidman, Infantry, from April 12, 1922.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Col. John Kramer Miller, Infantry, with rank from June 28, 1920.

Col. John Edwin Woodward, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Col. William Kelly, jr., Cavalry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Lieut. Col. Alfred James Booth, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. William Vaulx Carter, Cavalry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. James Alexander Ulio, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. Michael Joseph O'Brien, Quartermaster Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Capt. Rene Eugene Fraile, Quartermaster Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. John Nicholas Smith, jr., Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

MARINE CORPS.

First Lieut. Thomas R. Shearer to be a captain in the Marine Corps from the 18th day of October, 1921.

Second Lieut. William H. Hollingsworth to be a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July, 1921.

Second Lieut. Norman E. True to be a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July, 1921.

The following-named noncommissioned officers in the Marine Corps to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps for a probationary period of two years from the 11th day of February, 1922:

Gunnery Sergt. Wallace C. Harding.
First Sergt. William W. Davies.
Corpl. Everett H. Clark.
Sergt. Augustus W. Cockrell.
Sergt. Paul F. Jones.
Corpl. Delbert D. Spangler.
Corpl. James M. Smith.
First Sergt. Lewis A. Hohn.
Corpl. Bayard L. Bell.
Corpl. Vernon E. Megee.
Corpl. Joseph D. Humphrey.
Corpl. Orin H. Wheeler.
Corpl. William H. Doyle.
First Sergt. Harold S. Levis.
Corpl. Ernest E. Linsert.
Corpl. Thomas L. Cagle.
Sergt. James G. Hopper.

The following-named citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps for a probationary period of two years from the 15th day of March, 1922:

Edwin A. Pollock, a citizen of Georgia.
John R. Streett, a citizen of Maryland.
Cornelius J. Eldridge, a citizen of Virginia.
Randolph McC. Pate, a citizen of Virginia.
Dudley W. Davis, a citizen of Maryland.
Robert S. A. Gladden, a citizen of Maryland.
Franklin C. Hall, a citizen of Maryland.
John D. Christian, a citizen of Maryland.
Beverley S. Roberts, a citizen of Maryland.
Lucian C. Whitaker, a citizen of South Carolina.
William O. Brice, a citizen of South Carolina.
Francis M. Wulbern, a citizen of South Carolina.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Charlie S. Robbins to be postmaster at Good Water, Ala., in place of W. L. Crew. Incumbent's commission expired July 23, 1921.

John F. Fraser to be postmaster at Lafayette, Ala., in place of J. F. Fraser. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

CALIFORNIA.

Clarence A. Dickison to be postmaster at Compton, Calif., in place of A. M. Carson. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

ILLINOIS.

Fred J. Bohnenkemper to be postmaster at Germantown, Ill. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Mathias A. Grenning to be postmaster at Glenview, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Paul Bleser to be postmaster at Gross Point, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Lucian D. Lyons to be postmaster at St. David, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

KANSAS.

Robert B. Slavens to be postmaster at Lecompton, Kans. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

KENTUCKY.

Bud Morgan to be postmaster at Lothair, Ky. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

Thomas D. Tapp to be postmaster at Springfield, Ky., in place of S. W. Sims. Incumbent's commission expired February 18, 1922.

MINNESOTA.

Elmer O. Haugen to be postmaster at Pelican Rapids, Minn., in place of C. R. Frazee, resigned.

MISSISSIPPI.

Joseph R. Weathersby to be postmaster at Taylorsville, Miss. Office became presidential October 1, 1918.

Alabama Akers to be postmaster at Iuka, Miss., in place of J. C. Jourdan. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

NEW YORK.

John E. Gubb to be postmaster at Batavia, N. Y., in place of J. F. Ryan. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Everett H. Axtell to be postmaster at Deposit, N. Y., in place of M. F. Axtell, removed.

Philip I. Brust to be postmaster at Medina, N. Y., in place of J. M. Tuohey. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Sarah M. Taylor to be postmaster at Westbury, N. Y., in place of John Scally. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Charles N. Bodenheimer to be postmaster at Elkin, N. C., in place of J. H. Ball, resigned.

OHIO.

Ernest C. Ludwig to be postmaster at Anna, Ohio. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

James B. Emery to be postmaster at London, Ohio, in place of C. E. Gain. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1922.

Reinhart W. Kuck to be postmaster at New Bremen, Ohio, in place of L. W. Kunning. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1922.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Lucille B. Fillinger to be postmaster at Ralston, Pa. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Margaret Pilson to be postmaster at Morton, Pa., in place of F. W. McCall. Incumbent's commission expired August 22, 1920.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Jennie Dodge to be postmaster at Egan, S. Dak., in place of C. F. Jenks. Incumbent's commission expired July 23, 1921.

TEXAS.

Lucy A. Carhart to be postmaster at South San Antonio, Tex. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

VIRGINIA.

Claiborne W. Beattie to be postmaster at Chilhowie, Va., in place of J. S. Snavely, removed.

Edward M. Blake to be postmaster at Kilmarnock, Va., in place of H. W. Brent, resigned.

WASHINGTON.

Jennie A. Smith to be postmaster at Peshastin, Wash. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Joseph H. Dean to be postmaster at Castlerock, Wash., in place of Joseph O'Neill. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Rees B. Williams to be postmaster at Ilwaco, Wash., in place of M. E. Sprague. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WISCONSIN.

Joseph Kuchenmeister to be postmaster at Almena, Wis. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Nels O. Neprud to be postmaster at Coon Valley, Wis. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Edward Stackman to be postmaster at Ontario, Wis. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Alvin E. Hafer to be postmaster at Roberts, Wis. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Stanleigh K. Caveney to be postmaster at Arcadia, Wis., in place of Albert Hess. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

John B. Thelen to be postmaster at National Home, Wis., in place of A. R. Curtis. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WYOMING.

Chester A. Lindsley to be postmaster at Yellowstone Park, Wyo., in place of George Whittaker, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 18, 1922.

POSTMASTERS.

CONNECTICUT.

Edwin H. Powell, Burnside.

GEORGIA.

Lavonia L. Mathis, Bullochville.
Olivia F. Anderson, Chipley.
Jefferson B. Hatchett, Greenville.

NEVADA.

Anna S. Michal, Round Mountain.
Emanuel Bollschweiler, Wells.

NEW YORK.

Hobart R. James, Cherry Creek.
Warren G. Hasbrouck, Highland.
John W. Bow, Romulus.
James McLusky, Syracuse.

TEXAS.

Scott F. Benson, Alvin.
James D. Heaton, Barry.
Maude P. Williams, Brookeland.
Maye B. Fitzgerald, Marfa.
Mamie Milam, Prairie View.
Thomas F. Lindley, Seminole.
Raymond C. Ditmore, Waskom.
Benjamin F. Huntsman, Winters.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 18, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord, we thank Thee that we are still the creatures of Thy thought, will, and love, and may these be more perfectly developed in us. Thy blessings are so manifold that they overflow and transcend all our needs. May they spur us to our duty, lift us to the mountain, strengthen us for the valley, and we would have these consecrated by the thought that God shares them. Bless us with true estimates and high standards, such as quiet homes, books of the master minds, worthy friends, and helpful pleasures. Let us always feel the higher reaches of life and being. Amid the changes of time and thought, O be Thou changeless and steadfast in the solemn issues of our public and private lives. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A DELEGATE.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of introducing to the House the Hon. H. A. BALDWIN, the Delegate elect from the Territory of Hawaii, and request that the oath of office be administered to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the certificate has been duly filed with the Clerk.

Mr. CURRY. It has.

Mr. BALDWIN appeared at the bar of the House, and the oath of office was administered to him by the Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 927. An act for the relief of Capt. Fred S. Johnston;

H. R. 3270. An act for the relief of Estella Barnett; and

H. R. 2004. An act for the relief of Frank Ferrin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2179. An act for the relief of Richard Parke.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House on the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3177. An act declaring a portion of the West Fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River, Cook County, Ill., to be a nonnavigable stream; and

S. 1297. An act for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1297. An act for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2179. An act for the relief of Richard Parke; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3177. An act declaring a portion of the West Fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River, Cook County, Ill., to be a nonnavigable stream; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the House Joint Resolution 268, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up from the Speaker's table House Joint Resolution 268, and the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 268, extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make the required statement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have conferred with the minority members of the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration, including the ranking member. We have all agreed that we ought to go to conference on the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARNER. I am not captious in objecting, but I want to state once more that I do think that when a Member asks unanimous consent to send a bill to conference he ought at least to state that he has conferred with the minority.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I meant no disrespect. I have conferred with the minority, and the ranking member of the minority is on the floor and can speak for himself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, SAVANNAH, GA.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the bill (H. R. 10407) authorizing the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga., was passed yesterday, and that that motion lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Foster	Lee, N. Y.	Sears
Barkley	French	Lehlbach	Shelton
Bond	Gahn	McFadden	Siegel
Brand	Gorman	Maloney	Slemp
Britten	Gould	Mansfield	Snyder
Brown, Tenn.	Greene, Mass.	Michaelson	Stiness
Buchanan	Griest	Moore, Ill.	Sullivan
Cantrill	Hammer	Nelson, J. M.	Sweet
Carew	Hardy, Tex.	Newton, Mo.	Taylor, Colo.
Chandler, Okla.	Hooker	Parker, N. J.	Taylor, Tenn.
Clark, Fla.	Hudspeth	Porter	Upshaw
Copley	Ireland	Pou	Walters
Crowther	Jefferis, Nebr.	Pringey	Ward, N. Y.
Davis, Tenn.	Johnson, Ky.	Radcliffe	Wason
Dempsey	Johnson, Miss.	Rainey, Ala.	Williams
Drewry	Jones, Pa.	Rainey, Ill.	Winslow
Driver	Kelly, Pa.	Reber	Wood, Ind.
Dunbar	Kiess	Robertson	Woodruff
Edmonds	Kirkpatrick	Rossdale	Yates
Evans	Kitchin	Ryan	Young
Fairchild	Kunz	Sabath	Zihlman
Fields	Lampert	Sanders, Ind.
Focht	Langley	Schall

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-nine Members have answered to their names; a quorum.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read, beginning at page 24.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. According to the agreement that was entered into a few days ago when this section was under consideration, the amendment which I offered was to be considered after the pending amendments which related to the personnel had been disposed of.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think the understanding was that we would pass over the bureau appropriations until after we had fixed the strength of the personnel and then return to the bureau appropriations again. The amendment which the gentleman offered, of course, will be pending when we reach that, in due course, but it is not my understanding that we were to take that up prior to the bureau appropriations.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the understanding with the Chair, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE.

ORDNANCE AND ORDNANCE STORES.

For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material; for the armament of ships, for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work of the Ordnance Department; for furniture at naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, naval ordnance plants, and proving grounds; for maintenance of proving grounds, powder factory, torpedo stations, gun factory, ammunition depots, and naval ordnance plants, and for target practice; for the maintenance, repair, or operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled freight and passenger carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes at naval ammunition depots, naval proving grounds, naval ordnance plants, and naval torpedo stations, and for the pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, naval ordnance plants, and naval ammunition depots; in all, $9,500,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, naval ordnance plants, and naval ammunition depots for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, shall not exceed $935,000.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEPHENS: Page 29, after line 24, insert the following: "That no part of this appropriation or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for expenditures at the naval proving ground, Dahlgren, Va., except so much as may be necessary to maintain the station on a closed-down basis."

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I have presented has to do with the Dahlgren Proving Ground, situated about 60 or 70 miles below Washington, in Virginia. The original proving ground was at Indianhead, about 25 miles down the river. The naval proving ground consists of three separate and distinct places. First, the proving ground at Indianhead; second, the powder factory at Indianhead; third, the proving ground lower station at Dahlgren, Va. On account of the long ranges of modern guns it was thought necessary during the war to establish a new proving ground at Dahlgren, Va. Transportation to Indianhead, Md., both for the powder factory and the proving ground, is effected by railroads by the way of White Plains, Md., and by barge on the Potomac River. Transportation to Dahlgren, Va., is effected by railroad or barge to Indianhead, and thence by reshipping 33 miles on the Potomac River to Dahlgren, Va. This primarily was a war activity. In the fall of 1918 the Naval Affairs Committee, upon the recommendation of the Bureau of Ordnance, introduced a bill appropriating $1,000,000 for a lower station proving ground at Dahlgren, Va. In 1919 the Bureau of Ordnance appeared before the Appropriations Committee and asked for an additional appropriation of $980,000 in the deficiency appropriation bill. This was without the knowledge of the members of the Naval Affairs Committee. The original appropriation of $1,000,000 was made by this committee, and the $980,000 additional was appropriated, as I said before, in the deficiency appropriation bill. The original plan presented to the committee was for an expenditure of $1,000,000. By this additional deficiency appropriation there was added to that expenditure $980,000, which gave to them in all $1,980,000. This has developed until there has been expended $2,200,000 at Dahlgren, Va. This is the lower station.

The original proving ground is at Indianhead. At Indianhead during the war there was expended over $7,000,000 in developing the Indianhead powder plant and the proving station, and in this they provided for officers' quarters and a railroad running into Indianhead station, so that the Indianhead station was complete in everything. It is complete in its powder factory and it was complete in its proving ground.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Has the gentleman any naval authority to the effect that you can satisfactorily test our long-range guns at Indianhead?

Mr. BUTLER. They are doing it at Aberdeen, Md.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have authority that we can test our long-range guns at Indianhead; yes. There is a difference between proving a gun and ranging a gun. Indianhead is complete. In proving a gun you do not need a high elevation. You prove the gun, prove the capacity of it; that is, you prove whether it is all right or not. In ranging a gun you range it at a certain elevation. In ranging these large guns will carry 25,000 or 30,000 yards. It was primarily for that purpose that the lower station was selected to range guns. It was a war activity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this is a very important restriction which the gentleman proposes to place upon the bill, I ask that he have five minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, as I said, there is a difference between proving and ranging a gun. The lower station was for the purpose of ranging large guns, an absolute war activity. The war is over. The necessity for this proving ground has disappeared. The capacity of the ground at Indianhead is complete. They have complete and full equipment for the proving of these guns.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman take the position that a gun in peace times ought not to be proved as to range, as to how far it will shoot?

Mr. STEPHENS. No. I do not claim that you need not range guns during peace times, but there are other methods of ranging guns. When these guns are taken aboard the battleships they are taken out for target practice and for ranging. There is no reason why these guns can not be ranged as they have been ranged heretofore, from the battleships.

Mr. KEARNS. If I understand, this place down here which the gentleman proposes to eliminate is about 60 miles below

Washington. That is the place where they have been taking the range of the guns, is it not?

Mr. STEPHENS. They have tested some of the guns; yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Has the gentleman any other place in the United States in mind, if this place be discarded, where we can range the guns?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes. There is a place at Aberdeen, Md., where you can range guns.

Mr. MUDD. Does the gentleman recall that Admiral McVay stated to the committee they could test these large guns at Aberdeen, Md.?

Mr. STEPHENS. It has already been stated before the committee that Aberdeen was a proper place for the ranging of large guns, if necessary, but I want to impress upon you the difference between the proving of guns and the ranging of guns. Dahlgren, Va., is on the Potomac River. There is no railroad within 35 or 40 miles of Dahlgren on that side of the river, and the only way you can get there is to go down to a certain point in Maryland and cross over 5 or 6 miles in a tug or any kind of a vessel to Dahlgren.

Mr. BUTLER. Right there, how many months of the year are they cut off from that point?

Mr. STEPHENS. If they have cold weather, if they have a freezing time, they would be cut off entirely. The harbor there is not of the proper depth. If we retain Dahlgren as a working unit there probably will have to be spent another million dollars at that place. I have the testimony of practical men who have been in the proving business for the last 20 or 25 years, stating that Indianhead is sufficient in all ways to conduct this proving station, and that it will save thousands and thousands of dollars to the Government in the way of transportation and in the way of men. We have at Dahlgren at the present time nearly 400 men, and Indianhead can handle this business with less than 100 men.

Mr. BUTLER. How many officers?

Mr. STEPHENS. At present at Dahlgren there are 17 naval officers. At Indianhead before the war there were six.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How much more time does the gentleman think he needs in order properly to explain this matter to the committee?

Mr. STEPHENS. I think I have properly explained it now, unless somebody wants additional information. I could go on and give facts for the next hour, if necessary.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We do not desire to take up too much time on this unless the gentleman has some other important matters he desires to give the committee. We do not want to dally too much.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I desire to ask the gentleman how much this would save the Government in expense?

Mr. STEPHENS. It would save the Government in ordinary expenses at least $500,000 a year, and it would save an additional expenditure of the further finishing of Dahlgren at least $1,000,000.

Mr. MUDD. The appropriation for ordnance supplies does not limit the Navy Department to expend as much as they please on Dahlgren, as a matter of fact?

Mr. STEPHENS. No.

Mr. MUDD. Is it not a fact the Navy Department asked for more money this year for Dahlgren than they asked for Indianhead?

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, I do not know but what the gentleman is right. At Dahlgren they have 1,468 acres, and they have erected 70 buildings. They have built 4½ miles of railroad, and they have two hangars for airplanes. In their original proposition there was not any mention made of airplanes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. How do you propose to do away with the discretion of the Navy Department and naval experts; they do not want this, do they? Leave them to select the place which is best and most efficient for the carrying out of this business.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will say to the gentleman the head of the Bureau of Ordnance recommended this place as a war activity.

Mr. STEVENSON. And does he recommend it now?

Mr. STEPHENS. I believe he does.

Mr. BUTLER. Explain to the committee the outfit they have there so that the committee will understand what has been done and how, at Aberdeen, they have every facility for testing these long-range guns that can be made, and we know that no more long-range guns for the Navy are now being considered.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will say that in the table given by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance the original estimate was $1,000,000, and it was stated positively to the members of the Naval Affairs Committee that that would cover the expenditure at Dahlgren, and then seven months thereafter this same bureau appeared before the Appropriations Committee and got an additional $980,000 without the knowledge of the members of the Naval Affairs Committee. And I will say further that they enlarged their plan there to equal their $980,000, and finally ran the expense to $2,200,000. In that they erected for the commandant's home a building that was estimated by some at $100,000; but the figures show that the house will cost not over $60,000. In that they built three other houses for their junior lieutenants at an expense of $30,000 apiece. And what I want to call your attention to is that this money has not been expended for the absolute proving business, but it has been expended for buildings that were not necessary.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will.

Mr. FESS. Did the gentleman say that houses were built for residence purposes at the rate of $30,000?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is what I say; that one house was built for a commandant's home at $60,000, and other homes for the lieutenant officers at $30,000 apiece.

Mr. FESS. By what authority?

Mr. STEPHENS. I can not tell by what authority. It seems the only authority I can discover is the proving ground itself, and I made inquiries as to who is the proving ground, and I am told that the proving ground is the commandant, and the commandant can enlarge and can expend money according to his own ideas, and that is what has been done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins, I wish to say that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] desired to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question, and I ask unanimous consent that he have a couple of minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman how many of these structures, costing from $30,000 to $60,000 for officers, were built?

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, there was one for the commandant. There were three for some of the other officers, at $30,000 apiece.

Mr. MONDELL. Were they built before the actual work on the proving grounds was completed?

Mr. STEPHENS. They were built before the actual work on the proving grounds was completed, because the proving grounds are not yet fully completed.

Mr. MONDELL. Who estimated for these buildings?

Mr. STEPHENS. From as much information as I can get, the commandant of the proving grounds.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the Navy Department approve the estimates?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not informed.

Mr. MONDELL. My idea was just what expert recommended the $60,000 building for the commandant and the $30,000 buildings for junior officers?

Mr. STEPHENS. In my investigation I can find no authority except that of the commandant in charge, who proceeded to recommend it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has investigated this matter carefully, and does he know of anyone in the Navy Department that has criticized this expenditure, or that has taken any steps to call to task the men who are responsible for it?

Mr. STEPHENS. I have not heard of any criticism from the Navy Department or of anyone called to task.

Mr. MONDELL. These buildings were deemed essential, I suppose, for the maintenance of the Navy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS. They might have been deemed essential by some.

On January 18, 1918, at a hearing before the Naval Affairs Committee, the matter of appropriating for a naval proving ground and for increasing facilities for the proof and tests of ordnance material, including necessary buildings, construction, equipment, railroad facilities, land, and damages and losses to persons, firms, and corporations resulting from the procurement of land for this purpose $1,000,000.

Rear Admiral Earle stated that $1,000,000 would be enough to buy the land and make all the improvements necessary for a proving ground at the place which afterwards became Dahlgren, Va. He stated that they wanted to purchase 1,000 acres of land and that the estimated cost of the land would be about $100,000, perhaps $130,000.

In the hearing Mr. Talbott asked:

Have you ascertained about what it will cost to purchase the land and install the plant?

To which Admiral Earle replied:

Yes, sir; $1,000,000 covers it.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the admiral leave that estimated statement, and will you leave the map so that we can look at it?

Admiral EARLE. Yes, sir. (See statement appended marked "Exhibit A.")

In estimating the expenditures necessary at Dahlgren, which would come out of the $1,000,000 appropriation, Admiral Earle gave the following figures (Exhibit A, p. 100, Hearings 1918):

For railroad	$175,000
Dock and the bridge at Mathias Point	100,000
Land (1,000 acres)	100,000
Magazines:
1 S. P	5,000
1 B. P	5,000
Shell house	5,000
Gun pits	20,000
Power house	50,000
Employees' barracks	24,000
Purchase or erection of quarters	50,000
Bombproof	30,000
Lookout towers	15,000
Screen poles	5,000
Workshop	10,000
Small boat anchorage and docks	4,500
Office, chronograph room, and instruments	15,000
Steam locomotive or crane transfer	15,000
Water system	5,000
Telephone system	1,000
Ranging stations, land, and shelters	10,000
Miscellaneous	25,500
Total	1,000,000

In July, 1921, I requested a complete statement of expenditures in connection with the lower station proving grounds at Dahlgren, Va.

The following was submitted:

SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
Tuesday, August 2, 1921.

The committee this day met, Hon. A. E. B. STEPHENS presiding.

Mr. STEPHENS submitted for incorporation in the record the following letters and statements:

EXPENDITURES.

NAVAL PROVING GROUND,
Indianhead, Md., July 26, 1921.

From: Supply officer.
To: Inspector of Ordnance in Charge.
Subject: Expenditures at Dahlgren, Va.

1. In compliance with the request of the Hon. A. E. B. STEPHENS, of the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives, there is submitted herewith a complete statement of expenditures in connection with the establishment of the lower station proving grounds at Dahlgren, Va. In this connection, and in response to Mr. STEPHENS's inquiry, there has been no material used in the construction work at Dahlgren which has been previously charged to Indianhead and then used at Dahlgren without charge. The only buildings moved from Indianhead have been those which were taken from the abandoned "white" camp on the Neck and which were torn down and used in the construction of one set of barracks, one 3-family house, five single-family cottages at the colored settlement, and one set of barracks for white employees at a cost as noted in the appended summary.

2. The following figures show actual expenditures for all projects up to July 1, 1921. Some figures were given Mr. STEPHENS during the progress of the inspection, but it will probably be found that the figures beneath are in excess of those figures, in view of the fact that the expenditures for June have now been entered and included:

Temporary buildings (this figure includes all buildings originally erected to house the labor personnel and administration offices, such as two large 2-story barracks for white laborers, one 2-story mess hall and barracks, one colored barracks, storehouse, carpenter shop, dispensary, recreation hall, and various smaller structures for temporary use)	$79,048.48
Roads (includes 4 miles of completed and surfaced roads and 1.1 miles graded but not surfaced)	60,938.09
Railroads (includes 4.7 miles)	208,777.54
Sewer system (2.8 miles ranging from 6-inch to 12-inch)	56,057.86
Fresh-water system (3.2 miles)	71,644.77
Operation of suction dredge for obtaining sand and gravel	16,758.52
Drainage system (surface drainage of swamp tracts)	5,248.99
Lighting and power circuits (1.5 miles and 1,600 feet of conduit)	25,212.98
Bulkheads for retaining mud in filling marshes	2,779.40
Wharf (15,650 square feet timber pile wharf, 8-foot bents)	46,407.56
Artesian well (includes erection of old tank from Winthrop)	7,053.66
Dredging (does not include dredging done by Army)	9,058.51
Survey work, Mathias Point	2,732.16
Installing chronograph system	37,798.36
Installing dynamos and boilers	14,810.63
Lighting circuits	$330.45
Telephone line	756.97
Temporary fuse butts and battery	2,261.12
Radio station	2,394.88
Garage at Morgantown	369.16
Administration building	53,980.71
Float and pile driver	615.76
Guard house at wharf	889.41
Telephone line to Cobb Point and Blackistone Island	2,548.55
Commandant's quarters	46,694.52
Three aid type houses (quarters for assistant inspector, proof officer, and experimental officer)	83,323.30
Two Arcadia type houses	30,144.82
Two type A bungalows	33,230.20
Gun emplacements (all emplacements at main battery, including major and minor caliber batteries, and also emplacements at the plate battery)	146,619.33
Seaplane hangar	32,602.95
Proof officer's office and physical laboratory	46,690.46
Bombproof and powder-heating house at main battery	61,720.14
Magazines and shell house	16,555.62
Bombproof at plate battery	9,226.42
Range, observation, and screen towers	7,767.05
Storehouse (permanent)	40,728.49
Oil and tank storehouse	9,188.37
Storage for gasoline	3,116.73
Land plane hangar	5,301.92
Machine shop (incomplete)	39,845.98
Power house (incomplete)	71,406.72
Schoolhouse	20,015.08
Mess hall and gallery	26,096.17
Recreation hall	10,619.66
Eight 4-room cottages	42,337.69
46 cottages, erection (obtained from Housing Corporation)	67,378.47
Gambo Creek trestle (includes contract driving piles, etc., $15,807)	50,154.14
Balloon-filling house	418.68
Warehouse on wharf	1,079.15
Range tower for calibration range	3,794.12
Enlarging dock at Blackistone Island	231.64
Garage	1,275.91
Stable	3,485.08
2 civilian dormitories	50,358.69
1 civilian dormitory (removed from Indianhead)	3,081.24
1 bachelor officers' quarters (formerly a temporary building moved and addition put on)	3,500.00
Colored quarters removed from Indianhead (as noted in paragraph 1)	9,500.00
New water tower (contract)	10,680.00
Girders, etc., Washington Navy Yard (this item includes all the specially constructed girders for large caliber guns and the gun circles for minor caliber battery with all heavy bolts necessary for holding down in concrete)	273,094.12
Land (1,377 acres at Dahlgren; includes shell deposit, $26,015)	154,836.70
Land, Blackistone Island, 69.394 acres	21,060.00
Total	2,145,607.08

In June, 1921, I submitted a number of questions to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, Mr. BUTLER. He forwarded them to the Navy Department for reply. The following information was furnished as a result of the inquiry:

JUNE 9, 1921.

Hon. THOS. S. BUTLER,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BUTLER: Supplementing my letter of May 27, and replying more fully to your letter of May 26, 1921, the following information is furnished with regard to expenditures at the naval proving ground, Dahlgren, Va., reference being made to the several numbered paragraphs of your letter:

Question 1. What amount of money has been expended since July 1, 1918, for buildings, officers' quarters, and improvements of all kinds at the proving grounds, Dahlgren, Va.?

Answer. $2,210,205.11.

Question 2. Amount yet to be expended for same purposes under outstanding contracts?

Answer. Approximately $250,000 for one gantry crane for handling heavy guns.

Question 3. Amount of all authorizations for expenditures not covered by contracts and not yet expended?

Answer. $274,100.

Question 4. Statements showing the estimated cost or contract price of the commandant's quarters; and the total amount spent and to be spent for the improvement of existing buildings for use as such quarters, including therein the cost of all material and the cost of all labor, and from what appropriation taken; and also the cost of furniture for such quarters.

Answer. The total estimated cost of the commandant's (inspector's) quarters is $52,000, of which $40,262 has been expended up to May 1, 1921, the entire cost of the commandant's quarters being borne by the appropriation "Increasing facilities for the proof and test of ordnance materials." The cost of furniture for these quarters was $8,406.95, purchased under the appropriation "Ordnance and ordnance stores." The commandant's quarters have been built entirely without the use of materials from any other buildings.

Question 5. Statement showing the cost of all other officers' quarters, whether for building, moving, or remodeling, including the cost of all material and labor used for such purposes and the appropriation from which defrayed, and also the cost of furnishing and equipping such quarters.

Answer. Eight sets of officers' quarters, including the rehabilitation of the Arnold farmhouse, have cost $140,191, with an estimate of about $10,000 to complete. Eight additional sets of junior officers' quarters were built at an expenditure of $42,327. All of the above expenditures have been made from the appropriation "Increasing facilities for proof and test of ordnance materials." The furniture for the above quarters cost $20,505, out of appropriation "Ordnance and ordnance stores."

Question 6. Statement showing the several funds from which expenditures for all of the above purposes has been or will be taken.
Answer. Expenditures since July 1, 1918.

Appropriation:
Engineering, 1921 (radio station)	$2,386.55
Increase, Navy, armor and armament	51,965.05
Increasing facilities for proof and test of ordnance materials	601,794.79
Ordnance and ordnance stores	1,554,058.72
Total	2,210,205.11

Authorizations not covered by contracts and not yet expended.

Appropriation:
Increase in facilities for proof and test of ordnance materials	$58,300
Increase of the Navy, armor and armament	154,100
Ordnance and ordnance stores	61,700
Total	274,100

All expenditures incurred and authorizations for expenditure under the appropriation, "Increase of the Navy, armor and armament," pertain exclusively to the test of new ordnance material.

Question 7. If any portion of the above-named expenditures is charged to the Indianhead account, give detailed statement showing amount of same.

Answer. The above expenditures and authorizations refer to Dahlgren, Va., exclusively.

Sincerely yours, EDWIN DENBY.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this matter has been considered for years and years by the Naval Committee, and I differ materially and substantially with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS]. This matter was recommended and investigated by the committee for a number of years before it was established. That at Indianhead had grown up sort of like Topsy. It was first a powder factory, and they had connected with it the testing of guns, and in the development of guns, passing from 8, 10, and 12-inch guns up to 14 and 16, it became very necessary to have longer ranges. The ranging and the testing of the guns at Indianhead became a very great menace and danger to navigation, and Dahlgren was authorized for that purpose, where we have a range of more than 50,000 yards. At Indianhead our range is limited somewhere from 8,000 to 12,000 yards.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Was that investigation made before the establishment of the Aberdeen proving ground, and does not the Aberdeen proving ground fill all the purposes for testing a long range also?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it does not.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why not?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because that matter has been gone into by a board of Army and naval officers. Aberdeen is an Army testing plant, and that matter was considered very fully and very carefully, and it was found impracticable to operate it for both activities, both the Army and the Navy. And we have the other one there. The Secretary of the Navy was before the committee and went into the matter very fully, and the point-blank question was asked him as to which was the more important in the Navy, Dahlgren or Indianhead, and he said:

> Gentlemen, we need both. The activities are different, but if one or the other is to be closed, I prefer that Dahlgren be kept open, because it is absolutely necessary for the Navy to have the long range of the guns.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. In a moment.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS] stated the guns could be ranged from battleships. That is in direct conflict with the statements of the officers. You have got to have a permanent base. You have got to have fixed ranges, and you have got to have all of the paraphernalia that is attached to the land base in order to get the full benefit and the accuracy and the test of your guns. And I want to say that from years and years of investigation, and from a thorough investigation by the Naval Committee, it is to-day one of the most important activities that we have for the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I, for one gentleman in the House, am not particularly concerned about what some board of Army officers or Navy officers have said or about what the Secretary of the Navy has said.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], I would like to have the gentleman himself say to this House why those two ranges are necessary.

Mr. PADGETT. I can only be governed by the opinions of men who have to do the work, and they say that the location and the grounds and the conditions at Aberdeen are not adequate and sufficient for the operation and the testing of the guns of the Navy and the guns of the Army. They are entirely different.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I say to you, gentlemen, that it is very, very important that they be maintained.

May I have five minutes more?

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a straight question.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not a fact that these great guns have been tested at Aberdeen?

Mr. PADGETT. Not that I know of for the Navy.

Mr. MUDD rose.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see how much time is needed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Tennessee has five minutes more, has he not?

Mr. PADGETT. Let these other gentlemen have an opportunity to speak. I do not want to take up the time. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and the chairman of the committee [Mr. KELLEY] and others want to speak.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and all amendments to the paragraph close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] a question.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has been extended, has it not?

The CHAIRMAN. I understood it was requested.

Mr. PADGETT. Was my five minutes included in the 20 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. It was not.

Mr. PADGETT. Do I have five minutes in addition to that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No, Mr. Chairman; the gentlemen I had in mind were the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. REED], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, by unanimous consent I ask that the gentleman from Tennessee may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may have five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. My colleague is evidently well informed on these questions. Can he tell me or the committee when these costly residences were built?

Mr. PADGETT. During the war. They were completed since the war. They were started during the war at peak prices, and they cost too much money. But that is water that has run under the bridge.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. They were built under cost-plus contracts, were they?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know as to that, but they were built under war conditions and at the peak of high prices.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Does each of these costly residences furnish a home for a single officer?

Mr. PADGETT. No. I am under the impression they have a number of officers in some of them.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. For a $30,000 building?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no. How many officers live in the commandant's house, a $65,000 house?

Mr. PADGETT. There are no hotel accommodations for anybody there, and the commandant is forced by the necessity of things to entertain the officers that come there—the Secretary of the Navy and other officers that come there—and his house has to be a little larger on that account. But as I said, these houses, built as they were under the conditions that then prevailed, cost more than they should have cost. But that is water that has run under the bridge. But I want to emphasize the fact that the activities done there, the work done there, is the most important and the most essential work for the efficiency of the guns, because what are the ships worth if your guns do not shoot straight and hit? And right there has been the great demonstration of the efficiency of the gunfire of the Navy. Do not let us make a mistake and do away with that very important and essential station.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman visited this proving ground and made a personal inspection of those activities there?

Mr. PADGETT. I have.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. From my understanding of the hearings, Admiral Earle and his associates, who selected that ground, considered it the most available on the coast?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. That was selected by a board of officers, and not only Admiral Earle but the admiral in charge before him—the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance before Admiral Earle—assisted in the selection. We have gone into it time and time again, and Congress authorized by special bill the acquisition of that site and the purchase of land because it was represented to us, after careful investigation, as the most available; and right down on the water front it gives us a range of more than 52,000 yards that we can not get anywhere else.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In the recent hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs have not the Secretary of the Navy and also Admiral McVeagh, the head of the Ordnance Department, expressed themselves as considering the maintenance of this proving ground absolutely essential?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, tremendously so.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if, in his investigation of the commandant's house, of which we have heard so much, he found that the commandant's house is not exactly like the homes of commandants at other places, and that the total cost was $52,000, including furniture? That was the information we secured after a most lengthy investigation last year.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I understood, that it cost $52,000, including the furniture. Whether it was exactly like the houses at other places I do not know, because I have not seen the other places.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I do not unnecessarily intend to take up the time of the House, but believing that I am rather fairly informed concerning the details of this very important matter before us, I desire to appeal to you to support the pending amendment so that the activities at Dahlgren shall cease and the station be abandoned entirely by the Government. My colleague, Mr. STEVENS, who introduced the amendment, has very ably presented to you the salient facts in relation to this proving ground. I served upon the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which I am a member, that investigated the expenditures at this so-called lower station. The committee made a most thorough and complete investigation, and I say to you gentlemen of the House that inasmuch as this was, to my mind, purely a war-time, emergency, auxiliary proving ground, as it was then represented so to be to the members of the Naval Committee, we should pass this amendment, and by our action make sure that no part of this appropriation or any other appropriation shall be available for expenditures at Dahlgren, Va., except as much as may be necessary in maintaining the establishment on a closed-down basis only.

When the naval officers appeared before us in 1918 Admiral Earle, who was then Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, said that it had been the desire of the Navy Department for several years to have a proving ground for the testing of long-range guns, and that Dahlgren had been observed by naval experts as the most desirable site in the country, because the course of the river from that point for about 20 miles or more to Blackistone Island is a straight course of open water, over which the guns could be fired and the projectiles recovered. He said to the committee specifically and definitely that this amount of $1,000,000 was sufficient to purchase 1,377 acres of land at Dahlgren and for the completion of the station. He did not state to the committee that it was the purpose of the Navy Department to build a station separate from Indianhead, thereby to maintain two distinct activities. He did not say to us that it was the intention of the Navy Department to build a house there for a commandant at a cost of $60,000, three aid-type houses at $83,323.30, and quarters for assistant inspector, proof inspector, experimental officer, and many other expensive dwellings for officers; but later on, and without the knowledge of the Naval Committee, the Bureau of Ordnance, upon the representation that it needed more money for the completion of the Dahlgren station and the testing of guns, obtained $980,000 from the Appropriations Committee. It was the distinct understanding of the Naval Committee that only the guns of larger caliber should be tested at Dahlgren, and that guns of 8-inch and lower caliber would continue to be tested at Indianhead, as is evidenced by the fact that Admiral Earle, for the safety of such testing, requested and obtained $80,000 for the purchase of additional land of 1,000 acres or more known as Cornwallis Neck. It was not contemplated then by Admiral Earle and his associates to dismantle Indianhead; it was never understood by the Naval Committee that such a course should be pursued; and it was never intimated to the committee that the faithful employees of Indianhead should be forced to leave their homes and families to live in this isolated section, upon which so much money had been recklessly and extravagantly wasted in the building of outrageously expensive houses for officers, with unsatisfactory quarters for the men, to whom I have referred, some of whom have not yet completed payments upon their homes at Indianhead.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if you leisurely take a walk on the Virginia side of the river, you can not help but run into a naval station here and there. I realize that Members of the House who have navy yards located in the districts are called "big Navy men," and their arguments are given not much consideration by the membership of this House who are opposed to a big Navy. I expect one of you gentlemen to ask me if Indianhead is in my district, and if, for that reason, I am not selfishly interested in this proposition; but I say to you that Indianhead is no longer in my district, because, during the war, you took it and put it over in Virginia. Of course, I am selfishly interested, and I am glad that my friend and colleague from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS], who comes from a State where there are no naval stations, who knows the justice of my plea to you, has offered this amendment, which I am asking you to adopt in the interest of economy; that you give back to the State of Maryland what you took away from Indianhead.

There is no earthly use for the continuation of this expensive and useless proving ground. It is a fine resting place for officers, and a beautiful spot, but it does not justify the expenditure of more millions as a station, distinct and separate from Indianhead, where guns have been successfully tested for 30 years. Dahlgren not only interferes with navigation very seriously in the waters of southern Maryland, on the Potomac, but it interferes with the fishing industry, depriving the thrifty oystermen of my district from dredging in the oyster beds during the proper season.

It is contended that big guns can not be tested at a range over 18,000 yards at Indianhead, and that it is vitally necessary that they should be tested at higher elevations. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have been reliably informed that they have practically made no tests of over 18,000 yards at this place. It can not be contended that the smaller guns can not be as satisfactorily tested at Indianhead as at Dahlgren. Great elevations for guns of this caliber are not necessary. For high-elevation testing a big gun could be tested at Aberdeen, if necessary, though, for all necessary purposes, they could be tested once or twice a year at Dahlgren without great expense and without the necessity of continuing the construction or the maintaining of this place as a naval station. I am asking you, however, to close down this station entirely, because, in the 10-year holiday ahead of us for peace-time efficiency, Indianhead serves all purposes.

It is not surprising to me that the membership of this House is not aware of the existence of this station. When we were called upon during the war to appropriate funds for war purposes, we unhesitatingly approved of those of such recommendations at the request of the Military Establishment of the Government, because we felt it our duty to patriotically support the President of the United States and the Government in every respect to the end that we might win that war. Hundreds of millions of dollars were wasted throughout the country that Members of Congress do not know about, and it is time that when such information is brought to you of useless activities created for war purposes, it is the duty of Congress, for the sake of economy, to sell, or otherwise dispose of, great tracts of land that were purchased and are now of little or no value whatever to the Naval Establishment.

The work at Dahlgren is unquestionably a duplication of the work that has been done so successfully at Indianhead for 30 years. We had before us a committee of civilian employees who have been employed at this station for many years, including the powder expert, his assistant, and the quartermen, who have charge of the powder-making function of the proving ground at Indianhead. It is unnecessary for me to remind you that these gentlemen made a splendid impression upon the committee, and it can be well understood by you and me that, on account of their long experience in the work of making powder and the expert testing of guns, they are as equally qualified as are the experts of the Navy Department to furnish information to the Committee on Naval Affairs that the naval proving ground at Indianhead, which is a complete establishment, upon which millions of dollars have been spent for 30 years, is thoroughly equipped for the most satisfactory testing of all guns to be used by the United States Navy, and for the information of the House I submit to you a petition, signed by hundreds of employees at Indianhead, including the civilian experts, in support of my contention that there is no need for a separate institution at Dahlgren.

The petition referred to is as follows:

To the honorable Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the honorable Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives to initiate means necessary to prevent the moving of the United States Naval Proving Ground from Indianhead, Md., to Dahlgren, Va.

We ask that you give the following facts your careful consideration, and trust that same will be deemed of sufficient moment and good reasoning to convince you of the rightful cause and justness of our claims:

The only real, vital need for an additional naval proving ground is that range work may be done at longer ranges than are now available at Indianhead. However, in view of the fact that there is danger to the inhabitants from flying fragments consequent to plate, shell, and fuse work, it is granted that it would be better to remove such work to a more remote location. However, during the past 30 years the proving of all manner of guns, plates, shell, and powders at Indianhead has not caused a single fatality, except among employees actually on duty in the proving ground area, and but one instance is recalled of damage to private personal property, the damage in question being negligible.

But with the above exceptions—that is, the comparatively small volume of the work that is admitted to be of a dangerous nature—we petition you as we set forth herewith that there is no logical reason why millions of dollars should be spent for equipment at Dahlgren that is now provided at Indianhead, and which would be obviously a total loss in the event of transfer of all proof work to Dahlgren, and we request that retention of such activities of the Indianhead Proving Ground at Indianhead as can best be performed there; that is, proof of all medium and minor caliber guns, powder, and ammunition; proof of star shell; proof of tracers; proof of such major caliber guns and powder as do not require high-angle fire; experimental work in ordnance which can not be carried on with larger caliber routine tests.

It is believed that it has been demonstrated that the location and general facilities at Indianhead for this class of work are unsurpassed. Ranging of shell in this comparatively narrow river (the Potomac) allows splashes to be properly observed as they can not be at Dahlgren. Stump Neck, as has been repeatedly shown, allows recovery of fired shell of all calibers, even the largest. The only place at Dahlgren where shell can be landed for recovery is at Blackistone Island, 30,000 yards away. This requires high velocity and elevation, causing the shell to bury itself to an extraordinary extent, thereby entailing great cost for recovery. With minor caliber shell it is out of the question to recover shell after firing. With medium caliber star shell work recovery of shell or parachute is possible at Indianhead range and is not possible at Dahlgren.

The battery facilities and housing at Indianhead are already provided. At Dahlgren facilities other than for long-range work, plate shell, and fuse tests, together with housing for other employees, are yet to be provided, at a tremendous cost, which would be unnecessary with the retention of Indianhead Proving Ground for work within its capacity.

The work handled at Indianhead during the war is all the evidence necessary as to capacity and facilities, and the fact that Indianhead is now connected by rail with every source of supply of naval ordnance. It is without question the logical proving ground, if for no other reason than that of cost. In the event of a national emergency the proof work could be conducted with a dispatch that would be physically impossible at Dahlgren, and in the event of a cold winter and heavy freeze transportation to the Dahlgren station would virtually cease.

For many years the proving ground at Indianhead was seriously handicapped by the lack of transportation facilities and housing accommodations for its employees. During the late war this was entirely overcome by the construction of a steam railroad at a cost of about $1,000,000, the erection of a new concrete dock and slip and connecting railroad spur at a cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, and the erection of over 100 houses for employees at a cost of $1,000,000.

To make Dahlgren serviceable and its operation practicable in case of war the same conditions as existed at Indianhead prior to the late war, only on a greatly exaggerated scale, would have to be surmounted, and owing to its greater distance from ordnance material sources and difficulty of approach, the cost would be very much greater.

Owing to lack of appropriation of funds for employees' quarters at Dahlgren, Va., houses from the Indianhead Proving Ground are now about to be moved to Dahlgren, Va.

(Copy of a petition signed by 456 persons.)

(Presented to the Hon. SYDNEY E. MUDD, M. C., and the Hon. O. E. WELLER, United States Senate, by the following committee: C. N. Dement, N. T. Dutton, F. D. Cary, R. J. Carpenter, W. W. Farnum, R. W. Bellman, R. Dement, W. R. Halla, J. M. Dement.)

C. N. DEMENT, Chairman.

When our committee visited Dahlgren on the U. S. S. Sylph, which is a small yacht owned by the Navy, we were astonished upon our arrival to learn that the channel in which we anchored was 3 miles distant from the shore. We ascertained upon our investigation that big guns can be transported from the 3-mile point to the Dahlgren shore only upon barges towed by a small tug. The docking facilities are very unsatisfactory, all of which means, Mr. Chairman, that if this place is to continue and Congress sanctions its growth as a future big Navy station Congress will be called upon to appropriate several million dollars for the dredging of a channel, which undoubtedly is needed, and for docking accommodations and for other facilities which we now possess at Indianhead out of the funds of the United States Treasury, to maintain and to construct what we already have upon the Maryland side, where we were called upon and did build a railroad, which cost us nearly a million dollars, where we have 2,000 acres of land, including Cornwallis Neck and Stump Neck, in order that guns could be tested at Indianhead before Dahlgren was conceived of or mentioned to the Naval Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, at Indianhead we have a complete naval station, which has been in the process of construction for 30 years, beginning as a modest Government reservation, purchased for the single purpose of testing all guns for the United States Navy. I do not approve of expending further funds for the proving of the guns of our Navy elsewhere. It is a well-known fact that in actual engagements if our guns are to be fired at a range of 30 or 40 miles that range in battle must be obtained during the encounter by necessary military observations in the air. I ask you, therefore, why should we unnecessarily test the guns at very high elevations on land at a prohibitive cost? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I know that my time has expired. I make no apologies for the fact that I am a "big Navy man," and I am proud of the fact that I live in a naval district, where are located the Naval Academy at Annapolis and the naval proving ground at Indianhead. I believe that the Limitation of Arms Conference put us in a better position than we were before the conference, because under the terms of the treaty our Navy can be equal in strength to the navy of Great Britain and greater than Japan. I believe in keeping pace with these other nations in the maintenance of the Navy that is second to none in the universe. I believe, however, that wherever we should find opportunity to economize we should do so. Certainly this is an instance where Congress can save money, which would otherwise be entirely wasted upon the development of a war-time project which has now lost its usefulness. Therefore I sincerely hope and I appeal to my colleagues to adopt the amendment before us. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUDD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What is the practical difficulty of using the Aberdeen testing ground for both the Army and the Navy?

Mr. BUTLER. They have done it.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. BUTLER, our chairman, states that they have done it. Personally I think these activities of the Army and Navy should be separate.

Mr. TILSON. That is, providing proper cooperation can be brought about between the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. MUDD. Admiral McVay has testified before the Naval Committee that these big guns could be tested at Aberdeen, if necessary, for long-range purposes.

Mr. TILSON. Surely there are not enough guns to keep both places busy.

Mr. MUDD. No. And both Admiral McVay and Admiral Earle admit that all guns can be satisfactorily—except for high elevation—tested at Indianhead, particularly smaller guns. They have two batteries at Dahlgren, and Indianhead with one battery can do it at half the cost that they can at Dahlgren. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, neither of these proving grounds is in my district, but I do happen to know something about both Indianhead and Aberdeen, especially Aberdeen, which is on the direct line between Washington, Philadelphia, and New York. There are some thousands of acres of land at Aberdeen, and there is not a proving ground in this world as well equipped as that one, with two trunk-line railroads, with miles of railroad trackage throughout the grounds, and with a water front and every conceivable advantage as a proving ground. There is no reason in the world why guns of any caliber can not be tested at that place. When the proving ground was first suggested there was a strong sentiment that it be established at Kent Island, on the other side of the bay, in Maryland, but there was strong opposition to that because it interfered with navigation. Therefore the Army officials went to Aberdeen, and there they procured this vast acreage of land, a large part of which is marsh land and not susceptible of tillage.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have only five minutes. If the gentleman will get me more time, I will be glad to yield for any question. So there is not a particle of use in the world to go down there 60 miles from Washington and spend $1,500,000 for the completion of the proving ground at Dahlgren. It has not even been completed yet, and there is no use of spending over a million dollars or somewhere around a million and a half of dollars to complete it. Indianhead has been in existence as a proving ground for some 30 years. It has been constructed and completed gradually by the Government. It has met every requirement of the tests, and will continue to do so. It is only 26 miles from Washington, connected by rail and water, whereas Dahlgren is connected only by some 60 miles of water, and often closed by ice in winter. I do not know whether gentlemen here observed it, but only the other day the press carried a dispatch stating that a large barge had upset in the storm and dumped two of the large guns in the water. Now, you would not have such a condition as that at Aberdeen nor Indianhead, because you have direct rail connection by the Baltimore & Ohio and by the Pennsylvania to Aberdeen and by the Pennsylvania to Indianhead, and you have all the water front you need at both places. I can not conceive why the Navy and the Army can not combine to test their guns at Aberdeen when they are too large to test at Indianhead. There is no necessity for other places.

But more than that: If we are to have a treaty Navy, if one of the great purposes is economy, why should we continue to develop proving grounds and all those things as though the war still continued? I do not see why what we have at Indianhead and Aberdeen should not cover every possible necessity without the expenditure of further money.

Now I have a little time and I gladly yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman has answered the question I had in mind; that is, so far as he seems to have information. I can not understand how it happens that, having acquired the proving ground at Aberdeen, which is a very long-range proving ground, we should have started another proving ground. I can not understand why Aberdeen is not available for both services.

Mr. BUTLER. It is, and they have used it for both.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know, unless it was thought that we went into the war on such an immense scale that it was considered that the Army and Navy should be separated during the war; but now that we have peace and have entered into a treaty between the four great powers, I can see no further necessity for the separation and the consequent expense. Indianhead and Aberdeen meet every requirement, and they are completed and fully equipped.

Mr. MONDELL. The ranges are quite as great at Aberdeen as at Dahlgren.

Mr. LINTHICUM. There is any range at Aberdeen you want; you shoot over marsh lands and water that is not used. There is any range you want, without any danger to property.

Mr. MONDELL. And the railroads reaching into Aberdeen are good.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The best possible in the world. The great trunk lines of the Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania system both traverse it with miles of trackage and switches. In addition to this, you have miles of water front. It is accessible from every point in the country.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the appropriation as recommended by the committee should be retained. It would be a serious blow not to provide sufficient funds to maintain and operate the naval proving ground at Dahlgren. In this connection permit me to read from the hearings before the Appropriations Committee some questions asked by me of Admiral McVay, the present head of the Bureau of Ordnance, and his answers thereto. To my mind, it states the situation very fully:

Mr. OLIVER. Do you find Dahlgren is a better station for testing your guns than the one you abandoned?

Admiral McVAY. Indianhead has not been an efficient station for the last 20 years.

Mr. OLIVER. In other words, you are not prepared at Indianhead to test your large guns?

Admiral McVAY. It is not possible to range a modern gun at Indianhead without taking a risk which I will not take.

Mr. OLIVER. And you find that at Dahlgren you can test both the small and large guns?

Admiral McVAY. Yes, sir. At Indianhead you can not range a gun, under ordinary conditions, beyond 12,000 yards, although on an exceptional day you can range it to 14,000 yards; but at Dahlgren we have a line of fire of 30 miles. We found that none of our range tables were correct because they had been calculated from firing at 8 degrees elevation only, and beyond a small range of 14,000 or 15,000 yards the ranges were calculated and were not determined as a result of firing and, therefore, were not checked; they were all incorrect, and that is a matter of the greatest importance in opening ranges for battle as well as throughout a battle, and it has not been possible since long-range guns came into being to properly range them at Indianhead, nor can it be made possible to do it there.

To the same effect is the statement of the Secretary of the Navy before the House Naval Affairs Committee, where in reference to a resolution looking to the abandonment of Dahlgren he said:

If the resolution is intended to stop activities in Dahlgren, then I should again very vigorously oppose it. I can not see the crippling of the Navy without entering a protest; the committee will then do exactly as it chooses. If it becomes a question of going to Dahlgren and concentrating the activities there or at Indianhead, I should most assuredly advise that Dahlgren be the place, because of the superior range.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I notice that nothing is said there about Aberdeen. Why could not they test their guns there?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think anybody had Aberdeen in mind, except the gentleman from Maryland. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] did not. It may be that some day we will have the Army and the Navy cooperating together as to these activities. But up to this time for some reason, whether satisfactory or not, they have not occupied the same ordnance testing grounds. Some legislation by Congress will be necessary to require them to do so if the gentleman from Maryland deems it wise and feasible. So far as the pending amendment is concerned, it seeks to deny to the Navy further use of the property that is absolutely essential to testing its large guns.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to ask the gentleman if he would expect the Bureau of Ordnance to say anything else than to approve what the bureau has done?

Mr. OLIVER. I will say that my information is that Admiral Strauss, the predecessor of Admiral Earle, and a naval board and Admiral Earle strongly favored and recommended Dahlgren as the best place for the proving ground. If Admiral McVay and the Secretary of the Navy are correct in the statements they make, then civilians can understand the importance of this station. In other words, they found that at Indianhead they had been unable to test the large guns, and the attempted tests resulted in many errors as to ranges, and they were only able to correct those errors after the tests at Dahlgren, and surely there should be no objection to retaining it for this important naval purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were 57 ayes and 45 noes.

Mr. PADGETT. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. STEPHENS and Mr. PADGETT.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 106 ayes and 67 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed 200 graduates of the Naval Academy of the class of 1922 shall be commissioned as ensigns in the Navy, and the graduates to be commissioned shall be selected by the academic board of the Naval Academy after giving equal consideration to the scholastic standing and adaptability for naval service of each graduate: Provided, That each graduate of the Naval Academy of the class of 1922 who is not commissioned as an ensign in the Navy shall be paid mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile from the Naval Academy to his home and a sum equal to three months' pay of a midshipman, such payments to be made from the respective appropriations in this act providing for the transportation and pay of midshipmen.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think there is an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] to an item on page 33.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] made a point of order against the section——

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was reserved to the paragraph on page 33, lines 8 to 20.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the point of order?

Mr. RAKER. The point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, it is legislation that is in order, because it reduces the number of officers from 541 to 200.

Mr. RAKER. That is for the Chair to decide. In the first place, they are not officers.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, yes; they are officers; a midshipman in the Naval Academy is an officer.

Mr. RAKER. Not yet. In the second place, it is legislation as to mileage, it is legislation as to compensation, and it is not a reduction in expenditure.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It is a reduction in every way. It is a reduction in number from 541 to 200. If they were commissioned in the Navy they would receive the pay of an ensign instead of the pay this bill provides for, the pay of a midshipman. So it is not only a reduction in number but a reduction in pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California will state the proposition upon which he bases his point of order.

Mr. RAKER. First, it is legislation on an appropriation bill. Second, if it is intended to reduce the number of officers——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is why it is in order.

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment. If it is intended to reduce the number of officers, then it does not comply with the Holman rule, because subdivision 2 of Rule XXI provides that it must not only reduce the number of officers but must reduce their pay.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, it does do both, and the rule does not require that both should be done.

Mr. RAKER. That is what the rule says. Third, it is legislation with regard to mileage; fourth, it is new legislation with regard to payment of men who have been left out of the school without graduation; fifth, it disposes of these young men without authorizing them for graduation. On the first proposition I have looked for a decision, but I could not find one in regard to retrenchment. The rule provides:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States—

And so forth.

That is a conjunctive requirement which must be complied with. It does not apply here.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman read the entire paragraph?

Mr. RAKER. I am reading that one thing which relates to officers. Let me read it again. There are three provisions—the one I read and the two others—but I shall read them all:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

You find interpretations on the other provisions, but I do not believe the gentleman will be able to find that you can reduce officers except that in addition to that there must be a reduction in pay. That is what the language says, and undoubtedly that is what it means.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under the existing law is it not provided that all of these men in the graduating class at Annapolis shall be commissioned as ensigns?

Mr. RAKER. If they pass the required examination; yes.

Mr. MANN. If we limit the number to less than the total, is not that a reduction in the number of officers on the pay roll?

Mr. RAKER. But that is a future proposition. That does not cover this.

Mr. MANN. Oh, this is all for next year; it is a future proposition. It is for the next graduating class. This reduces the number of officers in the Navy, whether it is for this year or next year. That provision takes effect when the bill becomes a law.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I think the point I make on that is good.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that it does reduce the number?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know so much about that.

Mr. MANN. Why, the very reason the gentleman is opposed to it is because it does reduce the number. Does it not reduce the compensation to say that a man shall get only 3 months' compensation when without that provision he would get 12 months?

Mr. RAKER. Then it must be a reduction of expense.

Mr. MANN. The rule provides for a reduction in the number of officers or the compensation of officers. If this does not do that, then I can not read English.

Mr. RAKER. I imagine the gentleman can read English very well. On the other proposition, Mr. Chairman, it is a serious question whether or not it is a reduction, a saving to the Government. These men have cost the Government in the neighborhood of $350,000 up to the present time. They are all needed in the service, and for every one that we take out another will take his place. It is not a saving for the Government. It is depriving these men of the rights by new legislation that they are entitled to upon an appropriation bill, legislating them out of these rights, fixing compensation and mileage, and compensation for three months after they have retired. I submit the matter to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Michigan the number of men affected by this amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There are 541 in the senior class at Annapolis and this provides that 200 of them shall be commissioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. On page 33 of the bill, beginning at line 9, there is a provision that not to exceed 200 graduates of the Naval Academy of the class of 1922 shall be commissioned as ensigns in the Navy. If this paragraph as a whole were not carried in the appropriation bill there would be graduated from the academy for this year 541.

Mr. MADDEN. And, Mr. Chairman, they would be commissioned officers.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and they would be commissioned as ensigns in the Navy. According to the paragraph but 200 of these will now be commissioned, leaving 341 without commissions. Clearly the amendment is germane to the bill, and it is within the Holman rule. It makes a reduction of an amount easy to be determined of the amount of the appropriation carried in the bill. Therefore it is in order, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend by striking out all of lines 8——

The CHAIRMAN. But there is an amendment pending.

Mr. RAKER. This is to strike out the whole proviso on page 33.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, but a perfecting amendment is in order first.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has offered a preferential amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLINTIC: Page 33, strike out lines 8 and 9, including the word "Navy," in line 10, and insert in lieu thereof: "That in determining the number of members of the 1922 Naval Academy graduating class who shall be commissioned the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to bring about the retirement of 75 per cent of such officers in the Navy as are eligible for retirement. He shall cause to be commissioned out of 1922 Naval Academy graduating class 200 members, and an additional number equal to the number of officers retired under the provisions of this section."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the object of this amendment is to make it possible for all members of the 1922 graduating class at Annapolis to be commissioned.

Every young man who enters the Naval Academy is made to believe, either by his Congressman or the Government regulations, that if he will comply with the rules and regulations of the Naval Academy and make the necessary grades that after four years he will be graduated and commissioned as an ensign.

This being true the Government is morally obligated to extend to each graduate this consideration. From my own personal knowledge many parents have made sacrifices in order to allow their son to qualify for an appointment. When it is taken into consideration that the majority of these young men have labored diligently for years in order that they may finally receive this reward, I can not see how any Member would be willing to vote legislation which would cause the Government to break faith with those who are entitled to be graduated and commissioned.

The amendment I have offered provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be retired 75 per cent of those officers who have a service record of over 30 years. It will allow him to retain in the service 25 per cent of such officers as are needed in the Navy. It also provides that for every officer retired a graduate of the 1922 class shall be commissioned as an ensign and in my opinion if the amendment is adopted it will be possible to graduate the entire 1922 class. Everyone realizes that the number of officers in the Navy is based upon the number of enlisted personnel, and unless some such amendment of this kind is adopted there can be found no way of graduating and commissioning the members of this class.

The young men at Annapolis at the present time represent the best blood of the Nation. They are the ones that must be depended upon in the future to take care of this arm of our Government. They have had the opportunity of being trained along different lines from those who have a service record of many years in that they have had the advantage of all the new lessons of naval warfare that have been discovered as a result of the World War. Their minds are in a receptive mood. They are susceptible to the right kind of training, and I do not believe that anyone could say that it would be the best policy of the Government to deny them the opportunity of being commissioned and at the same time retain hundreds of officers who should be retired.

Now, I respectfully call the attention of the committee to what I consider the highest authority at the present time on this subject. On Wednesday, March 1, 1922, the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Denby, came before the committee of which I am a member, and he testified as follows, found on page 501:

Mr. McCLINTIC. I take it that it is your opinion it would be better to retire those at the top who have served 30 years—it would be better for the Navy to let these old men retire and commission this class of 541 rather than commission the class and let these men remain in the service?

Secretary DENBY. Yes, sir; that is true.

I also wish to call attention to the testimony given by Admiral Coontz on Wednesday, February 22, found on page 403:

Mr. McCLINTIC. I just want to know if you can give me the approximate number of officers in the Navy at this time who have a continuous service record and have reached the age that entitles them to be retired?

Admiral COONTZ. I can come pretty close to it. I should say, including the warrant officers, 250 officers have been in the service over 30 years and are entitled to retirement under the 30-year law, if the President would allow it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The reason I asked that question is that I am in accord with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy relative to commissioning these graduates, but it was my thought, inasmuch as they had been taught all the latest ideas relative to naval warfare, and they represent the best blood of the Nation, it would be far better to retain them for service in the Navy, to take active charge of the Navy and be trained, and retire these men who are entitled to be retired, or will be retired.

Admiral COONTZ. Yes, sir; you are right.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will yield.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Did the Navy Department furnish the gentleman with figures to show how many people there are in the Navy in line who would be eligible for retirement who ordinarily do not retire?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes, sir; I would be very glad to give that information. It will be found on page 502 of the hearings, which were held March 1, 1922. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS] asked:

Mr. STEPHENS. If I may ask, probably Admiral Washington could give the number; how many officers would it be possible for the Navy to retire?

Admiral WASHINGTON. Who are eligible in every way?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir; all those eligible or nearly so; about how many officers?

Admiral WASHINGTON. I think there are about 90 warrant officers. There would be exceeding 500.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I would like to have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Five hundred officers in the Navy eligible to be retired at the present time?

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is the testimony.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That undoubtedly means if they elect to retire, those who have served a certain length of time but would not be eligible for retirement as far as the Government was concerned—that is, compulsory retirement.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If I understand the present law, after an officer has served 30 years, he can make application for retirement.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman's proposition is to put upon the retired list 75 per cent of all those who have served 30 years in the Navy?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And the estimate of the probable number is about 500?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does not the gentleman think we would have so much of a list here that it would break the personnel of the Navy——

Mr. McCLINTIC. No; if my amendment is adopted, it will make it possible for every member of the class to be commissioned, and inasmuch as there are a number of officers who are at the present time eligible for retirement capable of performing excellent service in the Navy, it would seem that by retaining one out of every four that those officers could be relieved from their duty without destroying the efficiency of any department.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has the gentleman found out how this would affect the aggregate expense? For instance, if these officers are retired, what salary are they retired on, what proportion of the original salary?

Mr. McCLINTIC. They are retired on three-fourths pay.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If they are retired on three-fourths pay——

Mr. BUTLER. Under the law which we passed——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That would be a reduction in the grade if your plan was adopted, then?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Would this retirement affect a lot of good officers of higher grades that ought to be kept in the service?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not figure that it would, because one out of every four would be retained, according to my amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Who is to do that?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Would not this happen if the amendment is adopted, namely, that those retired would be of the higher rank; that they would retire on three-quarters pay, which would necessitate the reduction of officers to these higher ranks, and would not you have a double expense in that way, by the retired pay and the pay of these others?

Mr. McCLINTIC. It would provide a sufficient number of vacancies in the officer personnel, so that these graduates could be eligible to be commissioned. Under the present law the number of officers in the Navy is based upon the enlisted personnel, and unless there is some such amendment as this adopted it would not be possible to have a sufficient number of vacancies in order to allow all the members of the 1922 class to be graduated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Would you not be largely adding to the expense of the Government on account of the pay paid to these retired officers? You would put over 300 in retirement.

Mr. McCLINTIC. At the present time they are drawing 100 per cent pay. It would simply mean the pay of the officers would be reduced 25 per cent, and these young men, who represent the very best blood of the Nation, would be given the opportunity to be commissioned as ensigns.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, it would mean the Government would have upon its back the expense of providing for three-quarters of the pay of all these officers who are retired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The law provides that that shall be done at the present time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Your amendment makes it compulsory.

Mr. McCLINTIC. My amendment provides a way so that every one of these 1922 graduates can be commissioned, and I am of the opinion that this kind of an amendment should be adopted or something should be done in order not to break faith with those who have met the requirements and regulations of the Navy Department.

Mr. ROSE. I want to say that I am in entire sympathy with the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma, and I would like to add to the statement he has made to the House that a great many of the boys are fearful they will not be given the commissions that they expected upon the completion of their course at the academy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask for two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROSE. I have letters from fathers of boys who are about to enter the academy, and they lodge serious objections to the possibility that their sons may successfully complete the required course and in the end be denied the commission they so earnestly sought. The fair thing to do is to continue the present plan until the present body of students has been graduated, after which time all who enter will know that a commission is an uncertain quantity.

Mr. McCLINTIC. In view of the testimony which I have read, which was given before the committee by Admiral Coontz and the Secretary of the Navy, and in view of the fact that one officer out of every four can be retained, it does seem to me that this House should keep faith with the members of the 1922 class and be willing to adopt some such amendment which will make it possible for those young men to be commissioned as ensigns.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is it true that there is a law that an officer about to be retired is advanced a grade?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No, sir; it is not. These officers at the present time are drawing full pay. If they are retired, they will draw 75 per cent.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will they be advanced just before that?

Mr. McCLINTIC. They will not be advanced. And that being true, it will provide a sufficient number of vacancies to allow the members of this class to be commissioned as ensigns.

Mr. McSWAIN. I want to ask my friend, if his argument of a moral obligation on the part of the Government would apply to the class of 1922, why would it not apply in a like manner to those who would constitute the class of 1923 or 1924? We would have to retire officers of the Government in order to have these boys get a commission.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I dare say there is not a Member of Congress that ever appointed a boy to the Naval Academy but what has said to the young man and to his parents that he would have a commission when he graduated.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for five minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to ask my friend [Mr. BUTLER], the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, a question. What officers did the committee have in mind should be retired in the next two years in the bill reported to the House?

Mr. BUTLER. Beginning with the rear admirals and going on down to the ensigns.

Mr. OLIVER. Did you have especially in mind those who after the war were taken into the commissioned personnel of the service without examination?

Mr. BUTLER. Without the others.

Mr. OLIVER. I merely want to make this statement to the House. The Appropriations Committee, as I understand, in the matter now before the House and in reference to other matters that may follow, was simply carrying out what they understood to be the recommendation of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. BUTLER. This is our bill here.

Mr. OLIVER. The Appropriations Committee desired not to express an opinion, one way or the other, about the matter, but simply desired to bring these matters to the attention of the House in order that you might take such action as the House thought best. This condition obtains in the Navy now, namely, that there were commissioned in the Navy after the war about 700 or 900 officers without examination. They had a long enlisted service, and had served most efficiently in the enlisted and warrant grades.

Many of these men will never be selected for promotion to the higher ranks in the Navy where promotion is by selection. I had understood that the Naval Affairs Committee, in drafting the bill for the retirement of a large number before 1925, had in mind the retirement of those who had been taken in after the war. The officer pay of those is large on account of their long enlisted service, entitling many to full longevity pay. My thought is that if the House wishes to approve and pass the bill recommended by the House Naval Affairs Committee action should be promptly taken thereon, and you would then have sufficient vacancies to provide commissions for the Naval Academy graduates, and if the others are retired in advance, the promotions in the upper grades referred to by some of the Members would not occur. One of the most important and growing services of the Navy is the Air Service, and old officers are not qualified for this service; and since you must have young men in the Air Service, you can not find better material for this service than those young men who are to be graduated in June. But unless the House is in sympathy with the recommendations of the bill reported by the House Naval Affairs Committee, and in sympathy with it to the extent that you are willing to make the bill effective now, I can well understand why you should hesitate to unduly add to the ranks of the commissioned personnel.

Mr. BUTLER. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OLIVER. Always glad to yield to you, Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman anticipate for one moment that the House will remove one officer after the vote taken by the House the other day? I want to ask my old friend, who has had experience, what his judgment is?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the House should give very serious consideration to the bill which your committee has recommended; if the committee will be perfectly frank with the House, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been and always is, stating whom the committee desire to separate from the service and the reasons therefor I think the House will look with favor on the bill. You are retaining some in the service at great expense, and it would seem to be a mistake to miss the opportunity of taking into the service these sound, capable young men who are so well prepared to qualify later as efficient naval officers in any branch of the service to which they may be assigned.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes a point of order on the amendment. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Michigan on the point of order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the subject matter of the paragraph relates merely to the graduating class at the Naval Academy for one year. It provides that only 200 out of the 541 shall be commissioned. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] offers an amendment according to the terms of which the entire class would be commissioned. But then he goes on further than that and provides that officers not in any way connected with the Naval Academy, and who are in the service under existing law, shall be forcibly retired, contrary to the provisions of the existing law, in order to make places for the young men who are to graduate from the academy; so that the amendment which the gentleman offers, relating to other officers of the Navy outside of the graduating class at the academy, of course would not be germane to the paragraph, and therefore is subject to a point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the point of order is well taken, for the reason that the effect of my amendment does not produce any result different from that which would be accomplished if the paragraph were stricken out. If this paragraph were removed from the bill, then 541 graduates of the 1922 class would be commissioned. If my amendment is adopted, I am not in a position to say whether all of them will be commissioned or not, but approximately 500 of them would be commissioned. In other words, it is more likely that the number of graduates that would be commissioned under the provisions of my amendment would be a less number than it would be if the paragraph was not in the bill, and that being true it would necessarily bring about a reduction in the appropriation, and therefore I think the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Oklahoma upon what theory can the provision in his amendment providing for the retirement of 75 per cent of the naval officers eligible to retirement be germane to the amendment?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, the present law provides that officers who have served for 30 years can be retired.

The CHAIRMAN. But does the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma apply to the paragraph in question, and is it germane thereto?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Inasmuch as this is legislation which is for the purpose of bringing about the commissioning of the 1922 class, and inasmuch as all classes heretofore who have graduated have been commissioned, in my opinion it will probably bring about a reduction in expenditures, therefore I would naturally think that the point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The paragraph to which the amendment is offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] refers and relates wholly to the Naval Academy, the graduating class in the Naval Academy. The amendment proposes a method by which it might be possible for the Secretary of the Navy to graduate a few members of that class which, according to the operation of the law as it now stands, would include 541 in number, who would receive their commissions as ensigns. The major proposition in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma appears to the Chair to be the retirement of 75 per cent of the officers eligible to retirement who are now in the naval service, and therefore it is not germane to the paragraph in question, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard. I have a motion pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have read the hearings in relation to this matter, and the only things in the hearings relating to it are found on page 626 and on for about four pages, and they all show that these men should be graduated and commissioned.

Admiral Wilson, speaking to the committee, as found on page 629, says as follows:

In my days as a midshipman graduate many good officers were lost and sent into civil life who would have been of great value later on, and the amount expended to get people to fill their places was much more than what it would have cost to retain them.

All evidence before the committee goes to show that it would be a large expense to the Government not to graduate these men; more of an expense than it would be to graduate them and take care of them, outside and beyond the question of the right of these young men to be graduated and to receive the consideration which the Government intends to give them. Being somewhat interested, as all Members are, in what is going on, and having visited the academy a number of times, I went to the Navy Department last week. I saw Admiral Washington, and I have a statement here approved by him that I wish to read to the House to show the impropriety in allowing this paragraph to remain in the bill and the propriety of striking it out. It is as follows:

In response to your telephonic request of this afternoon for information relative to the number of line officers in the naval service and to the question of whether or not we have vacancies for or could use to advantage the number of midshipmen of the graduating class of the Naval Academy of June next, totaling 535, I would reply as follows:

There are to-day in the line of the Navy 4,093 officers on the active list, which includes 196 former chief warrant and warrant officers who were commissioned after 15 years' enlisted and warrant service, and 813 officers who were found qualified as a result of the examinations held in May last, in accordance with the act of June 4, 1920. The total number of the graduates of the Naval Academy in the line to-day is approximately only 3,080.

Should Congress allow 86,000 enlisted men for the Navy, which number the House has just agreed to, we would then need 5,135 line officers for that many men, in order to properly officer and carry on the Navy under the operating plan as contemplated and approved. As we have only 4,093, this indicates a shortage of practically 1,042 line officers necessary to meet the fleet requirements. If the 535 graduates of the Naval Academy were commissioned and taken into the service it would then increase the number of available line officers to 4,628, so that we would still be short 507 of the number actually needed to properly officer the fleet and shore stations—5,135. As a partial offset to this existing shortage of line officers we are using the services of 272 officers of classes 2, 3, and 6 of the Naval Reserve Force in the auxiliary vessels and elsewhere, under the provisions of the act of June 4, 1920, which authorized their employment. However, under the terms of the House appropriation bill, No. 11228, now before the House, page 33, lines 21 to 24, inclusive, is a provision rescinding this authorization, and if this provision of the bill should pass it would be necessary to discharge these reserve officers and their places would have to be filled by officers of the regular service, which would further reduce the effective number of the Regular Navy for properly manning the combatant ships. This fact makes it more pressing and necessary that the total number of graduates of the Naval Academy should be taken into the naval service and none of them discharged.

It is therefore clear that the number of the graduating class—535—if taken into the Navy at the present time, could not only be used to great advantage, but would still leave us short of the actual number needed.

In addition to the present existing shortage there are a number of applications on file from officers who have 30 years or more of active naval service, many of whom are ex-warrant officers, who desire to go on the retired list. The department, in accepting these applications, placing these officers on the retired list and making allowances for the annual attrition, due to deaths, resignations, dismissals, etc., could reduce the number now on the active list by about 200, and if the entire graduating class of 535 were commissioned it would only mean a net increase of the present existing number of line officers by about 335. This would be but a moderate addition above what we now have, and all of whom are greatly needed for the efficiency of the fleet.

It also should be noted that the source of supply for line officers is from the Naval Academy and that a graduate is not available for service until he has completed four years of study. It does not seem wise under the present existing shortage of officers that we should fail to take into the Navy these young men who are now within less than six weeks of graduation.

[During the reading of the paper Mr. RAKER's time was extended eight minutes.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the letter indicate whether the officers whom they request here are for the treaty Navy or for all the ships left in the Navy?

Mr. RAKER. This is a statement handed me by one of the officers of the Navy and is approved by Admiral Washington and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The number of officers the gentleman speaks of is the number necessary if we keep in commission 200 ships of war in addition to the treaty Navy.

Mr. RAKER. Not at all. I had a statement showing in detail the officers and the vessels and the necessity of it, but I am not an expert in this matter, and these men have had years of experience and are competent and qualified, and I can not see why I should not take their evidence.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Has the gentleman the list of ships he speaks of?

Mr. RAKER. I did not bring it with me.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How many destroyers are included in the list?

Mr. RAKER. I have referred to that; I did not bring the statement, because I did not think it necessary. The gentleman has it and knows what it is. It includes all the vessels provided for by the 5-5-3 pact.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And all the rest of the vessels.

Mr. RAKER. None of the rest of the vessels.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this situation is a good illustration of the fact that everybody wants reduced armament in the abstract, but nobody wants it, apparently, in the concrete. Whenever it strikes at any particular locality, then it seems to be a bad thing. We increased the number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy a few years ago for the sole purpose of furnishing officers for this great fleet which is not to be built. You remember that each Member of Congress had two appointments until 1916, and then came on this great building program of 16 capital ships and hundreds of other similar ships to go with them. The officers said, and they were right about it, that when this great fleet was finished we would need a large number of additional officers, and so we increased the number of midshipmen in the academy from two appointments to five for each Senator and Representative. This class of 541 is about the first fruit of that increase.

Now, although the purpose for which the additional officers were needed, namely, to supply the fleet which we had provided for in 1916, no longer exists, yet we have a letter read here by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] from one of the officers of the Navy, saying that we need as many officers now as though the building program were to be completed instead of discontinued. [Applause.] The cat is out of the bag. [Laughter.]

This whole business that we have been discussing here for days revolves around the question of the number of officers. It is the heart of the question of the increase in the enlisted personnel which we put into the bill on Saturday and which ought not to be sustained when we get into the House. [Applause.] The officers want kept in commission these 200 extra destroyers.

On these 200 extra destroyers there will be 1,600 officers, and these 200 destroyers are to furnish work for the navy yards. The men were provided Saturday for the extra ships, but those who carried that through Saturday did not have the courage to put through the corresponding increases for the navy yards to-day. [Applause.] They hope that when the bill gets over to the other end of the Capitol the job will be completed. But there is many a slip between the cup and the lip. [Laughter and applause.] But no one is to be fooled by the failure to offer amendments to these navy-yard items. The carcass is in plain view. [Laughter.] Under the circumstances it seemed better to stop with the 20,000 enlisted men and leave the Senate to finish the job. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the record show that if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma should prevail, it will increase the expenses each year $1,057,897, and will create 3 rear admirals, 13 captains, 23 commanders, 47 lieutenant commanders, 109 lieutenants, and 140 lieutenants of the junior grade?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. BUTLER. And it will cost this Government $1,200,000 a year.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, while I am on this subject I want to make another observation or two. I have said that these increases are engineered by officers of the Navy in combination with the navy-yard localities of the country. I want the House to know and know in time before Members answer the roll call, because the roll will be called, just what the situation is. Here is a notice that I hold in my hand that I wish to call to the attention of the House. It is a most illuminating document. It is signed by Captain Vogalgesang, of the United States Navy, commandant, New York Yard, New York. Here is what he says:

At a meeting of the ships trade committee at 11 a. m. this day with the commandant, the discussion ensued as follows:

"The commandant desires to reaffirm his interest and cooperation in the splendid work that is being done by the yard committees in the matter of arousing public interest, not only in the amount of work to be assigned to this yard but also in the maintenance of the Navy as a whole.

It is not the treaty Navy, it will be observed, but the Navy—every ship in it. Listen to what he says:

To this end invitations have been extended and accepted by the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce to visit the yard in order to familiarize themselves with existing conditions. Moving pictures are to be taken, and the general campaign to increase publicity is gaining headway each day.

Mr. Chairman, we saw the fruitage of it here last Saturday. [Applause.]

An appropriation by Congress of $250,000,000 for the navy will not suffice. At least $350,000,000 are required.

This disinterested officer in charge of the yard in New York says that we must have $350,000,000 for the Navy. That explains why there is something about the atmosphere in navy-yard localities that puts a little finer brand of patriotism into a man's soul than the atmosphere of any other community in the land. [Laughter.]

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just as soon as I finish this illuminative notice to the workmen in the New York Navy Yard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Let me continue the reading:

The fight will be staged on the floor of Congress, and the result thereof will determine in a positive manner whether the Navy as a whole—

That means all of the ships in the Navy, in order that they may be repaired in these shops and stations scattered up and down the seaboard so thick that you could almost throw a baseball from one station to another.

We must not rest content or cease our efforts on any less substantial assurance that the yard is to be kept open than that which will be embodied in an adequate appropriation for the entire Navy by the Congress. A general discussion followed touching upon the several details of the publicity campaign.

In behalf of the Brooklyn Navy Yard strong speeches were made by William T. Probert and other gentlemen. The necessity for arousing active interest and participation in this campaign was strongly emphasized. It was urged that every man having the interest of the yard at heart seek an opportunity to inform his friends in civil life of the conditions actually existing to-day and threatening conditions that confront us in the immediate future. The chairman of the executive committee of the yard reported a balance of approximately $300 from contributions recently received.

Information at hand indicates that the city of Boston has staged a monster demonstration, parade, and mass meeting to be held on the 8th instant, with a view to arousing public sentiment favorable to the local yard and the Navy—it is highly desirable that similar interest be created in this locality. In June of 1921 there were 10,000 men employed in the yard. At the present time the number approximates 3,500. With a small appropriation for the next year it is inevitable that there will be a further reduction in the yard forces on July 1, 1922.

We must not be discouraged in the seeming indifference of those in civil life—they have their own problems and worries, but it is possible to arouse their interest and there is every reason to believe that once this interest is aroused and the voice of the people is heard in Washington an adequate appropriation will be provided. Assuredly we are not content to let this matter go by default—people in Boston, Philadelphia, and Norfolk are awakening to the conditions and the people of Greater New York will be no less responsive once the matter is forcibly brought to their attention.

Appeal is made for a united, a continuing, and an enthusiastic campaign upon the part of every individual attached to or in any way identified with the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Does the gentleman from Michigan object to publicity and the spread of proper information to the citizens of the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, no. I do not blame the workmen in the city of New York who are employed in these navy yards. I do not blame them for desiring employment in the navy yard. But I do not believe that it is the proper function of the commandant of the New York yard to set on foot a campaign of this character. It is forbidden by law. [Applause.] I ask the gentleman if he thinks that it is proper for the commandant of one of these yards to encourage the workmen to make contributions for the purpose of influencing the naval policy of the country or for the purpose of securing increased appropriations?

Mr. TEN EYCK. I will answer the question. I believe in the utmost publicity. I believe as Secretary Hughes, the chairman of the peace conference, when he recommended to this House that we maintain 86,000 in the Navy personnel, and I am glad to be for an adequate Navy for the protection of the United States.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, yes; Secretary Hughes said that if the statements made by Mr. Rogers in his letter were accurate, then the personnel suggested was not sufficient; but as to the facts in the case he had no information. That is what the Secretary said. [Applause.]

Mr. TEN EYCK. Will the gentleman yield for another question? Had the President of the United States any facts when he made his recommendations?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, the same people who furnished Mr. Hughes with his information also furnished the President with his. That is the trouble about this whole situation. I want to repeat for the benefit of navy-yard localities that these 20,000 extra men will not furnish additional employment in the navy yard in New York or Boston or any other yard, unless they are put on ships in addition to the ships that the committee proposes should be kept in commission under the treaty Navy. The whole thing goes right back to the proposition of whether or not we intend to keep in commission the whole Navy—all the additional ships, particularly the 200 extra destroyers. I can well understand how the delegations from the States of Ohio or Indiana or Michigan may very well be in favor of keeping in commission the full treaty Navy, but are they willing to go out into the great Middle West and say that they are not only willing to maintain the treaty Navy but that they want to put in commission 200 extra warships over and above the number required under the agreements reached at the conference? That is the situation, and every man in this House will have to face it at the election next fall. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, we have all listened to talk on baseball, moving-picture shows, and other things for the last 10 minutes, but nothing has been heard about the question that is now before you. The motion is made to strike out the paragraph which provides that the boys who are to graduate from Annapolis shall not be commissioned. No Navy man put them there. You yourselves put there one or two of them; I do not know how many. [Applause.] I did not put anybody there.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman think that because we put these boys in the academy to get ready for this great fleet which is now not to be built, that therefore we ought to put them into the Navy and pile them up like cordwood, almost, making it impossible, even, for them to obtain anything like reasonable promotion until they are old and gray-haired men? They never could get past the grade of lieutenant in the Navy if you put these 500 men in there, unless you want to put into commission all the riffraff, all the other stuff, that is in the American Navy to-day in order to make jobs for the navy yards for repairs.

Mr. NORTON. Those boys were put there by agreement on your part that every man that went through that academy and passed that examination should be commissioned. That was the agreement you made with those boys. Now you are going back on your agreement, everyone of you that votes against it. Every man in this Congress made that arrangement with them, as solemn an agreement as could possibly be made. They left their homes. The war was on. We said, "We need your services; go up there and be educated and, having graduated, you shall be commissioned." That was the agreement, absolutely. There are no "ifs" and "ands" about it. Make your arrangements from now on. Next year cut it to 100 if necessary. Those boys spent four years in being educated in certain specific lines. They left their high schools in taking this course, and gave up preparing for other vocations in life.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What does the gentleman think the Conference on Limitation of Armament was for?

Mr. NORTON. I think it was to assist in maintaining peace to a certain extent. No conference on earth will ever prevent all wars.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield? Now, let me ask my friend, Does he not know that this will increase the officers of the Navy 540 men? While there might be some question about the increase of enlisted men to fill these jobs, this would be an awful thing to do.

Mr. NORTON. I do not care if it increases them. I say, cut them off in the future; but these boys have gone down there with an understanding, every man that is there, that he was to be graduated, and that if he was graduated he should be commissioned as an ensign. The law provided for it and it has not been changed.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman make the same argument for the class of 1923 also? That class went there under similar circumstances.

Mr. NORTON. Any boys that went there under those arrangements.

Mr. McSWAIN. So that it will continue four years longer.

Mr. NORTON. You had no business to pass a law of this kind if you did not intend it should be carried out.

Mr. McSWAIN. How much has it cost these boys, anyway?

Mr. NORTON. Four years of life and hard study, and the giving up of another vocation.

Mr. McSWAIN. My education cost me the same amount of work and time out of my own pocket.

Mr. NORTON. So did mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman be granted two minutes more. Does the gentleman have any knowledge as to how many of this graduating class have received their education under false pretenses?

Mr. NORTON. I do not think anyone who ever graduated at Annapolis received his education under false pretenses. I want to say to you that there is not a school in the United States that is more careful.

I want to cite one instance: Two men graduated from Annapolis that served in the war between Japan and Russia, and they did as much or more in the war between Japan and Russia to bring victory to Japan than any other two men.

These men in this class ought to be commissioned.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman from West Virginia to move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Oklahoma offered an amendment and has not been heard. The Chair will hear the gentleman now.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall cease in 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] is recognized.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, the chairman of the committee, made a statement a few minutes ago the substance of which was that the debate on this floor this afternoon illustrates the attitude that will be taken by some who are loud in favor of the disarmament agreement, but when it comes to vote for anything in which their interests may lie, they immediately turn about face. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] knows very well that I am one who voted with him a few days ago when he sought to have the enlisted personnel of the Navy reduced to 67,000; and I want to say further, that I have not any appointee in the 1922 graduating class at Annapolis. The only reason I offered this amendment was that the Secretary of the Navy and Admiral Coontz, who appeared before the committee, thought, according to their testimony, that it would be better to retire a number of the officers who have served for 30 years rather than to refuse to commission the members of the 1922 class who have met the requirements and made the necessary grades. It is for this reason that I have stood here to-day on this floor arguing that the Members of this House should not break faith with those splendid young men who represent the very best material we have to select from. So, Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to strike out the section, believing that it would be far better to commission the members of the 1922 class than to deny them the hope they have held for years.

I want to say, further, that if I have the right understanding relative to the present law the number of officers in the Navy is regulated according to the enlisted personnel. If my amendment is adopted, what will happen? It will mean that the members of the 1922 class will be graduated, and then the Navy Department would be forced to retire that excess of officers over the number that are authorized by law. It is for that reason that I have offered the amendment.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will.

Mr. VAILE. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for the country, as well as fairer to the men, if we limited the size of the classes and take advantage of the training that we have already given them at the academy—four years' expense to the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The Committee on Naval Affairs at this time has reported a bill which will take care of this situation in the future. I want to say to you that if you ever appointed a young man to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, or if you have ever carried on any correspondence with the parents, you have informed them——

Mr. VAILE. Certainly.

Mr. McCLINTIC. That it is the policy of the Navy to graduate and commission every cadet who meets all of the requirements.

Mr. VAILE. And the taxpayers have paid for those four years for the tuition which these young men have received at the academy.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will never vote for any legislation that breaks faith with those whom the Government has led to believe that they are to be given a certain consideration. I am in favor of reducing the enlisted personnel of the Navy and the retirement of as many officers as will be necessary to make places for the graduates of the 1922 class.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if there is any time remaining to the gentleman, I would like to call his attention to this fact: I know, of course, it is a disappointment to these boys, and I sympathize to that extent. But there are now 1,230 ensigns just above them and 541 lieutenants of the junior grade and 1,324 lieutenants. Of course, under the law they would be promoted up to the grade of lieutenant by reason of length of service. When they get to the grade of lieutenant promotion beyond that would have to be by selection to fill vacancies. Now, the number of vacancies in the line of the Navy is about 135 per year at the present time. Now, the gentleman can readily see what would happen with all of these officers ahead of these boys, and especially with 1,324 in the grade of lieutenant. The vacancies above that would be so few and the opportunities for promotion so slight that when these young men get up to the grade of lieutenant it would be just like a hump on a camel, beyond which the boys could never go; and if they did—if there was any possible way——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. One minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If by any chance opportunity was made for them through retirement it would put so many officers on the retired list that it would not be very long before the list would become so unpopular in Congress and elsewhere that it would break down the entire naval personnel. We must be very careful in working this thing out not to get too heavy a retired list. If I had a boy of my own graduating from the academy this year in a class of 541 members, with only 135 vacancies to fill, I am sure I would not want him to be commissioned.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, just a second. I want to say that, in the main, I am in accord with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. I have voted with him all the way through. I am the only member of the Naval Committee who voted to reduce the enlisted personnel to 67,000. But I think we owe a moral obligation to these young men and I do not want to see their hopes blighted. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] in the main, but I never felt when I nominated a boy to the Naval Academy at Annapolis that I could guarantee to him that he should remain in the service. He or his people knew as much about his chances for a naval career as I did. In my time I have named 18 boys to the Naval Academy, and it is a pleasure for me to say in a public place to their credit, so that it will go on a public record, that not one of them failed, not one of them has been, to my knowledge, court-martialed, and all are now in the service. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Were any of them cut out when they were graduated?

Mr. BUTLER. No. They knew very well, as all of them might have known—perhaps it is not fair to say that they should have known—that they would have to take their chances. But it seems to me that if I were a young man who had had the opportunity to obtain an education at Annapolis I would thank my Government for that opportunity, and I have never felt that I was under any obligation to see that they were either commissioned or retained in the service thereafter. It costs $18,000 to educate a boy at Annapolis.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Speaking in sympathy with all boys in education, I want to raise this question: After the young man has been graduated at Annapolis at the expense of the Government, is he seriously handicapped on leaving the academy without a commission, or is he well equipped, better than the usual person, to fill a place in the business world?

Mr. BUTLER. Of course, he is better equipped. He may be, for example, a mechanical engineer. There are many opportunities for them along that line. And more than that, we have on the calendar a bill which authorizes the Government to give to each graduate a degree.

That was asked for by the superintendent of the academy to help the boys along hereafter, and if that legislation now on the calendar becomes a law the degree conferred upon the graduates by the Naval Academy will be a better degree and a more useful certificate than he might have obtained at any other institution. There can be no just complaint, my friends, none whatever, because these boys can not remain in the service.

The point made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] is the real one. These young men will not all have an opportunity to obtain commissions. If they should they will be unhappy and dissatisfied with their slow promotions. I helped in a small way to frame the act of 1916, when we supposed we were providing for officers for a great fleet of 157 ships, the larger of which will now go by the board under the terms of our recent treaty.

Mr. FESS. How many young men would be able to go through the universities at their own expense if it would cost them $18,000 to do it?

Mr. BUTLER. I have had three boys that I educated, and I was delighted to do it, and it cost me many hundreds of dollars; but I could not send them to any institution that would have cost me $18,000 in four years. I could not have afforded it. I can not answer for my rich associates in the House. I do not know their financial abilities. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. One second more. I must talk rapidly to get through. Here is the point for us: Are we going to increase this commissioned personnel in view of what happened in Washington a few weeks ago? We are limited to the number of ships. While we differ upon the number of enlisted men to fill the ships there can be no mistake made here upon the commissioned personnel established and fixed by law upon the urgent request of the officers themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the committee, and I am not chairman of any committee. The question I asked of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] when he was on the floor, as to whether or not all these cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis were entitled to a commission from the Government as a part of the contract that the Government made with them, was asked because I happen to have personal knowledge of the fact that a great many of the midshipmen at Annapolis are being educated at the expense of the Government illegally, and when I say they are being illegally educated I say so for this reason, that the statute providing for the appointment of the midshipmen uses the words that they must be actual residents of the district from which they are appointed.

Let me relate briefly to you some of the experience that I have had. I have named young men who have been disqualified. After that fact had been reported to us, in some mysterious way, a few days before the time of appointment has expired, there appears an unusually bright young man, usually accompanied by an officer of the Navy or a relative, who says, "Why not give this young man an opportunity?" And the unusually bright young man is appointed as a cadet. I say that it is largely for that reason that a great many of the candidates that I have named, I not being chairman of the committee, are being rejected, and I believe an investigation of that situation ought to be made to see how many of these cadets are at the academy in violation of the law, and to see whether or not they should not be required to reimburse the Government for the expense incurred in educating them. That matter should be looked into. [Applause.]

I have taken it on myself to inquire at the Naval Academy concerning the actual residence of boys who superseded the boys whom I had nominated and who were rejected, and I have never been able to get that information. I was informed that "it was not information that should be given out." [Laughter.] I say we might well look into that before we say we owe every graduate of the Naval Academy a commission in addition to his education. If we concede that we owe him a commission, we might also be said to owe him a war, too. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I have never had a boy rejected from the Naval Academy, and I never certified for membership in the Naval Academy a boy unless he lived in my district. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe when we send a boy to the Naval Academy, and he goes there and signs a document that admits him, then the Government of the United States enters into a contract, not only with that boy but with the parents, to the effect that he shall receive not only an education but, if qualified, he shall also receive his ensignship in the United States Navy. I do not think any law placed on the statute books now can wipe away the obligation of the Government, unless you want to defraud a boy of his rights. Much has been said here to-day by the distinguished chairman of the committee as to the vote that was taken on last Saturday. It evidently rankles in the breast of my good friend from Michigan when 178 Members of this House, just as patriotic as you, sir, stood up here and told the country that they believed in a Navy of 86,000 enlisted men; that they believe in an adequate Navy. We were within our rights as Representatives of the people of this Nation in saying so by our votes. It does not become you, Mr. Chairman of this committee, or any other Member of this House to criticize the action of the 178 Members who voted in this manner, any more than we should question you and those who voted with you. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is tiresome to sit here as a Member of this House and hear Members, one after another, criticize those who come here within their rights as Members to vote as they see fit. I never questioned the vote of any Member of this House, and you have no right to question my vote when I vote here, even if I do represent a district that is made up of men who have worked patriotically for their Government and a district wherein lies a navy yard of the United States Government. It was not the people of that district that put it there; it was this Congress of the United States that established the navy yard in Boston, an institution that is of benefit to the Government of the United States and to the Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I have certain rights as a Member, and I am going to express them. I have just the same right as the chairman of this committee, and although perhaps I am not a naval expert, I have the same right to express myself on the floor as had the President of the United States when he sent a letter to the distinguished Member from Ohio; just as much right as the Secretary of State or the Secretary of the Navy, and their methods have not been questioned nor their motives impugned.

Now, if this Congress wants to say that 86,000 men shall constitute the Navy, we have a right to say it. If we want to say that 100,000 men shall constitute the Navy, we have a right to say it. We are the body that fixes the size of the Navy and the size of the Army, and no committee that has been delegated by this House to act for them has the right to establish the size.

Your report is before this House, your report is before us for consideration, and it is being considered fairly upon its merits. It is being considered by the representatives of the people of this country, it is being considered by us, and we have a right to say what the size of the Navy shall be; 178 Members against 130 on Saturday expressed by their vote the will of their people what should be the size of the Navy. Whether or not that shall be the vote on the final passage I do not know, neither does any other Member, but I venture to say that the gentleman from Michigan was overexcited when he said if he was placed on the conference he would never vote for 86,000 men, that it would "be many a cold day" before he would vote in conference what this House instructed him to vote.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is mistaken; I never said that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCCLINTIC) there were 32 ayes and 95 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 33, line 20, insert as a new section:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to cause to be commissioned, out of the 1922 Naval Academy graduating class, a sufficient number to fill all vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant in the Marine Corps occurring during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that personally I would have any objection to that, but the Committee on Appropriations has not considered it and naturally I can not agree to it. I make a point of order on it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman will reserve it?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to concede that the amendment is not in order. My object in presenting it is to grant commissions to a number of young men who will otherwise be deprived of an opportunity to serve their country. Under existing law vacancies occurring in the grade of second lieutenant in the Marine Corps are filled by appointments from civil life, although it is optional on the part of the Navy Department to accept graduates of the Naval Academy to fill such vacancies. Much to my regret, the committee has just voted that over one-half of the graduates from the academy next June are not to obtain commissions in the Navy. I believe that it would be good policy to commission every one of them; but if that is not to be done, then the next best step is to provide that they shall obtain commissions to fill all vacancies in the Marine Corps. There can be no question but that a graduate of the Naval Academy is better equipped by reason of his four years' training at Annapolis to serve as an officer in the Marine Corps than would be the average person selected from civil life.

It seems reasonable to me, Mr. Chairman, that inasmuch as this bill contains legislation upon the subject of what shall become of the graduates of the Naval Academy that it should be in order to vote on an amendment placing some of them in another branch of the Navy Department. My amendment will in no way increase the expense to the Government, because their compensation as second lieutenants would be the same as the pay and allowances of lieutenants who come into the Marine Corps from civil life. I am glad to know that the gentleman in charge of the bill agrees that this should be done, but only questions the propriety of having it done as a part of this measure. If it ought to be done, why not do it now?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have no information about it, but I know that the number of officers in the Marine Corps is full, and if this provision was adopted there would be a surplus of officers there.

Mr. HAYDEN. In the hearings I find the following statement made by the commandant of the Marine Corps with reference to the appointment of graduates of the Naval Academy as officers in the Marine Corps this year:

Mr. BYRNES. What percentage of the academy graduates are generally assigned to the Marine Corps?

General LEJEUNE. Up to this year the needs of the line of the Navy have been so great that we have not gotten very many. Beginning in 1915 they began to make some appointments from among the graduates of the Naval Academy, but prior to that time there had been no appointments for 16 years. To-day there are about 75 Naval Academy graduates among the officers of the Marine Corps, and we hope to get this year, to help the Naval Academy and help us, about 25. That is the number we would like to get.

My amendment does not provide how many shall be commissioned as second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, but simply provides that all vacancies that may occur shall be filled by appointments from the class of 1922 at Annapolis.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman can readily see that as a member of an appropriating committee I might not have information enough about it to be willing to put the Appropriations Committee back of it, so I would have to make the point of order, though I think there is some merit in what the gentleman says.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Michigan understands that the amendment does not direct that any additional officers be added to the Marine Corps, but that all vacancies occurring therein during the next fiscal year shall be filled from this source.

Mr. BUTLER. But the gentleman would not want to kill the spirit of the Marine Corps, would he? He knows that five-sixths, if not seven-eighths, of the officers who come into this corps come from the ranks. They are men who earned it on the battle field. They earn it through the grades, and the gentleman certainly would not want to destroy that spirit. I know he would not. It would kill the corps if you adopt an amendment like this.

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly the adoption of the policy that I have proposed for one year only would not destroy the spirit of the entire Marine Corps.

Mr. BUTLER. They come up from the ranks of the different grades and then finally are examined and commissioned in the corps. I should say that from five-sixths to seven-eighths of the officers commissioned in the last two or three years have come from the ranks. It would kill the corps.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. This is offered as a new paragraph and constitutes independent legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Chair is informed that a point of order was reserved against the next paragraph by the gentleman from California——

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. On the next paragraph?

Mr. SWING. On the next paragraph. My colleague from California [Mr. RAKER] also reserved a point of order. We both reserved a point of order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the point of order?

Mr. SWING. I ask recognition for the purpose of making my point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not have to get recognition to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, the point of order I desire to make is that this section constitutes new legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore is not in order because it is not within the Holman rule. I desire to argue that point.

The law of 1921 provides that 500 reserve officers are also authorized to be employed in the aviation and auxiliary service. It is to be presumed that these men are performing some useful service, and that they are not, in the language that has been bandied about here so frequently, "piled up on top of one another like cordwood," doing nothing. The fact that they are performing active service in the Navy, and that they are now to be forcibly separated from the service, does not justify the conclusion that the service which they are now performing will hereafter go unperformed; but, on the contrary, other officers will be found to take their places. These reserve officers range in grade from ensigns to captains. When a captain who is a reserve officer is taken out under this provision, some one below him will be promoted to take his place, and so on down the line.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. SWING. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not this paragraph necessarily result both in a reduction of the personnel and in the amount of money carried in the appropriation?

Mr. SWING. The section of the naval appropriation act of 1921, just preceding the authorization of this number, fixes the number of commissioned officers, both active and reserve, at a certain per cent of the enlisted personnel. So, assuming that these 500 are taken out, still the Navy is authorized to maintain the number of officers at 4 per cent of the enlisted strength of the Navy. The total number of officers will not be less; merely a different set of men will constitute those officers.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield at that point, if it will not interrupt him?

Mr. SWING. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. While it is true that the Navy can take in 4 per cent of the enlisted personnel in the way of officers, the only avenue for officers under existing law is through the Naval Academy.

Mr. SWING. Oh, not at all. I think the gentleman will recall on reflection that the law provides that they may be taken into the Navy by examination as to their qualifications, first, from the reserve officers, and, second, from warrant officers as well as through the Naval Academy. I was so informed by the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, who is supposed to be an authority on naval law.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That was a temporary act which expired last January.

Mr. SWING. I hope the gentleman will advise the Judge Advocate General of that, so he will become informed of it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I shall be glad to give advice to anybody who needs it, including the gentleman from California. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWING. The gentleman from Michigan has differed from the experts so much that I suppose he must continue to do so in order to be consistent. The section which I desire to read, Mr. Chairman, is the section of the general law that is now in effect:

The number of commissioned officers of the line—permanent, temporary, and reserve—on active duty shall not exceed 4 per cent of the total authorized enlisted strength of the regular Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that these are not officers of the line. They are practically civilians working on the colliers.

Mr. SWING. Oh, no; they are not civilians. They are in the service of the United States Navy, taken in by an act of Congress.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Do not get excited about it.

Mr. SWING. I will not get any more excited about this than the gentleman from Michigan did about the vote of this committee fixing the strength of the Navy at 86,000. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman must follow my virtues, not my faults.

Mr. SWING. And the gentleman has many, I admit. The point I desire to make is this: There is a total number of officers which the Navy is authorized to have, based on the authorized strength of the enlisted personnel. When we simply say that the men who are known by the name of reserve officers must be taken out of this 4 per cent, that does not mean that there is going to be a hole in the 4 per cent, but it means that the Navy will fill those vacancies by examinations and other methods, and other men will take their places. It simply amounts to writing a qualification into the law as to who may serve as a commissioned officer in the Navy, and it provides in a negative way that no reserve officer may serve. It would be the same as if it said that no men with blond hair should be officers in the United States Navy. I think it is clearly legislative and it ought to be taken up by the legislative Naval Committee and seriously considered. Some of these men have been for 20 years in the service of the United States, and some just and fair provision for their retirement should be made for them by the legislative committee, and they should not after a lifetime of faithful service be simply cut off here arbitrarily with hardly a month's notice.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the law provides 4 per cent of the authorized strength of the Navy for the line of the Navy. In addition to that the law provides that 500 reserves might be appointed for the auxiliary service—the colliers and the oilers—and to serve in aviation. Those are in addition to the regular officers of the line of the Navy. They are not included in the 4,100 officers now in the line. They are not included in the staff. Inasmuch as the Navy Department increased the line of the Navy last January by 900 officers, most of whom were warrant officers, who would make fine masters of the auxiliaries, the reserve force need not longer be continued. It amounts to a reduction of 389 officers. It comes squarely within the Holman rule providing for a reduction in the number of officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The provision against which the point of order is made is as follows:

The authorization contained in section 2 of the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 for the employment of 500 reserve officers in the aviation and auxiliary service is hereby repealed.

The provision which is sought to be repealed is as brief as the reference to it. It reads as follows:

Provided further, That 500 reserve officers are also authorized to be employed in the aviation and auxiliary services.

They are also authorized to be employed in the auxiliary and the aviation services, and the provision of the present act is to repeal that section. It necessarily results in so far as the matters affected by it are concerned in a reduction. Therefore the point of order is overruled.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 33, beginning with line 21, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that it is my duty to sit idly by and take statements from gentlemen, even though they be chairmen of committees, to the effect that every man who votes against them must be in the navy-yard district or have some personal interest in a navy yard. That is wholly unjustified. It is unbecoming on the part of the chairman of a great committee, and I trust the chairman of the committee did not mean what he said by those statements. He takes for granted the fact that figures from men of the Navy, from an admiral of the Navy, from the Secretary of the Navy, must necessarily be all wrong, because he differs with those figures that these distinguished men who have given years, as those officers of the Navy have to that subject, have prepared. If we want to get information, it seems to me that we should go to the men of the Navy, who have given most of their lives to the subject and who are in the position to give competent testimony. We were quite willing to let them take our boys across the sea without any loss of life. We have been quite willing to send them into battle whenever it was necessary from the beginning of this country to the present time. We have always found them ready to meet every obligation. However, when it comes to a question of a small amount of appropriation which these gentlemen favor, then the chairman of the subcommittee and other members of the Committee on Appropriations endeavor to browbeat the other Members of the House, and, because they do not agree with them, say that these figures are all wrong, that everything that is before the House is wrong, and, therefore, that we should discredit them. I know the gentleman does not mean that. If he does, he certainly is as wrong as wrong can be in every conceivable thing, and the mere ambition or the desire of the chairman of the committee should not impress him and imbue him with the importance of his position to the extent of charging that those who do not vote with him have some ulterior purpose in mind, some navy yard or some individual in the navy yard that they hope to help.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VAILE. There is not a navy yard in the gentleman's district.

Mr. RAKER. There is not a navy yard in my district or within 100 miles of my district.

Mr. VAILE. And there is not one within 1,500 miles of mine, and I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I state what I believe to be right, and I have a right to use my own judgment. I do not think the chairman of this committee should accuse members of being in favor of a navy yard simply because the member does not agree with him. My judgment is just as good as his, and my right to exercise my judgment is just as good as his. There is no need of the chairman coming in here and claiming that he is going to jam through the bill and say "Oh, wait until the roll call, and I will show you fellows." Of course, we will be here when the roll is called, and we are going to vote in the House just the same as we voted in Committee of the Whole. I have been here for 11 years, and I have never answered present once. I vote either yes or no, and will continue to do so, notwithstanding the criticism of my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised at the arguments that have been made on this naval bill. You have the pork grabbers coming from the East, the pork grabbers coming from the West, the pork grabbers coming from the South, and the pork grabbers coming from the North, and all of them stand for special privilege in this instance with the big interests of the United States that are always reaching their greedy hands down into the pockets of the people. [Applause.] These Democrats that will vote with the big interests of this Republic will learn something some of these days, it matters not what they may heap upon the neck of the patriotic statesman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] after he has made his splendid argument and demonstrated to a certainty so that every man, though he be a wayfarer or a fool, must know that 67,000 men are more than are necessary to man the Navy of the United States for the coming fiscal year. [Applause.]

In the face of the armament conference called in the city of Washington this powerful God-fearing, Christian Nation that is supposed to stand out as the torchbearer of liberty and the exponent of the religion of the Christ and the living God—in the face of the work of that great conference of patriotic statesmen of three continents, we are to have this Congress stamping epochal work under their feet and repudiating it. Who is at the back of it? These navy-yard fellows that are trying to reach into the Treasury, the barons of Wall Street and their henchmen that seek to ruin the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], but PAT KELLEY will be standing high in Michigan when a lot of these plunderers, these people [laughter], who are bowing to the golden calf, will be licking his hands. The people of the United States are awake to-day. The same men who demanded the taking off of the excess-profits tax, the same men who reduced the income tax, the same men who drove this outrageous Fordney tariff bill through this House to rob the mass of the American people are the same interests coupled up with the pork-barrel navy yard who are endeavoring to put this program through to-day satisfy the rapacious demands of big business. Why, a woodsman can find from the tracks what kind of game is there. He does not have to see the bear, rabbit, or squirrel. He knows they have been there as soon as he sees their tracks. Any man who is well acquainted can tell that the big interests have been making tracks around, and they are here to-day under different forms. [Applause.] But though they might come with a sheepskin on them, we can tell where the wolf is; it is there. But you can say what you please, the American people expect this Congress, through its authorized representatives, to live up to the American provision of the armament conference, and the one great step that has been made after this World War was ended, after the high-sounding declarations were made, this Congress is coming now to repudiate that work. Instead of setting an example that the European and Asiatic nations may know that the people of the United States are acting in good faith, you are proposing to repudiate the good work of the wise statesmen who have laid the foundation for world peace, and by such ignominious repudiation you will again put this Nation in a position to be suspected by all of the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROVISIONS, NAVY.

For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes in case of death or desertion upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Supply Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, chief machinists, chief pay clerks, and chief sailmakers) at 50 cents per diem, and midshipmen at 80 cents per diem, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited at the rate of 75 cents per ration to the naval hospital fund; subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessel to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given); subsistence of men on detached duty; subsistence of officers and men of the naval auxiliary service; subsistence of members of the Naval Reserve Force during period of active service; expenses in handling provisions and for subsistence of female nurses and Navy and Marine Corps general courts-martial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement; in all, $15,586,862, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations as required.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWING: Page 37, line 15, strike out the figures "$15,586,862" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$19,724,928."

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered to bring this section of the bill in conformity with that part of the bill which was amended on Saturday by this committee. It provides the provisions or the food for the 86,000 men who were inserted in this bill by our vote on Saturday. There are increases in one or two small items in order to carry out the percentages which have been proven by years of experience, such as the increase of courts-martial, the increased number of sick, and so on. Otherwise it is simply a provision to feed the men who were provided for in the bill last Saturday. It is absolutely necessary to provide the food for those men. It is an increase of $4,138,066. I hope the chairman of the committee——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Where did the gentleman get the figures for this?

Mr. SWING. The figures were furnished me by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts of the Navy Department, which is in charge of this subject matter.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And that much will be required for 86,000 men?

Mr. SWING. Exactly. I hope that the chairman of the committee will not oppose the amendment as it simply places this section of the bill in conformity with the section upon which we acted last Saturday and upon the same basic pay as the committee itself adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I have been a little surprised that amendments have not been offered to other sections of the bill. I am wondering just why it was that certain gentlemen asked to pass over certain paragraphs of the bill, the Bureau of Engineering and the Bureau of Construction and Repair, until we had voted on the size of the Navy, in view of the fact of having voted on the size of the Navy we passed the paragraphs providing for these bureaus without any amendments having been offered to them. If it was not the intention of the gentlemen who are supporting the increased personnel to offer amendments to the items carried on pages 24 to 32, why did they ask to pass over those sections?

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield until I answer the question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be very glad to do so. It is information I am seeking.

Mr. SWING. I do not know, because I did not make the request, but I presume it will be reasonable to presume that Members who were here on Saturday and desired to go home for Sunday and Monday wanted to vote on the crucial question before the House and get through. And we did get through at a late hour on that day.

Mr. MONDELL. I see gentlemen present who were the most active Saturday. I think the gentlemen who made the requests are present here.

Mr. SWING. A great many were absent on Monday, though.

Mr. MONDELL. And in order that they need not be here on Monday, we did not take up the naval bill. They are here to-day. And yet they offer no amendments to these items which they asked to have passed over. Of course, they could have had no purpose at the time in having them passed over except to have the opportunity to offer amendments to them later. They have been read without any amendments being offered. Now, we have reached other items in the bill not having to do with engineering, not having to do with construction and repair, not having to do, in other words, with navy yards and naval stations, and we have an amendment increasing the amount. I am at a loss to understand the theory on which gentlemen are proceeding. Do the gentlemen lack the courage of their convictions? Is there embarrassment in offering on the floor of the House the amendments they expect will be placed on the bill in the Senate? If gentlemen will frankly avow that, we will none of us be disposed to say anything more about it. But I do not like to have the gentleman pass over these sections without some explanation at least. How are they proposing to explain to their constituents the fact that, having made a fight for certain increases which were demanded, insisted upon, having had the House pass over certain sections of the bill before that question was temporarily settled, they then declined to offer any amendments, under the Bureaus of Engineering and Construction and Repair, absolutely essential from the standpoint of those who have urged the increase of personnel. Is it any more essential to the Navy that they shall have additional provisions and additional clothing than that we shall care for the additional ships? Do the gentlemen expect there will be no increases in the appropriations for navy yards and naval stations? I think not.

I rose simply for the purpose of having some gentleman inform us as to the theory on which they are proceeding. I assume, of course, it is all in the best of faith, and yet I am wondering what the folks down at the navy yards are thinking as they hear that the House of Representatives and their representatives here present are passing over the items that mean so much to them, without any request for increases, with no suggestion of an increase until we reach an item in which they have no particular interest.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I am craving information.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I was about to suggest that might it not be possible for the gentleman from Wyoming to ascertain from some of the gentlemen present, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], perhaps, whether or not the Navy Department desires that these navy yard items should be passed over and have the items added when the bill reaches the Senate?

Mr. MONDELL. The experts, of whom we have heard so much in days recently passed, have insisted on increases for all these items. Where are the champions of the experts to-day? Where are the gentlemen who were so insistent that we should meet the view of the experts as to the needs of the Navy? The gentleman says they will be here at the roll call, but that will do no good if the amendments are not offered and presented.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I suggest that these gentlemen are writing letters to their constituents that they have got the bacon.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not like the use of the word the gentleman has just used, but the paragraphs that contain the appropriation—not to use the word "bacon"—for the navy yards—have been passed. Is it hoped that at a later date and elsewhere these items will be increased?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Would it be out of place to renew my suggestion of a moment ago to inquire whether any of the gentlemen present has had any communication from the Navy Department as to whether it would be advisable to pass these items over in order that they may be inserted in the Senate?

Mr. MONDELL. There may be some gentlemen that may answer that question. I can not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why does not the committee rise and the House adjourn or else proceed in an orderly way, instead of fussing along with this kind of a farce? [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the gentleman, for I can think of nothing so utterly farcical, so utterly illogical, as to have gentlemen vote for and carry an increase of naval personnel of 20,000 men and then decline to offer the amendments which are absolutely essential if we are to accept the arguments on which those increases are made. [Applause.] I do not want to offend any gentleman, but I believe in men having the courage of their convictions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman understands that not all the members of this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union are on the Appropriations Committee or the Committee on Naval Affairs. We plain, everyday Members desire to fix this up in a way that is right. We do not want to sit here and have a post mortem. The thing to do is to rise and make some figures that we want. We have a leader.

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the gentleman that the most illogical performance that has occurred here in many a day is what we have just seen in passing these items without gentlemen who favored and voted for the increase offering any amendments in harmony with the increase in the personnel for which they voted Saturday. Gentlemen must not blame the committee for not offering increases they do not believe necessary. I certainly can not offer them, for I do not believe any increases should be made. It is the duty of those who favored the increase in personnel to offer the increases to the various items to correspond with the increased personnel. Why do not they do it?

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, each member of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union enjoys certain rights and privileges, and among those rights is that of offering amendments to bills as those bills are read; and I submit this proposition to you, that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] or any other gentleman in this House, as these separate paragraphs were read, ought to have offered amendments to perfect the paragraphs or else hereafter forever held his peace.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. No; not just now. The House last Saturday, in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, by a vote of 177 to 130 determined to increase the enlisted personnel in this bill from 67,000 men to 86,000 men. We have seen men of straw built up in the newspapers of this morning and built up here this afternoon by the eloquent and distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], who comes here and tells us that the purpose in increasing this enlisted personnel from 67,000 to 86,000 is to put into commission these 200 additional destroyers.

I say there is nothing to that argument. I have talked with the Secretary of the Navy since the gentleman made his eloquent speech here a few moments ago, and the Secretary of the Navy, the head of our Naval Establishment, tells me that with the 86,000 enlisted personnel, if it is carried in the bill when finally enacted, not one additional destroyer will be commissioned.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Did the Secretary tell you whether or not the items carried for construction and engineering and all the other items in the bill were sufficient?

Mr. McARTHUR. That question was not raised. I never put the thing up to the Secretary of the Navy. But I did put up to him the question suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, that the purpose of this increase in the enlisted personnel from 67,000 men to 86,000 men was to put 200 additional destroyers in operation. That is not the purpose, but the purpose merely is properly to man those battleships and other ships provided for in this bill, which would not be properly manned with a personnel of 67,000.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. Yes.

Mr. CLOUSE. The gentleman has stated that the Secretary of the Navy has stated this morning that it will not add an additional destroyer to the number whose commissioning is provided for in the report of the committee. I wonder how he will reconcile that statement with the report inserted in the RECORD by Mr. ROGERS on April 14, found on page 5551 of the RECORD, in which he said it would be possible only to commission 65 destroyers with 67,000 enlisted men, whereas he would have 103 under the 86,000 figure.

Mr. McARTHUR. In both instances I submit that the figures are 103, just exactly what the gentleman read; both sets of figures—103, just exactly as provided in the report by the gentleman from Michigan. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The list of ships as submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], as compared with the list provided for by the committee, is a smaller list of ships, is it not, and we have the spectacle now of our being "great Navy men" instead of "little Navy men"? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McARTHUR. The gentleman has been converted. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the greatest authority in the world is "They say," and I have heard that authority—"They say"—quoted around here several times to-day. "They say" that if the President had been aware of certain facts and figures before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] visited him the other morning he would not have written the letter that he wrote. I want to know from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] whether this talk of "They say" is correct, or has been conjured up here merely for the purpose of influencing the voting when the yeas and nays are called? I simply want to know if there is any truth in the report that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] went to the White House on Saturday, taking certain figures with him, and that the President said that if he had seen those figures before he wrote the letter to Mr. LONGWORTH he would not have written the letter? Is there any truth in that statement or not?

Mr. FESS. I will say to the gentleman that I went to the White House to talk with the President about the facts. He told me that he could not carry the facts in his mind. He said if I would go over to the Navy Department they could explain them. He said nothing to the effect that if he had seen the facts he would not have written that letter. [Applause.]

Mr. McARTHUR. I am glad the gentleman from Ohio has set the matter right. I know that celebrated authority "They say" has done an injustice to the gentleman from Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to know if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] would be willing to go further and say whether the President said he would not explain it because he did not know anything about it, and therefore sent him to the Navy Department? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. That is what he said in substance.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen do not seem to know when they are licked, and they do not take the vote of 177 to 130 on last Saturday as indicative of the feeling of this House on the question of the size of the enlisted personnel.

Some gentlemen are terribly disappointed. They thought we were coming in here to-day to load this bill up with a lot of pork. They are so disappointed that the tears are running down their cheeks, because they know now that all we propose to do in this bill, by increasing the personnel, is decently and properly to man the ships provided for in the bill reported by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman think that the other items in the bill as reported by the committee are ample to take care of the treaty navy?

Mr. McARTHUR. I have no information about the other items except the report of the hearings printed and sent out only a day or two before the bill came into the House, for the function of legislating has been taken away from the committee of which I am a member and lodged in the committee of which the distinguished gentleman from Michigan is a member.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Has not the Navy Department advised the gentleman?

Mr. McARTHUR. The Navy Department has not advised me, and I can not consider all these things. Perhaps I have only a single-track mind, I do not know; but I went into this enlisted personnel fight because I did not believe the ships in our Navy would be properly manned in the bill reported by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. I do not live in a navy-yard district and never expect to, because I am satisfied with the district where I live. It is the best district on God's earth, but we are never going to have a navy yard there.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Can the gentleman give the committee any information as to how much the total appropriation will be increased by the adding of these 19,000 men? I will say that the statement has been made that it will probably take anywhere from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000. I should like to have some information about that.

Mr. McARTHUR. I am glad the gentleman raised that point. I have heard it said on the floor that it would cost $60,000,000. I have heard it said in the cloakroom that it would cost $100,000,000. I called up the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Admiral Potter, a few minutes ago and asked him what it would cost, and he said as far as his bureau was concerned—the wages of the men, clothing, and food—it would cost $22,000,000. Of this amount over $4,000,000 will come from unexpended balances of this year, leaving less than $18,000,000 to be added to this bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And that would merely be the pay of the men and their food.

Mr. McARTHUR. And clothing.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And clothing. Now, suppose the men are put on other ships.

Mr. McARTHUR. They will not be put on other ships. They will be put on the ships authorized in the bill reported by the gentleman from Michigan. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then, in that event there will be no need for increasing any of these other appropriations.

Mr. McARTHUR. I think not. The gentleman has allowed them to go through here without being increased.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. When the bill comes back from the Senate will the gentleman stand with the committee?

Mr. McARTHUR. Not necessarily. [Laughter and applause.] I will stand with the committee if I think the committee has done the right thing, and I believe under the leadership of the gentleman from Michigan, after the spanking the House has given him and his committee on the matter of the enlisted personnel, the committee will do the right thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would like to address the House for a few moments.

Mr. VARE. Is the gentleman going to address the House in order or is he going to deviate from the pending amendment to discuss other matters?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am going to speak about this matter of provisions and possibly some other matters.

Mr. VARE. Then if the gentleman will permit, it seems to me we have devoted a great deal of time to other matters, and we ought to get down to the amendment before the committee.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I know the gentleman does not relish what I am saying. I appreciate that very fully, and he will not relish what I am going to say now. I am saying this now chiefly for the comfort of the gentlemen who have been urging an increase in these appropriations for the purpose of furnishing employment or continuing employment in those localities affected adversely in a business way by the treaty. If it is true that the 20,000 extra men are not to be put on ships other than the treaty ships, but are to be piled up on those, then, of course, there will not be any additional repairs and no additional work in the navy yards.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just a moment until I state this, and then I will yield. One of the reasons given by the commander of the Atlantic Fleet for the additional men is to increase the repair force afloat. This will still further reduce the repair work done in the yards. I commend this new possibility of further navy yard inactivity particularly to my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], and I ask other gentlemen in navy yard districts to take notice of it.

Admiral H. J. Jones, of the Atlantic Fleet, in a letter in answer evidently to a request from the Navy Department, on April 3, 1922, with reference to the condition of the fleet, says he is short of men, and one of the reasons why he is short of men is because he requires a larger repair force personnel afloat. He wants to increase the number of men in his machine shops on the ships and his tenders that go with the ships by 25 per cent, in order that the ships shall be self-sustaining. In other words, he wants to take away from the navy yards that which they now have. He wants the repairs, as far as possible, all done aboard the ships or on tenders accompanying the fleet, except when they go into dry dock. So I fear we come to the unhappy situation of virtue being its own reward. [Laughter.]

Now, as to this particular amendment. Of course, if the number of the enlisted personnel is to stand at 86,000—which I am hoping will not be the case—the provisions will have to be supplied, but this is one of the items on account of which the Navy Department may incur a deficiency; and I would much prefer to see this proposition go over until we have finally determined upon the size of the Navy. I am hoping that the House will reverse the action of the Committee of the Whole and provide men only for the treaty Navy and not for a great fleet of 200 warships in addition. [Applause.]

In addition to that the Navy Department has not submitted to the committee the necessary figures. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from Michigan has expressed himself so often upon the floor as having no confidence in the Navy Department that perhaps that was the reason they did not send the figures to the committee.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think that is true. I am glad the gentleman mentioned it, because last year they insisted that the ration would cost 68 cents per man. We fixed the amount at 50 cents, and yet they have no deficiency. We furnished them with plenty of money to feed the boys, although they said it would cost much more. [Applause.] So I admit their figures might not be controlling.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am surprised in view of that, that the gentleman has not manifested more confidence in the department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Do I understand that the gentleman from Oregon says that the Navy Department with 86,000 men will not keep in commission any more ships than it would if it had 67,000 men?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Sure.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Gentlemen of the committee, each day more definite evidence is offered us of how impossible it is to rely upon information that is furnished us by the Navy Department in reference to these matters. When the gentleman from Oregon announces to this committee that the Navy Department advises him to-day that with 86,000 men they will keep in commission no more ships than they will with 67,000 men, I ask each and every one of you to take up the RECORD under his seat and look on page 5551 of April 14, at a statement inserted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]. He stated it was sent to him by the Navy Department and I remember with what solemnity he announced it to the House.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; not now. I will yield in a moment to find out what the gentleman from New York just suggested to the gentleman from Oregon. [Laughter.] Turn to page 5551 and you will find a table furnished by the Navy Department wherein the Navy Department assures the House that with 67,000 men they will keep in commission 257 ships, and with 86,000 men they will keep in commission 321 ships. [Applause.]

Now, the gentleman from Oregon, the author of the amendment, comes here and tells us that with 86,000 men they will not keep in commission any more ships than they would with the 67,000 men. So much for the information from the department. Now, is there anyone who does not know what is going to happen to this bill? The gentleman from Oregon knows it, and he would be unhappy if he did not know that when the bill goes to the Senate the amendments referred to by the gentleman from Michigan will be added, and it will come back as it did last year, when it had $100,000,000 added to it. One hundred million dollars added last year is only an indication of what is going to be done this year. Read your newspapers, the same papers that have been advocating the increase of the personnel. Yesterday afternoon the Evening Star says: "What about the Army? Only one-half of the fight is won. See to it that you have more than 115,000. Now is the time for true economists to come to the rescue and increase the size of the Army." They want more men for the Army because they think your action has justified them in making the demand. I showed the other day that this bill as it stands will cost $300,000,000 when you include the appropriation for construction of aircraft and increase of pay. Then you put on the $60,000,000 referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for cancellation costs and you have $360,000,000. Every man you add will cost $3,000. The man who is relied upon to furnish the figures when we make the appropriations, and who has made the computations, says $3,000 a man is the cost when you add all items. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] may have two minutes to answer a question.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I will move to strike out the last word in order that the colloquy may go on.

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SWING. I understand the chairman of the subcommittee is opposed to any increase in this item even to bring it into conformity with the 86,000 personnel.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. SWING. I take it that you are willing to leave it to the Senate when it gets over there to provide for these men?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There is no use in having a vote on two propositions when we get into the House. One will be just as good as two. If in the course of time it develops that there are to be 86,000 men in the Navy, even though the Senate does not put on an amendment, the Navy will have full authority to feed the men under existing law.

Mr. SWING. And the gentleman would advocate their creating a deficit?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not think that they will have to create a deficit.

Mr. SWING. Has the gentleman any criticism to offer of my statement that these figures were prepared by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts based on the same unit of 45 cents?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, no; I do not doubt the authenticity of the gentleman's figures. If he says they are official, I know they are.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KELLEY of Michigan) there were—ayes 73, noes 69.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. KELLEY of Michigan and Mr. SWING to act as tellers.

The committee again divided and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 77.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional personal services in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary, to be employed only in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, including the Navy Allotment Office, the Navy Disbursing Office, and the Navy Property Accounting Office, $676,160: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: One $5,000, two at $4,500 each, one $3,000, two at $2,500 each, one $2,400, three at $2,350 each, one $2,300, three at $2,250 each, one $2,200, one $2,150, three at $2,100 each, nine at $2,000 each, and three at $1,950 each.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the spelling of the word "personal" be corrected in line 8, page 40.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

AVIATION, NAVY.

For aviation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, as follows: For aircraft and accessories in course of construction or manufacture on June 30, 1922, $400,000; for navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1922, $165,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, helium plant, air stations, fleet activities, testing laboratories, and for overhauling of planes, $5,475,000, including $475,000 for the equipment of vessels with catapults; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, $1,116,950; for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service for aircraft stations, $710,000; in all, $7,866,950, and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing laws as "Aviation" and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft, where such claim does not exceed the sum of $250: Provided further, That all claims adjusted under this authority during any fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coasts of the continental United States: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of amendments which I desire to offer.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HICKS: Page 49, line 2, strike out "$5,475,000" and substitute "$7,093,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the chairman of the subcommittee if it is his expectation to finish the vote on this bill this afternoon?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It is nearly 5 o'clock now, and possibly we may quit at about 5 o'clock.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it the intention of the gentleman to ask to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That was our original intention, and I rather think we will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for 10 minutes in which to speak on what is probably one of the most important sections of the bill, one certainly in which I think most of the Members are very much interested, and which is vital for the Navy.

Of course, we all realize that aviation is an expensive item. There must be continual replacement, and the upkeep and operation is very large. A plane is not like a battleship, which will last for 20 years. We build a plane and it may last for six months or six weeks, and then has to be replaced or repaired. The amendment which I have offered is to increase the amount appropriated for the operation and maintenance of aviation. It does not pertain to new construction, items which must be authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and which the Committee on Appropriations realizes must come from that committee and which their report refers to.

I am not going to speak of the work of aviation for the past year except briefly. The experiments which have been carried on and which have been brought to a successful conclusion have demonstrated that aviation is more and more important as an arm of the naval service. The greatest achievement of naval aviation in the past year consists in having perfected and placed in production a device known as a catapult for projecting airplanes into the air without a platform to run on, and before the next fiscal year expires we propose to have a catapult upon every battleship of the Navy and upon many of the smaller craft, so that we will be able to project the planes into the air without the use of a runway, which we have found not to be practical. During the last year we had runways on many of the gun mounts of the Navy. They have all been taken off. We have now on the Maryland one catapult, and it works successfully; and, as I say, we are going to put them on every battleship. We have now at Norfolk a landing platform on which we can land airplanes successfully and bring them to a full stop in a distance of 150 feet. We are going to put such platforms on the great airplane carriers which I hope this House will soon authorize to be built.

We are experimenting with a variable camber with a variable propeller, and we are carrying forward as fast as possible all these improvements which it is thought will make naval aviation more practical and more efficient, but with the amount of money appropriated by this bill for the operation of our airplanes it will not be possible for us to carry forward the work as it is deemed it should be carried on to obtain the best results and make aviation a real factor.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. In a moment. We have set aside in this bill practically $5,000,000 for operation; the $475,000 of the amount in the item is for these catapults I spoke about. It cost this year $5,000,000 to operate our naval aviation activities on a very much reduced basis and one not inducive to development. To do that we had to take $500,000 out of the construction fund to properly run the stations and conduct the flying. This reduced our construction activities. This item supplies the fuel, the oil, the replacement of planes which are damaged, the heat, upkeep of buildings, and so forth, and to do it properly will cost about $6,600,000; and this is what this amendment is asking you to do. This is the Budget figure, and I do not think it is exorbitant.

Unless this is done, this is what you will be confronted with next year. You will have these stations of ours of which now we have only two for operation, one for training, one for experimental work, and one for the marines, equipped with planes, and yet it will be impossible for our aviators to take those planes from the ground except on limited flights, because there will not be fuel enough, and if they are broken or damaged there will not be sufficient money with which to repair them. We will be unable to carry forward properly the helium plant. This item provides for carrying forward that important adjunct for lighter than air, and which means perhaps the safety of human lives.

Mr. STEPHENS. If the gentleman will yield, may I ask whether the airplane activity at Dahlgren, and the expenditure of money that has been reported as uselessly expended there, would come under this appropriation in reference to the airplane business?

Mr. HICKS. That comes under experimentation; it does not come under this item. This is an item for operation, and the item of which the gentleman speaks is experimental.

Mr. STEPHENS. It has not anything to do with this, because they have built hangars there and a great deal of money has been expended and wasted.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman how much his amendment proposes to increase the bill?

Mr. HICKS. About $1,600,000, and it is in order that aviation may go forward and be developed as a vital part of the Navy in reference to bombing, coast defense, observation, and so forth, so that it will be one of the great weapons of defense. Those who saw the bombing experiments down off the coast last July realize the importance of aviation in reference to air attack on battleships and the taking care of the defensive work of our coast. To carry forward that work is the purpose of this amendment, and I hope it will carry.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Did the Conference on Limitation of Armament accomplish anything as to the reduction of the naval expenditures?

Mr. HICKS. I should say it did.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. To what extent and in what way?

Mr. HICKS. I imagine the gentleman is perfectly able to read the report of the conference and to figure out the results. It cut out new construction of capital ships for many years to come.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If what we have done here for the last two or three days is going to increase our expenditures for the next fiscal year, how can we claim——

Mr. HICKS. I hope the gentleman will address himself to the item which increases it far more than this amendment——

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I thought the gentleman, who has a wide range of knowledge upon this subject of naval affairs and aviation, having explored the air as well as the earth, could answer the question, and that is the reason I gave it to him.

Mr. HICKS. With profound appreciation of the compliment, I want to say to my friend from Nebraska that I thoroughly believe in every accomplishment of the Washington conference. I believe my friend from Nebraska is a sincere friend of aviation and wishes to see it advanced, and for that reason I ask him to vote for this amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I can not now.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This is a question that does not arise out of the conference. A year or so ago I think I raised the question in the House here as to why the aviation departments of the Army and Navy could not be consolidated and the necessity of duplication of our flying fields, and all that sort of thing, be done away with. How far and to what extent have we attempted to do that?

Mr. HICKS. I will say to my friend there have been no efforts up to the present time to bring about a consolidated Air Service, except that a number of bills have been introduced to that end.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. All over the country the Navy is running its aviation and the Army is running its aviation.

Mr. HICKS. We have only five stations of the Navy on the land, including two for operation, one for training, one for experiments, and one for the marines.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the Navy, as the gentleman well knows, has its experimental station at League Island, Philadelphia, and is duplicating exactly the work that is being done by the Army at McCook Field, at Dayton, Ohio. There is duplication all along the line.

Mr. HICKS. I want to say to my friend, that until we bring forward a bill to effect a united Air Service we can not shut down our aviation activities for the Army and the Navy, unless you want to strangle the whole service.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Why is not somebody doing something?

Mr. HICKS. Senator NEW introduced a bill for that about two years ago, and so did several others.

Mr. CURRY. I introduced a bill about a year or so ago. Senator NEW's bill does not go as far as mine. My bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I have not been able to get any action on it.

Mr. HICKS. I dislike to go into that, because it is a bigger subject than this amendment to carry forward naval aviation for the coming year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California asked for a couple of minutes, and after that I think I will ask that the committee rise.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I usually agree with appropriation items in the committee bill, although I supported the increase of the enlisted personnel of the Navy from 67,000 to 86,000 men, and I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] should be adopted. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that I have some information that probaby the House would like to hear. Great Britain, after the Limitation of Armament Conference adjourned, appropriated $97,000,000 for army and navy aviation purposes, and France appropriated $84,000,000 for the ensuing year; and Japan has authorized the expenditure of $200,000,000 for experimentation and production, to be used over a period of seven years. Now, any person conversant with modern warfare and who has paid any attention to the experiences of the late war knows that in the future, to a great extent, we will have to depend for offensive and defensive warfare on aviation, on undersea boats, and bombs and gas. I think the appropriations made by the House for Army aviation were too small, and that the appropriation in this bill is too small. We ought, at least, to maintain the 5-5-3 naval program, and to insist that the Navy of the United States, in ships and men and in the air, be maintained on an equality with that of Great Britain. The appropriation asked for in the amendment that is submitted will not place the aviation of the Navy of the United States on an equality with the aviation of the navy of Great Britain, France, or Japan.

I hope the amendment will be adopted, although I usually agree with the committee estimates.

To obtain the best results in aviation we must provide for a unified air service, as Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and all other great nations, with the exception of the United States, have done. During the last Congress and early in this Congress I introduced a unified air service bill. It was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I have been unable to induce the committee to hold hearings or take action on it. My bill has the indorsement of all of the men who fly, who actually navigate the air, in all branches of the Government service, as well as the flyers in private commercial enterprise; but it has not the support of the high Army and Navy officers not in the Aviation Service.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am not going to take much of your time. I am going to talk very briefly.

A year ago we voted an appropriation of $650,000,000 to complete a lot of first-class battleships, some of them costing $40,000,000 or so. They are all practically completed now. And we have had a conference down here, a so-called peace conference, in which all of our hereditary enemies practically pulled the wool over our eyes and caused us to agree, after spending $40,000,000 to build each of these valuable ships, to spend $20,000,000 probably to tear them down, and then we will find that they have refused to ratify the treaty. And where will we be at? [Applause.]

Fortunately aviation does not appear to have been included in this wholesale scrapping program; it may be fortunate for us in the long run that it was not, because if that which I have predicted might happen does happen we may have to fall back on airplanes to sink an invading enemy fleet; and from what we saw last summer I believe if we have enough airplanes it can be done, and maybe in the future we shall not have to build $40,000,000 battleships.

I have an amendment pending which I wish the House to seriously consider when the committee reconvenes to-morrow. On page 48, line 21, I wish to strike out the figures "$400,000" and insert the figures "$500,000." And on page 49, line 22, I want to strike out the following words:

That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes.

I wish to say that I am fully aware of the fact that some of these private airplane manufacturers are charging two or three prices. They think the Government is rich, maybe, and can pay the bill. It reminds me of a remark of a young man back where I used to live. His father was pretty well to do, and the young man would never do anything, and some one says, "Why don't you go to work?" And he says, "Oh, I don't have to work. Dad's rich and will pay the bill." [Laughter.]

That seems to be the impression throughout the country concerning the Government. If you sell something to the Government at four times its value, the Government is rich and can pay the bill. My amendment provides for the setting up of airplane factories.

That is all I have to say to-day. I wanted to speak last week on increasing the enlisted personnel from 67,000 to 86,000, and I ask unanimous consent to include it in my remarks. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOWELL). The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERRICK. This is what I wished to include:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I arise to oppose this amendment—increasing the personnel of the Navy from 67,000 to 86,000. A year ago we passed the naval construction bill, carrying an appropriation of $650,000,000 for the completion of the naval program inaugurated by the late Democratic administration, and at that time we were given to distinctly understand that these ships had been contracted for and were in various stages of completion; and that we would have to pay the contractors their 10 per cent profit on the contract price, regardless of the fact whether the ships were ever completed or not, and that fact, and that fact alone, caused many Members of Congress to vote for the completing of these ships, of which I was one, because we having been given to understand that we could take our choice between paying these contractors their contract profits and the cost of the material which they had procured or claimed to have procured for the completion of these ships, without getting any ships in turn for our money, or we could appropriate the $650,000,000, complete the ships, and thus surpass the British Empire in naval power and make of the United States Navy the most powerful navy in the world. This fact, and this fact alone, caused the passage of this appropriation bill. These ships are now virtually completed, but have not yet been placed in commission.

Thus with the completing of these ships the United States have become the foremost world power, while the British Empire has reached the point of disintegration, as witnessed by the Empire allowing Ireland to become a free State, granting the independence of Egypt, and the unrest of other outlying portions of the Empire. Just at this point, where the United States became the dominant world power, the President, wholly forgetful or willfully ignoring the decision of the jury of the United States voters, which brought in a verdict against the treaty of Versailles by 7,000,000 majority, called the so-called peace conference at Washington, which conference drafted the infamous four-power treaty which bolsters up the tottering British Empire and restores it to first place as a world power, and turns over the domination of the seas to Great Britain and her slant-eyed yellow allies, the Japs, and voluntarily relegates the United States to a bad second place. I contend that this four-power treaty is just as infamous and fully as much in contravention of the time-honored policy of the United States of no foreign entangling alliances, which policy has been the policy of the United States of America from 1776 to 1922.

The jury of American voters rendered a verdict against the treaty of Versailles by 7,000,000 strong, the largest verdict against any administrative policy that has ever been rendered since the independence of the United States, and yet the judge—President Harding—who was elected to office at the same time that the voters brought in this stupendous verdict, has flaunted the will of the voters, and arrogated to himself the right to set this verdict aside and commit the United States to an era of 10 years' duration of embroilment in entangling foreign alliances, which may at any day involve us in a war against some nation with which we have absolutely no quarrel whatever and actually compel us to spend American money and sacrifice American lives in behalf of Japan, who is both our racial and political enemy; and after we have gone to the enormous expense of completing these powerful new battleships calls for us to undergo an additional enormous expense of cutting them up and reducing them to junk without their ever having been placed into commission or put to any use; and should we be too hasty in the destruction of these ships we might find after we had destroyed them that the wily Japs and their British allies might refuse to ratify the treaty.

Then we would have destroyed our own Navy, while the enemy would be in full possession of all their ships, and be in a position to treat us as they treated Russia when they launched an attack against the Russians without having made any previous declaration of war; and our Navy having been destroyed by our own hands we would be at the mercy of the enemy upon the seas and the enemy would be enabled to carry home to us the war upon our own continent, and we would have to fight out the war upon United States soil with the resulting destruction of many of our American seacoast cities.

We now having gone to the enormous expense of constructing a Navy which was not only adequate and powerful enough to defend the United States against the navies of the world and to enforce peace throughout the world, at least in so far as the United States' interests were concerned, we commit the monumental folly of destroying this safeguard of peace, after the enormous expense to which we have gone to acquire it. For it is a fact that both the congested Japanese Empire and the British Empire were already burdened to the limit and would have been compelled to desist from further naval construction through sheer inability to further finance any additional construction, and we, with the most powerful Navy in the world, could easily have enforced world peace by being in a position of being too powerful to be attacked.

This would have kept the foreign nations at peace with us. And it is a fact that we as a nation have never yet been guilty of aggression upon the weaker nations, nor is there any national tendency or inclination to covet the lands of our neighbors or even to collect all that is justly due us. This is fully borne out by the United States entering into the European war, in which we incurred an expense of $34,000,000,000 to save the Allies from defeat at the hands of Germany, and then allow the Allies to gobble up all of Germany's colonial empires and parcel them out amongst themselves, the lion's share, of course, going to that international pirate, the mangy old yellow British lion, while we retire empty-handed and do not even force the collection of the $10,000,000,000 which we loaned to the Allies, or even interest thereon, for did we enforce the collection of the interest we would not be wondering where the money is to come from to pay our veterans adjusted compensation, but could pay our veterans a decent bonus in cash rather than leaving it in the hands of the Allies to pay their veterans' bonus with and to further strengthen their militarism.

But since President Harding has involved us in foreign entangling alliances and virtually delivered us into the very foreign bondage that ex-President Wilson sought to deliver us into and which the American people by the enormous majority of 7,000,000 votes rendered their verdict against, and which verdict has been set aside by the President and a subservient Senate, acting under the party leash and committed us to be a tail to the British kite and a cat's paw to pull the Siberian chestnuts out of the fire for Japan for a period of 10 years, it is irrelevant and immaterial whether during that period of time we have any Navy at all or not, or at least until this infamous treaty can be abrogated. Desperate sickness sometimes requires desperate remedies and the patient is required to take terrible nasty medicine, and while it would be a temporary misfortune, I am inclined to take the view that it would be a blessing in disguise if after we have wantonly destroyed the Navy which we have been at enormous expense to build, some little third-class nation was to declare war on us and bombard some of our coast cities we, of course, would build new ships and ultimately defeat them; but after the war was over it would undoubtedly teach us the lesson which our forefathers knew but which we have seemingly forgotten that the United States has no business whatever in being involved in foreign entangling alliances.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ACKERMAN, for three days, on account of death in the family;

To Mr. DRIVER (at the request of Mr. OLDFIELD), indefinitely, on account of sickness; and

To Mr. BLANTON, indefinitely, after the conclusion of the naval bill, on account of needing rest after five years' continuous hard work.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the subject under consideration to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the pending bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with business under the Calendar Wednesday rule to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I presume if that is done this bill will be proceeded with and in all probability will be concluded?

Mr. MONDELL. I think so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 19, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 6110. A bill amending section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; with an amendment (Rept. No. 908). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ELLIS: Committee on Claims. H. R. 9614. A bill for the relief of H. L. Koester; without amendment (Rept. No. 907). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KEARNS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 6130. A bill providing for the appointment of Warrant Officer Herbert Warren Hardman as captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army; with an amendment (Rept. No. 909). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KEARNS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 1741. A bill for the relief of John M. Green; with an amendment (Rept. No. 910). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11335) for the relief of the widows of certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy, and the same was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 11344) to amend the act of February 28, 1920, so as to authorize the acquisition of additional land and the disposition of certain lands already acquired at Camp Knox, Ky.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11345) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Freeport, Pa.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TILSON: A bill (H. R. 11346) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon, known as the old lighthouse property, at Lighthouse Point, in the city of New Haven; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11347) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon known as Fort Hale; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHAW: A bill (H. R. 11348) governing the withdrawal of water from Lake Michigan by the Sanitary District of Chicago; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LEE of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 11349) to amend section 9 of the Federal reserve act to authorize State banks with a capital of less than $25,000 to become members of the Federal reserve bank of their district, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 11350) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint as special policemen such District employees as they may deem necessary for the protection of property of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ELLIS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 306) designating and naming an historical ocean-to-ocean highway and recognizing patriotic organizations which have promoted it; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. FISH: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 307) expressing satisfaction at the re-creation of Palestine as the national home of the Jewish race; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served in the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging upon Congress the immediate passage of legislation to provide adjusted compensation for men and women who served the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to recognizing Palestine as the homeland of the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DUNN: A bill (H. R. 11351) granting an increase of pension to Nancy W. Fuller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILBERT: A bill (H. R. 11352) granting a pension to Edward R. Baker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 11353) to provide for reopening the accounts of Harry Caden and charging of certain expenses therein to a different appropriation from the one used in payment; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 11354) granting a pension to Ambatt Haego, alias Agert Hugo; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 11355) validating a certain application for and entry of public lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 11356) granting a pension to Rebecca J. Rush; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 11357) granting a pension to Sarah Beason; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H. R. 11358) to correct the military record of Emmett Goodwin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11359) granting a pension to Albert P. Ramsey; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11360) granting a pension to Ellen Stout; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: A bill (H. R. 11361) granting an increase of pension to Robert Longstaff; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5160. By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of the executive council of the California State Federation of Labor, protesting against Senate bill 3217 and House bill 10644, known as the "ship subsidy bills"; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

5161. By Mr. BURROUGHS: Petition of Greenwood Council, No. 34, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Kingston, N. H., advocating the passage of the Towner-Sterling bill; to the Committee on Education.

5162. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Resolutions adopted by city council of the city of Boston, Mass., by William J. Doyle, assistant city clerk, April 3, 1922, protesting against closing of the Boston Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5163. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, of Washington, D. C., regarding the tariff; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5164. Also, petition of the Metal Trades Council of Brooklyn, of Brooklyn, N. Y., urging the passage of House bill 10967; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5165. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of Charles F. Nash, of Baltimore, Md., registering opposition to Senate bill 2919; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5166. Also, petitions of Louis Curdish, president Shaarei Tiloth Congregation; I. W. Davidson, president Hebrew Young Men's Sick Relief Association; J. H. Lipnick, president Roidphei Tzedeck Synagogue; B. Stern, president of the synagogue; Harry Zax, president of the Mogen Abraham Synagogue; I. Brown, president Beth Hamedreth Hagodel Synagogue; Harry Heyman, president Congregation Tzemach Tzedeck Synagogue; and David Schumer, all of Baltimore, State of Maryland, favoring the establishment of a Jewish national home in Palestine; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

5167. Also, petition of the Service Star Legion, of Baltimore, Md., favoring continuance of appropriation for hostess houses; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5168. Also, petitions of George W. Houck and John J. Greer & Co., of Baltimore, Md., favoring the Towner-Sterling bill; to the Committee on Education.

5169. By Mr. MERRITT: Petition of sundry citizens of Greenwich, Conn., praying for the passage of House bill 2193; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5170. By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Petition of C. E. Mattison and sundry others of the Soldiers' Home at Minneapolis, Minn., protesting against the passage of House bill 9753 or other Sunday bill, such as House bill 4388 or Senate bill 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5171. By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Resolutions adopted by Butterworth Post, No. 109, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, of Coldwater, Mich., favoring the passage of the Bursum pension bill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

5172. Also, resolutions adopted by the Army and Navy Club, at Lansing, Mich., favoring the passage of the Army pay bill (H. R. 10972); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5173. Also, resolutions of the Kalamazoo Club, of Little Gardens, protesting against the transfer of the United States Forest Service and national forests from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5174. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of the Rotary Club of Minot, N. Dak., protesting against the repeal of the transportation act of 1920, or the enactment of legislation tending to interfere with proper readjustment and development of railroad transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5175. Also, petition of the Rotary Club of Devils Lake, N. Dak., opposing the repeal of section 416 of the transportation act of 1920; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5176. By Mr. SNYDER: Petitions of William McCabe, Owen J. Kearns, Herbert E. Love, J. G. Aichler, S. C. Baldwin, J. J. Carson, J. T. Seddon, and August H. Uhl, members of Fort Stanwix Post, No. 58, Sons of Veterans, of Rome N. Y.; committee of Volunteer veterans, National Soldiers' Home, of Hampton, Va.; Robert Byars, Utica, N. Y.; William G. Bowen, Clinton, N. Y.; and Edward T. Shaughnessy, Lebanon, N. H., favoring passage of the Chandler bill (H. R. 9198), providing for an increase in pension for veterans of the War with Spain; to the Committee on Pensions.

5177. Also, petition of Seifert Corners (N. Y.) Grange, favoring equal privileges in grange and land banks which other American banks enjoy; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

5178. By Mr. WINSLOW: Petition of sundry residents of Worcester, Mass., regarding Joint Resolution 244, regarding the recognition of Armenia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

5179. Also, petition of residents of Worcester County, Mass., re House bill 9753; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 19, 1922.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, April 18, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lodge	Smoot
Ball	Gerry	McNary	Spencer
Borah	Gooding	Nelson	Stanley
Brandegee	Hale	Newberry	Sterling
Broussard	Harris	Nicholson	Sutherland
Bursum	Harrison	Norbeck	Swanson
Calder	Heflin	Norris	Townsend
Capper	Hitchcock	Oddie	Wadsworth
Caraway	Johnson	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Warren
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Kellogg	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
du Pont	Keyes	Poindexter	Weller
Edge	King	Ransdell	Williams
Ernst	Ladd	Reed	Willis
Fernald	La Follette	Sheppard

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is unavoidably detained on official business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is unavoidably absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. DIAL. My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may continue through the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

GREETINGS FROM ENCAMPMENT OF SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following telegram, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

MALDEN, MASS., April 19, 1922.

CALVIN COOLIDGE,
Vice President United States, Washington, D. C.:

Twenty-third annual encampment of Department of Massachusetts, United Spanish War Veterans, in meeting assembled, send hearty greetings to you and to Members of the Senate.

GEORGE B. WILLIAMS,
Department Commander.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a letter in the nature of a petition from D. W. Ogilbee, Wyoming department commander, American Legion, of Casper, Wyo., praying for the retention in the soldiers' bonus bill of the land settlement provision contained in title 8 thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution of the Kalamazoo Club, of Little Gardens, in the State of Michigan, protesting against changing the jurisdiction over the national forests from the Department of Agriculture to another department, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of sundry citizens of Gillespie County, Comanche, Aubrey, Stockdale, and Bridgeport, all in the State of Texas, praying for inclusion in the tariff bill of adequate duties on peanuts and peanut oil, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NORBECK presented petitions of sundry citizens of Lake City, Hillhead, Veblen, Argonne, Dowling, Hilland, Plankinton, Stickney, Wetonka, Mina, Langford, Britton, Ellingson, Wessington Springs, Miller, Gannvalley, Eagle Butte, Lantry, Fulton, Artesian, Eden, Grenville, and Sisseton, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the California Cattlemen's Association, at Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation extending the operation of the War

Finance Corporation until July 1, 1923, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wichita and Labette Counties and Enterprise, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Ferndale, Wash., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution of the Commercial Club of Yakima, Wash., protesting against reduction in the personnel of the United States Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Seattle (Wash.) Laundry Owners' Association, remonstrating against the proposed imposition of tariff duties on oils used in soap manufacture, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LADD presented resolutions of the Cottonwood Unit, Park County Farm Bureau, of Clyde Park, Mont., favoring the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill and opposing increased parcel-post rates, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the Rotary Club of Minot, N. Dak., protesting against the repeal of the transportation act of 1920, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the North Bellingham Progressive Grange, of Bellingham, Wash., favoring the passage of Senate bill 2604, the Ladd honest money bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. J. W. Grum and 21 others, of Woodworth, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions of East Dalkena Local Grange, No. 30, of Dalkena, Wash., favoring the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the military affairs committee of the Spokane (Wash.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the making of an appropriation for maintaining the Organized Reserves of the United States Army, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Stevens County, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of the Yakima (Wash.) Commercial Club, protesting against proposed reduction in the personnel of the United States Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Toledo, Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A resolution in furtherance of movement for construction of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway.

Whereas the commercial prominence of the city of Toledo, known throughout the country as one of the greatest railroad centers, will be materially and substantially increased, thereby adding to the growth, prosperity, and welfare of the city, if additional transportation facilities are provided; and

Whereas the proposed Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway would be of immense value and advantage to Toledo and the vast hinterland in reducing transportation charges and would give to Toledo its true place as an exporting and importing center and as a gateway to the sea and attract more and larger industries to this locality: Therefore be it

Resolved by the council of the city of Toledo, That it hereby heartily approves the proposed waterway, and further urges Congress and the President of the United States to take such action as will be necessary to provide for the construction and completion of the proposed waterway as speedily as possible; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Representative CHALMERS and Senators POMERENE and WILLIS and to the President by the clerk of this council.

Adopted April 10, 1922.

E. D. CULLEN,
President of Council.

Attest:

A. W. PAYNE,
Clerk of Council.

I, A. W. Payne, clerk of the council of the city of Toledo, State of Ohio, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by council April 10, 1922, approved by the mayor April 15, 1922, and published in the Toledo City Journal April 15, 1922.

[SEAL.]

A. W. PAYNE,
Clerk of Council.

TOLEDO, OHIO, April 17, 1922.

Mr. WILLIS also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Eaton, West Alexandria, Lewisburg, Brookville, Phillipsburg, Trotwood, Troy, Dayton, Osborn, West Sonora, Eldorado, West Manchester, New Paris, Farmersville, Tippecanoe, Germantown, West Middletown, New Lebanon, New Carlisle, Verona, Greenville, Potsdam, Arcanum, Union, Gratis, and Camden, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the proposed increase in duty on wrapper tobacco, which were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3479) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3480) to amend and modify the war risk insurance act; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 3481) to advance Maj. Ralph S. Keyser on the lineal list of officers of the Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3482) for the relief and retirement of William J. Wingate (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Civil Service.

A bill (S. 3483) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint as special policemen such District employees as they may deem necessary for the protection of property of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3484) fixing the salaries of United States attorneys and United States marshals; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3485) authorizing the United States Shipping Board to reimburse builders of wooden ships for losses sustained as the result of the cancellation of contracts and the abandonment of wooden-ship construction; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HITCHCOCK:

A bill (S. 3486) to continue the district land offices at Alliance and Broken Bow, Nebr.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3487) to provide for the widening of Nichols Avenue between Good Hope Road and S Street SE.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3488) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920; to the Committee on Civil Service.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AGNES MALLOY KILMARTIN.

Mr. SWANSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 279), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Agnes Malloy Kilmartin, daughter of Robert C. Kilmartin, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

EXAMINING DIVISION OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, under the resolution (S. Res. 199) a select committee was appointed for the purpose of investigating the proceedings of the examining division of the Civil Service Commission, and so forth, the resolution having been introduced by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Under the terms of the resolution the committee was to report its proceedings and findings to the Senate within 90 days.

The time is about to expire and the committee is not as yet prepared to make a report, this largely on account of the absence of the two minority members of that committee. When one of the members of the committee, the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], left the city he asked that the consideration of post offices in Tennessee and some others be deferred until his return. I agreed with him that such consideration would be so deferred. In view of those conditions I ask unanimous consent that the time of the committee in which to make report be extended 30 days from this date.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator from South Dakota when the special committee was appointed? Was it not about January 20?

Mr. STERLING. The resolution was reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment January 9, and it was passed January 19. Some days after that, January 25, the committee was appointed by the Vice President.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator, because he doubtless has it before him, when the first meeting of the committee was held under the resolution?

Mr. STERLING. I can not give the date now when the first meeting was held. It was not very long, I think, after the committee was appointed.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask how many meetings have the committee held?

Mr. STERLING. We have had several meetings; we have taken testimony, heard statements, and so on. I think we shall, within the 30 days asked, easily be able to make a report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the Georgia Country Bankers' Association relative to agricultural credits, the suggested bonus plan, and the Muscle Shoals development.

The members of this association represent practically all the banks in the State, except a few of the city banks. That is one of the largest bankers' associations in the United States. They make loans direct to farmers, and their judgment as to rural credit legislation I would consider very important. The officers of these banks are among the leading citizens of their towns and counties.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AGRICULTURAL FINANCING.

The events of the past two years have taught us that there is a vital link missing in our financial structure; that while commerce is taken care of through the present banking system, and land ownership and development is provided for through the Federal land banks and long-time loans from mortgage companies, there is no system provided for properly financing the intermediate time loans so necessary to the proper development of agricultural production.

We therefore urge upon Congress to complete the work it has so well begun through the establishment of the Federal reserve system to care for the commercial interests of the country and the Federal Farm Loan Board to finance long-time land loans by creating an additional structure on a permanent basis that will enable banks in agricultural communities to find funds that will enable them to safely make loans of from one to five years for legitimate agricultural production.

HENRY FORD AND MUSCLE SHOALS.

We have noted with very great interest the offer of Mr. Henry Ford to purchase or lease the Government properties at Muscle Shoals and to develop same for the benefit of the South and the entire country, and especially the agricultural interests. It is with deep regret that we have observed the very apparent desire of certain interests to prevent Mr. Ford and his associates from securing possession of this property for the purpose stated, and especially the apparent sympathy of high and influential officials of the Government with those obstructive interests.

We urge upon our Representatives in Congress to use every effort to secure the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer at the earliest possible period.

SOLDIERS' BONUS.

As it would seem that the soldiers' bonus measure that has recently been passed by the lower House in Congress seeks to transfer the financial burden of the bonus to the banks for many years to come and would have the effect of tying up a considerable portion of the assets of banks that should remain liquid under our present system of commercial banking, we urge our Senators in Congress to make every effort to so change the measure that this burden be met by some method that will raise the necessary funds in some other and more satisfactory way.

TREASURY DEFICIT.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, some weeks ago the distinguished leader of the Republican Party in the Senate, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], made a very interesting speech in Boston. In the course of his speech, which was carried in all the press of the country, he made the statement that appropriations of $5,337,000,000 asked by the departments have been cut to $1,428,000,000. Whether he made that statement or not I do not know. Of course, he was speaking as a candidate and laboring under the enthusiasm of speaking to his constituents, and it was but natural that he should get his figures a little confused. Whether he made the statement or not, the papers carried it that way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there was an error of one word in the statement, and I corrected it here on the floor and corrected it in the permanent RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. I say that the papers must have carried it wrong.

Mr. LODGE. They did carry it wrong.

Mr. HARRISON. But they did carry it that the Senator from Massachusetts had made the statement. It was not confined to one paper, but it was carried in all the press of the country, and when an impression is once created it is difficult to remove that impression. The statement carried as made by the Senator from Massachusetts in his Boston speech was that appropriations of $5,337,000,000, as asked for by the departments, had been cut to $1,428,000,000. That was about the wildest statement that has been made by any Republican spellbinder recently, although many grossly exaggerated claims have been made.

I noticed the other day that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] made a speech in New York and laid great claim to big changes and big cuts. Of course, we knew you Republicans were going to bungle the Budget, but we did not know to what extent you would do it. I want to call the attention of the Senate to a letter that came to the chairman of the Finance Committee yesterday, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], from the Secretary of the Treasury, in which the Secretary said that the estimates of $167,000,000 deficit for the fiscal year 1923 have increased now under the alleged splendid management of the new administration to $484,000,000, and that will be the amount of the deficit for the coming fiscal year. Of course, there may be another mistake in that estimate. It may be more than this amount when the true facts are known. Anyway, the Secretary of the Treasury says now the estimate of $167,000,000 was all wrong and it has been increased to $484,000,000 as the amount of the deficit, and he lays it largely to the falling off of the income tax. I think that is true. There is depression everywhere. Nobody is making any money, scarcely, under the promised prosperity under this administration. So it is perfectly natural that incomes should be greatly diminished. You who have been laying and may in the future lay large claims of savings should study the deficits and remember this report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SURVEY OF POTOMAC RIVER TO GREAT FALLS.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 192.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think we had better proceed with the regular order, as we have before us the joint resolution of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE].

Mr. FERNALD. I think if the Senator from Utah will allow me to speak about one minute and explain the object of the joint resolution for which I ask consideration he will withdraw any objection to my request.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that the joint resolution of the Senator from New Jersey is the unfinished business——

Mr. FERNALD. While the discussion has been proceeding I am quite sure we could have passed the joint resolution for which I have asked consideration.

Mr. KING. And the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is ready to speak this morning on that joint resolution.

Mr. FERNALD. I shall not detain the Senator from Nebraska for any appreciable length of time. I simply ask that the joint resolution to which I have referred may be considered and passed, because I know there can be no objection to it.

Mr. KING. The Senator has presented his request so seductively that I think I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read by title.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 192) providing for survey of the Potomac River banks from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls, with a view to possible extension of the District park system.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KING. I think it will be necessary to have a little discussion of that joint resolution, and I therefore ask for the regular order.

Mr. FERNALD. I still have the floor, have I not, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. If the Senator from Utah objects to the consideration of the joint resolution, I shall have to make a motion that it be taken up.

Mr. HARRISON. Let the Senator from Maine make his motion to take up the joint resolution.

Mr. FERNALD. I think I can displace the unfinished business if I have votes enough to do so. I am sure, however, that it will not consume five minutes of the time of the Senate if the joint resolution shall be taken up, because there is no objection to it from any source and there can not possibly be. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. RAWSON], and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who does not appear to be present. Therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is unavoidably detained on official business.

Mr. KELLOGG. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], and vote "nay."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CARAWAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and let my vote stand.

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. As he is not present, being unable to secure a transfer of my pair, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is absent on account of illness.

I also wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Ashurst	Gerry	La Follette	Stanley
Brandegee	Gooding	Nelson	Sterling
Broussard	Hale	Nicholson	Swanson
Bursum	Harris	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Heflin	Oddie	Warren
Caraway	Hitchcock	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Weller
Dial	Keyes	Ransdell	Willis
Fernald	King	Reed
Fletcher	Ladd	Sheppard

NAYS—18.

Ball	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Sutherland
Calder	Kellogg	Page	Townsend
Curtis	Lenroot	Phipps	Wadsworth
du Pont	Lodge	Smoot
Edge	McNary	Spencer

NOT VOTING—40.

Borah	Glass	Moses	Shields
Cameron	Harreld	Myers	Shortridge
Colt	Harrison	New	Simmons
Crow	Johnson	Norbeck	Smith
Cummins	Kendrick	Owen	Stanfield
Dillingham	McCormick	Pepper	Trammell
Elkins	McCumber	Pittman	Underwood
Ernst	McKellar	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
France	McKinley	Rawson	Watson, Ind.
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Robinson	Williams

So Mr. FERNALD's motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 192) providing for survey of the Potomac River banks from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls with a view to possible extension of the District park system.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers is hereby authorized and directed to make an examination and survey of the banks of the Potomac from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls, and to submit an estimate of the cost and a recommendation as to the advisability of the creation of an extension of the park system of the District of Columbia in this area.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys now available in the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $5,000 to defray all expenses of this survey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if there is to be no debate or explanation of the joint resolution, I desire to say a few words.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I was about to make an explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield if the Senator from Maine desires to speak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, the purpose of the joint resolution, as will be readily understood by its reading, is to provide for a survey with a view to the possible extension of the park system of the city of Washington. I have felt that the city of Washington ought to be, and, if it were in my power to make it so, it would be the most beautiful city in the world. We have already provided for an extension of the Botanic Garden in the section of the city contiguous to the Capitol. On either side of the Potomac may be found scenery comparable to that anywhere in the Appalachian system of the United States. The area between Washington City and Great Falls has never been surveyed with a view to its utilization for park purposes. There are thousands of acres there in primitive forest. There are creeks and gorges and forest scenery unexcelled in this section of the country. The joint resolution merely provides that this area may be surveyed.

I know the desire of the Senators of the United States to beautify their homes, wherever they may live. I have the pleasure of sitting in the shade of trees that were set out by my great-grandfather 110 years ago, and hardly a year passes that I do not add some shrubs and trees to my home grounds where I live. To pass on to the coming generation this year I have ordered 200 shrubs to be set in my garden, that my children and my children's children may enjoy the pleasure of having these flowers and shrubs, and sitting, as I do, in the shade of the trees set by my great-grandfather.

We are all desirous of beautifying our homes, and yet here in the city of Washington it is doubtful if any man expects to enjoy his home for more than a few years, and then it will pass on, perhaps, to the next generation or two, and finally go to strangers; but the city of Washington is to be the home of the Congress of the United States from now to the end of time, and it ought to be the duty of every Congressman and Senator to undertake to beautify this city, to make it more beautiful for those who are to come after us. It is doubtful if any of us may remain here more than 20 or 30 years at the most—some of us probably will not remain here quite that length of time, although I expect to—but there will be other Senators here, and we should pass on this city to other generations, beautifying it by parks and by avenues, and beautifying the streets and all the grounds of this city.

So far as I know, there is no opposition to this joint resolution. Certainly no one living in the city could object to it; and I am sure that it is not only the privilege but the duty of Senators to do precisely what is asked to be done here in this joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I invite the Senator's attention, however, to this matter: It has been discovered that whenever projects were contemplated by the Government to improve Washington, or to erect buildings, and it became known that land was to be purchased, the prices immediately assumed altitudinous heights. The Senator may recall reading some years ago that a very distinguished and a very public-spirited citizen of Washington quietly obtained options upon a large amount of land for the purpose of increasing the area of Rock Creek Park. For some reason or other Congress failed to avail itself of the options which he tendered to the Government, and the day of the maturing of the options passed, and the lands were not purchased. Those lands to-day could not be purchased for perhaps from ten to fifty times the price for which the options were obtained.

To make the application of what I had in mind, if we pass this joint resolution, and the owners of the land upon either side of the Potomac within the area that will be surveyed know that there is a possibility of the public-park system being extended and those lands acquired, they will attribute to those lands values that will be fabulous. Does not the Senator think that it might be the part of wisdom to obtain options before we make surveys?

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, no. This land can be condemned by the Government and taken for what it is worth, and as time goes on it will become more valuable. Every year every forest in the United States is worth a little more than it was worth the year before. As time goes on these lands will advance in price and we would simply have to pay more next year than we would this year. This joint resolution simply contemplates the purchase of this land, so that from now to the end of time the poor as well as the rich may enjoy this park. It is adjacent to the city, and on either side of the Potomac for 15 miles there is as fine scenery as human eyes have ever witnessed. It ought to be taken in hand now, before these lands advance any more than they have advanced now, and under the law we have a right to condemn this property and take it for its real value.

I do not concede that the argument of the Senator from Utah is valid or ought to be considered in connection with this joint resolution. I do not think there is any opposition to the joint resolution from anybody. Certainly the poor would like to have an opportunity to go out in these free lands and forests and enjoy the afternoons; and if this property is ever to be developed for water or for power it would be more accessible and we would have roads there whereby we might develop this property with much less expense than could be done if it were to be developed now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not read the Senator's joint resolution, but I ask for information. Does the Senator have in mind the condemnation of extensive areas of land, or simply enough for a driveway?

Mr. FERNALD. This joint resolution simply provides for a survey.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A survey of what?

Mr. FERNALD. Of these lands, to see what might be done and how they could be developed and the sort of a park that we might have there. The joint resolution simply provides for a survey and makes a small appropriation of $5,000, and directs that a report be made back to the Senate. I do not think it is necessary to go into the matter to any great extent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I notice that the joint resolution does not pretend to describe the boundaries of the land that is intended to be surveyed. I just want to get what the Senator has in mind and how much land he thinks we might or ought to get.

Mr. FERNALD. On both sides of the river there are thousands of acres. I do not know just the extent of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The land, of course, goes out on either side indefinitely.

Mr. FERNALD. I do not expect to take in all of the State of Virginia or all of the State of Maryland; but I think after surveying these lands we might determine how much ought to be taken, and we never will be able to determine until they are surveyed and we get an idea. I think these lands could be purchased now at a very reasonable price.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator contemplates that the Chief of Engineers can survey just as much of the territory as he desires within the limits of the $5,000?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the survey may be a sort of reconnaissance; he may go out there and look it over and report to Congress what he thinks we ought to take. He could recommend a pretty large area, of course.

Mr. FERNALD. That, of course, will come to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, of course.

Mr. FERNALD. And with that in mind we can provide for taking just as much as seems practicable for a park.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The idea in the Senator's mind is to take in as much as possible of the territory out there?

Mr. FERNALD. As much as practicable.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On both sides of the river, up to Great Falls?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that the joint resolution is rather too restricted. I will say to the Senator that I am very much in favor of this measure. I am very much in favor of any policy that will enlarge and extend the parks of Washington. I think the cities of the United States as a rule have been negligent in establishing and promoting a proper parking system. The result is that we have these congested areas, with no breathing spaces for the people. I think Washington ought to set an example in the establishment of beautiful parks.

It seems to me, as I have suggested, that the joint resolution is too restricted. I am not sure that, taken literally, this would not confine the examination and the survey to the banks proper. It would not permit a survey or an examination back from the banks a quarter of a mile or any distance. Will not the Senator accept the amendment I am about to suggest, because it is clear that they ought to make a survey not only of the banks but some distance back, as far back as in their judgment, if Congress shall make the appropriation, the land would be suitable and proper for park purposes. I think the Senator from Washington clearly indicated that idea a moment ago.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I had in mind in asking the questions I did—the language of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. So I offer this amendment, and ask the Senator to accept it: After the word "Potomac," on line 5, add the following words:

And lands on either side thereof which would be suitable for a public park.

So that, if amended, it would read:

That the Chief of Engineers is hereby authorized and directed to make an examination and survey of the banks of the Potomac and lands on either side thereof which would be suitable for a public park from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls.

Mr. FERNALD. I am very glad to accept that amendment. I think it is a very good one.

Mr. KING. I offer that amendment.

Mr. FERNALD. Having made the very brief explanation that I have, I am quite willing to have the joint resolution acted upon.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to having this survey made. In fact, I am rather inclined to favor the proposition; but I desire to call attention now to the fact that it may be, if we enter upon the improvement that is contemplated by the passage of this joint resolution, that the action of Congress ultimately, at some future day, will be used as an argument against the development of the water power at Great Falls, on the Potomac River.

This joint resolution provides only for a survey and appropriates only enough money to make the survey. It does not contemplate the purchase of any real estate. If it did, I should oppose it at this time, unless the improvement were made in connection with the improvement for water-power purposes at Great Falls.

Mr. President, I suppose the argument would be made at once that we would not dare to flood any of this land for power purposes, because it would destroy the beauty of the land to be used for park purposes; and I am not willing to bind the Government of the United States to the improvement of this section of the country and the acquiring of title to this land if by so doing we are going to forestall the action that the Government might take at some time for the improvement of the water-power possibilities of the Potomac River between here and Great Falls. I do not think for a moment that the Senator from Maine has any such idea in his mind.

Mr. FERNALD. I have not.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think he believes he is taking any action now that might preclude that in the future, and I do not believe this step would do so. It might facilitate it, in fact, because it would give us a survey of the country between here and Great Falls, much of which would have to be overflowed with water in case the power possibilities were developed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Nebraska has perhaps given more attention to the matter of the development of power from the Potomac River than any other Senator, and

I wish to ask him, for information, whether the project he has in mind, in general outline, is the development of power from Great Falls itself or from the Little Falls below the Great Falls? The Senator has just remarked that the development of the power project would overflow lands between here and Great Falls. Of course, if it had that effect, the dam in the river would then be, not at the falls or at the head of the falls but it would be somewhere much farther down the river. What is the reason against the use of the power of the Great Falls itself, taking the water out of the river at the head of the falls instead of lower down? By the former process, it always seemed to me, we would get the largest amount of power.

Mr. NORRIS. Making a direct answer to the question of the Senator, which is very pertinent, there is no reason, in my judgment, against it. About 10 or 15 years ago, when this matter was first seriously considered by Congress and I was a Member of the House of Representatives, an appropriation of $20,000 was made for the purpose of having a survey and a report made as to means to enable the officials to increase the water supply of the District of Columbia and develop the power. At that time, and for several years afterwards, there was quite an agitation, I will say to the Senator from Washington, against any improvement which would interfere with the beauty of Great Falls, and the development which was proposed by Colonel Langfitt, whose survey was up to that time the most complete as to the water-power possibilities of the Potomac River that had ever been made in the history of the country, although it had been surveyed many times, did not contemplate the destruction of the scenic beauty of Great Falls. His plan was the construction of a dam at or near the District line, which would be about 9 miles this side of Great Falls, a dam, as I remember it now, 115 feet high, which would make a lake 9 miles long and 115 feet deep at this end, but which would back up the water only to the foot of the falls.

Senators will remember that on two or three different occasions the Senate has put on various bills an appropriation and an authorization for the development of Great Falls. It has always been rejected by the House, it has come back to the Senate, and has been eventually stricken out in conference.

I am sorry the conferees who represented the Senate when that was done the last time are not present. Some of them were in the Chamber when I began talking, but I have had the usual effect, and they have disappeared. The conferees reported a substitute for the provision that was put in by the Senate authorizing the development of this power, appropriating money to make another survey, and the argument was used that this survey had become old and that we had better have another one. That contention prevailed and another survey was made. The last survey came at the time when prices were at their peak. Estimates were made. I am sorry the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has disappeared, as what I am saying is principally in answer to his question.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator from Washington is in the chair.

Mr. NORRIS. He will give better attention, then, than he would if he were in his seat. He can not help listening now.

I will say to the Senator from Washington that the next survey that was made did provide for a development which would interfere with the falls. The item provided for the construction of two dams; there were several others contemplated, but there were to be two main dams in the Potomac River. One was similar to that I have heretofore described, in the same place where Langfitt's report put it, at the District line, making the same sort of a lake, 9 miles long; but to add to the power there was to be constructed another dam up there to get the benefit of the drop of the water which comes over the falls, a development which, as far as financial considerations are concerned, would be cheaper than the other, and would add greatly to the power possibilities, increasing them about a third.

The Senate again took that up, and put the provision in the Army appropriation bill. The House again rejected it, it came back, and, although I did what I could in my feeble way to prevent the Senate from taking favorable action on the conference report, the Senate adopted the report, and the provision was stricken out. The conferees on the part of the Senate were not friendly to it, as a matter of fact, and most of them, anyway, went into the conference unfriendly and came back into the Senate with the provision stricken out, and it went out of the bill again.

Time is passing. It will not be more than a few years before it again can be said, "This survey is old. We shall have to make a new one. Maybe the water is running the other way in the Potomac River by this time. It may be that it is going uphill instead of down, and we will have to have a different kind of a development." We will spend $20,000 or $25,000 more to make another survey. If the survey is honestly made, the same report will come in again; that is, "Develop it. It is one of the greatest water-power possibilities in the world." Then it will be stricken out again.

A Senator asks me why, and echo answers, "Why?" It is just the same as everything else of that kind. There is always enough power and influence in people and corporations who do not want the development made to prevent action. So far they have succeeded every time. It does not follow, of course, that any Member of the Senate or of the House is derelict in his duty, because this comes as an improvement for the District of Columbia, principally, and, as everybody knows, Members of the Senate and of the House have more than they can attend to in their own States and in their own districts, and they can not give attention to this. But, Mr. President, it is a moral sin, an economic sin, that the water going down the Potomac River, which would make power enough to turn every wheel in the District of Columbia, light every home and every street, should go to waste year after year, year after year, that wonderful water tumbling down over the rocks within sight of the dome of the Capitol. Yet we talk of efficiency, yet we talk of conservation, and we go out and preach conservation, when at our very feet there is tumbling down the power that would save 140,000 tons of coal in the Capital City every winter, with coal now $15.50 a ton.

It is almost enough to drive a man insane to think that an intelligent Government, that wise statesmen under this Capitol dome, should year after year throw aside public money to make surveys which always tell the same story of great power possibilities unharnessed going to waste down to the sea, as they have been for the hundreds of years that have passed, we sitting idly by while it goes on, spending the money of the people for other purposes, when every light that shines in the District, every car that runs, every wheel that turns, every house that has a light ought to be supplied and furnished by this great white power. After the plant was once constructed it would cost comparatively nothing to keep it going year after year.

The last report which was made was one of the best. The weak point in the Potomac power as a power proposition—and it has only one weak point—is that there is a great difference between the maximum and the minimum flow of the Potomac River.

I am speaking only from memory, of course, but it was estimated that the average power which would be developed through the year by this one dam, not speaking of the other, would be 66,000 horsepower. It went up to as high as 90,000 horsepower, and a few days in the year, on an average only a day or two every year—and in some years there would be no such condition—it went down to as low as eleven or twelve thousand horsepower.

So the development of storage dams in the tributaries of the Potomac River is important, and the last report goes into that. The last report of the Army engineers shows how that can be done, and shows how this expenditure can be made, building two dams on the Potomac; yes, and the third dam. One is to increase the present dam, which exists up there for the water supply of the District, and then there are to be several other dams in the tributaries, which will store large quantities of water and equalize the flow of the Potomac River over those dams, so that we would have a steady flow the year around.

This report shows that, paying war prices for labor and for materials, at the very peak, in 50 years, as I remember it, it would pay back every penny it cost. In the meantime it would reduce the cost of electricity to the consumers of the District by 50 per cent, and there could be enough set aside, as I said, to pay the whole cost back in 50 years, and there could be enough set aside to keep it in repair; so that at the end of 50 years we would have saved 140,000 tons of coal every year, and we would have saved the people of this District and this city one-half of the cost of their electricity, and we would have it all on our hands, all paid for, without a cent of expense thereafter. From that on, all we would have to consider would be the cost of operation. It would make electricity so cheap that when you turned it on in your house you would never stop to turn it off, because it would cost you more to turn it off than it would to pay the bill for the electricity.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. If I understand the Senator aright, his statement was that the maximum amount of horsepower which might be developed at Great Falls would be 60,000?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it would be more than that. I was speaking only of the one dam.

Mr. ASHURST. What would be the maximum?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not give that. I can not give the figures from memory, but it would be more than that.

Mr. ASHURST. More than 60,000 horsepower?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; more than that.

The demand for horsepower in the District of Columbia in 1920 was 95,000 horsepower. I agree with the Senator that it is a pity that the people of this District should be fleeced monthly by being required to pay not two prices but three prices for electric current. No people except the quiescent people of this District would permit such extortion as the electric light and gas companies practice upon them; but the people are helpless, having no representation, and it seems to me that Congress should at the earliest moment develop the horsepower at Great Falls.

I join with the Senator from Nebraska in his repeated demand that the hydroelectric power at Great Falls, now dormant, ought early to be developed.

I announce here and on all other opportunities that may be presented to me I shall contribute my modest mite, small though it be, toward the development of these falls.

I am in favor of the joint resolution proposed by the Senator from Maine. I believe if the project that he advocates were adopted there would be no city whose environments were garnished more beautifully than would be the environments of Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to offer an amendment. Of course, I did not know this matter was coming up, or I would have been prepared for it. I would like to have the joint resolution go over, so that I can prepare an amendment. I want to offer an amendment that in effect will say that in making the survey the surveyor or the department shall have in contemplation the development of the water power of Great Falls as outlined in a Senate document which I can get and to which I wish to refer.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I hope, therefore, at this stage the Senator from Maine will consent to let the joint resolution go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. If the joint resolution should go over until to-morrow, I am going to move to take up the appropriation bill which I have in charge, and I shall be glad to consent to lay that aside temporarily at any time to dispose of the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I will be ready to present the amendment to-morrow.

Mr. FERNALD. Could not the Senator from Nebraska prepare his amendment now? I think he can explain it, so that the Assistant Secretary can frame it. I am perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. NORRIS. It would be in the form of a new section, section 3, that in making the survey provided for in section 1 the department shall make such survey on the theory that the development of water power at Great Falls shall be considered as outlined in Senate Document No. —, and I will have to supply the number.

Mr. FERNALD. If the Senator will perfect his amendment, I have no objection to it. I think I understand very well what he has in mind.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Maine has no objection to the amendment?

Mr. FERNALD. None at all.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he expedite the passage of the joint resolution, and I hope it will not go over until to-morrow. It is well known that it has displaced other business that has been before the Senate and debated for several days. I have a statement concerning the proposed legislation which was displaced that I would like to make. I trust that the joint resolution will be disposed of in order that the way may be cleared for the consideration of the joint resolution which was displaced by it.

Mr. FERNALD. I feel quite certain that the Senator from Nebraska and myself have a very good understanding about the matter, and I am willing to accept an amendment such as he has suggested. I am sure he will have it perfected very shortly.

Mr. NORRIS. I have the amendment perfected now, and I will ask the Assistant Secretary to read it. I think it will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. In making the survey provided for in section 1 of this joint resolution, the Chief of Engineers shall take into consideration any and all plans for the development of the water power of Great Falls and the dams and bodies of water made necessary thereby.

Mr. FERNALD. I accept the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to suggest that there be added a provision that the department or Chief of Engineers shall make no suggestion that will interfere with the development of the contemplated park system.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the object of it all. I shall be glad to have that added.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] desires to bring up an appropriation bill and I join with him in desiring early action. I am not disposed to be captious and punctilious, but I understood, and I believe Senators generally understood, that the calendar was to be called.

I refer in particular to one bill that has passed the House providing for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts. It is necessary at the earliest date that a bill should be passed that will make lands within the Federal irrigation projects eligible for farm loans. An amendment will be offered by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and I believe there will be no objection to it as it has been carefully worked out.

I know that every Senator here desires to observe every agreement made, whether in writing or not. I believe that it was the implied understanding that we should take up the calendar and go through with it to the end. We broke off on Monday at 2 o'clock under the rule, and yesterday the hour of 2 o'clock came and the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] delivered a very able address. No one felt like asking for the calendar because we were interested in his speech. But I submit that at this time we should recur to the calendar where we left off yesterday and go through with it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Monday is calendar day and undoubtedly we can finish the calendar on that day. I pledge the Senator that I shall ask unanimous consent that we may meet some night to complete it if we can not complete it in the daytime. I think the appropriation bill which I have in charge will only take a short time, and after it is disposed of I am willing to go on with the calendar. I am just as anxious to have the calendar disposed of as is the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe that.

Mr. CURTIS. I have some bills on the calendar in which I am specially interested.

Mr. ASHURST. I have sat here three days believing that we were to go through the calendar, and I want to know if I was correct. I wondered if I was in error when I absorbed the idea that we were to call the calendar from one end to the other.

Mr. CURTIS. That was the intention, and had not the speech been made yesterday by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] the calendar would have been completed. No doubt we can complete the calendar on Monday. There are only two or three more pages of it left.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, may I ask that the joint resolution be disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] as modified, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add a new section to the joint resolution to be known as section 3 and to read as follows.

SEC. 3. In making the survey provided in section 1 of this joint resolution the Chief of Engineers shall take into consideration any and all plans for the development of the water power of Great Falls and the dams and bodies of water made necessary thereby, and shall make no suggestion for an extension of the park system of the District that shall interfere with such water-power development.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

Mr. EDGE and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. I rise to present a privileged motion. Of course I am perfectly willing the Senator shall go on to the extent of presenting the unanimous-consent request which he has prepared, but I rise for the purpose of saying that at the first opportunity I am going to submit a privileged motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to question the statement of the Senator from Kansas that the presentation of an appropriation bill is privileged. It is to be taken up in the same way that any other bill is proceeded with.

Mr. EDGE. As is well known now, the joint resolution which I sponsored has been displaced in order to consider the very interesting joint resolution which has just been passed. I have no objection to that in the slightest degree. However, I do think in all fairness to the business interests of the country, who I think in no uncertain manner have demonstrated their interest——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order. There is no motion before the Senate.

Mr. EDGE. I think I am adhering to the regular order in making a statement at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I make the point of order that there is no question before the Senate. There is no bill before the Senate to which the Senator is addressing himself.

Mr. EDGE. I desire to present a unanimous-consent agreement so that it will be before the Senate, and upon which I think I am privileged to speak.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not without unanimous consent.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall object to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed unanimous-consent request will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that at not later than 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, April 24, 1922, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. There is no such joint resolution before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is overruled. The request is for unanimous consent to vote at a certain date on the joint resolution.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, as I understand it, unanimous consent can be asked at any stage of any proceeding. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I gave notice that I would object to it, and therefore there is no use to call the roll to secure a quorum. I shall object to it.

Mr. EDGE. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to object to a vote on the joint resolution at any time?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do. The joint resolution never came before the Senate properly. It has never had consideration by the committee. It is true it is here by a poll of nine members of the committee, but half of those who signed the report are against it. I shall make a point of order on the ground that the practice of polling committees on an important joint resolution or important bill is out of order. Every bill and every joint resolution should be considered by the committee and not reported by a poll. The practice of polling a committee is all wrong.

Mr. EDGE. The joint resolution has been considered by the committee and reported by the committee in the way in which 90 per cent of all bills and resolutions are reported, as the Senator from North Carolina very well knows.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know of an important bill that has ever been reported by a poll of a committee. I know local bills are, and I know confirmations are, but important resolutions and important bills are considered by the committees, and they ought to be considered by the committees. There ought to be no poll of a committee on an important measure, and I shall object to it hereafter.

Mr. EDGE. Now, Mr. President, I wish to give notice, if I may—and then I shall be through—that I, in order that the question may be fully determined before the country, shall ask the Committee on the Judiciary to hold public hearings on the bill which is now before that committee which provides for carrying out many of the important details which are included in the joint resolution.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11065, making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, that the bill may be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments may be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the consent asked for by the Senator from Kansas is granted.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 13, to increase the appropriation "for temporary employees in the Department of State" from "$250,000" to "$275,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 23, after the word "State," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the exchange of a passenger automobile for official use of the Secretary of State, to be immediately available, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 11, after the word "maintenance," to insert "including rent outside the District of Columbia"; and in line 15, after the name "Louisiana," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$55,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For salaries and expenses of maintenance, including rent outside the District of Columbia, of passport bureaus at New York City, N. Y.; San Francisco, Calif.; Chicago, Ill.; Seattle, Wash.; and New Orleans, La., $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have only just come into the Chamber, and I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] in charge of the bill a question. First, directing his attention to page 3 of the bill, I desire to ask what is the necessity for the large list of temporary employees which are there provided for?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, there are 267 of those employees in the Passport Division. As the Senator from Utah will remember, prior to the World War only a few persons going abroad took out passports. Now, no American citizen may go abroad without a passport, and those applying for passports are standing in line in the various places where passports are issued awaiting their turn to have their applications granted. Provision has been made here for 267 extra clerks in order properly to perform that work.

I may add that the income of the passport division has increased until it now amounts to $10,000,000 annually, and the division more than pays its expenses. In view of that fact, your committee thought that the division should be granted these temporary clerks in order to perform the duties of the office as speedily as possible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I very much doubt the wisdom of charging Americans such a large sum—now that we have resumed peace relations with foreign countries—for obtaining passports for travel abroad. I think citizens desiring passports, of course, should pay whatever the costs are, but I do not think the Government should derive any revenue therefrom.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, of course, the Senator from Utah knows that in the pending bill we could not change the existing law, for that would be legislation.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. But naturally the Senator from Utah wishes that those who desire passports from the Government to obtain them as soon as possible after filing their applications?

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CURTIS. Your committee took occasion to investigate the matter, and we found that in many places citizens were standing in line to be waited upon, that condition resulting from the lack of sufficient clerks. The object of this appropriation is to provide for 267 temporary clerks in the Passport Division in order that the work may be kept current.

Mr. KING. In addition to those who are already there?

Mr. CURTIS. Most of the temporary clerks in that division were provided for in the appropriation last year, and if this appropriation is not now made those clerks will have to be discharged.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Kansas think that the large sum here proposed to be appropriated is required?

Mr. CURTIS. The committee investigated the matter very carefully, and we gave them the amount of the estimate; but, as the Senator knows, the work is increasing.

Mr. KING. Did not the other House make a full investigation in order to reach the conclusion to provide the sum which is carried in the bill as it came from the other House?

Mr. CURTIS. The House did so; but I think if the Senator from Utah will take the time to read the House hearings, as the chairman of the subcommittee did, he will find that the House placed the amount too low. The fact is that if the work of this division continues to increase as it did last year—and there are more applications now being filed, as the Senator from Utah no doubt knows—the department will have to come back here for a deficiency appropriation—and we are all anxious to avoid deficiency appropriations—or the clerks will have to be discharged and those who desire passports will be greatly delayed in securing them upon their applications.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in order that I may not have to return to this matter again, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question with respect to a clause on page 5, under the heading of "Ambassadors and ministers," where $300,000 is appropriated. The Senator will observe the words "Dominican Republic" and also "Haiti" in line 2.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether any appropriation has been made for General Russell?

Mr. CURTIS. My understanding is there has not been; but it is the hope and desire, as I understand, to have a minister appointed, and of course if we have one appointed we shall have to make an appropriation to pay his salary. There is no appropriation in this bill for the officer mentioned by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Kansas know how General Russell is paid?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that General Russell has been named as an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, as I recall, to go to Haiti; and there has been considerable query as to his status and how he is paid for the services which he is rendering there.

Mr. CURTIS. I will frankly state to the Senator from Utah that question was not raised in the committee, and I therefore made no inquiry in reference to it, because I had understood from what I considered a reliable source that it was likely a minister would be appointed to Haiti for the coming year. I judge that General Russell is not paid at all out of the general fund, but that he is simply drawing his salary from the appropriation from which he has been paid heretofore. If, however, he is drawing a salary from the diplomatic appropriations, then of course he does not draw his salary from the Army.

Mr. KING. Coming now to another question, I should like to ask the Senator what, if any, steps have been taken in this bill or in other bills before the committee of which the Senator is a member to avoid the duplication which heretofore has existed and which now exists by reason of the activities of consular officers and officers and employees and agents of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. CURTIS. I am very glad the Senator has asked that question, because there is such a duplication of work, and as chairman of the subcommittee I have made considerable investigation regarding it. I took that question up, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will remember, with the officers of the department, and I am advised data are now being secured and steps are being taken by the joint committee of which the Senator's colleague [Mr. SMOOT] is chairman to correct that duplication through the medium of a bill, which the joint committee expects to report, consolidating various functions of the governmental departments. The senior Senator from Utah advises me that he thinks an arrangement will be brought about which will be satisfactory to the Department of State and the Department of Commerce.

I regret to say that I found considerable duplication of work. I know that the department is doing all it can to get rid of that duplication, but it can not be done until all of this work is put under one department. I brought to the attention of the officers of the State Department the information which I myself had gathered by writing letters and from such other sources as were open to me, and I know that steps are being taken to remedy the situation complained of, and it is hoped that by the time of the next appropriation bill, or long before that such changes will be made as to avoid all duplication in this branch of the service.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to learn that, because it seems to me that we are maintaining two organizations which are bound to come into conflict.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to state, further, to the Senator that, if the report of the joint committee does not take care of the situation, or if that report should not be adopted, then, if I am chairman of the subcommittee next year, I am going to ask the committee to recommend some legislation, to be offered here on the floor of the Senate, designed to bring an end to that duplication, which, of course, should be ended.

Mr. KING. However, if we pass this bill and the bill which deals with the activities of the Department of Commerce, the evils which exist will be continued for the next fiscal year.

Mr. CURTIS. I doubt the accuracy of that statement, for I think—in fact, I know—that already steps are being taken to eliminate that duplication. I know that from inquiries I have already made, and while it may not all be done away with, I feel confident that it will be done away with to a great extent.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether there was brought to the attention of his committee any complaint as to the paucity of information furnished by the consular agents through the medium of the consular reports which are transmitted from various foreign countries?

Mr. CURTIS. No complaints of that character have been brought to my attention from any source whatever. Had such complaints been brought to the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee or to the attention of the committee, I should have investigated them. I am advised by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that no such complaints have been received by the committee.

Mr. KING. I have had a number of complaints relative to the lack of information furnished by our consular representatives.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator will forward those complaints to me, it will give me pleasure to bring them to the attention of the State Department and to urge the State Department at once to take steps to remedy the situation to which the Senator refers.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the attention of the committee was called to the lack of—I was about to say ability, but I will not use that term—the lack of interest exhibited by many of the subordinates in the ambassadorial and ministerial branches of the Government?

Mr. CURTIS. The attention of the committee was not brought to any such complaints; but I have had letters from and have talked with some Americans who have been abroad—and I am sorry a certain Senator is not here, because he spoke to me of the matter—and I find that such complaints of that character as have been made have been due in great measure to the fact that we have not in some of our embassies and other branches of our foreign service a sufficient number of clerks and assistants to perform the duties and to give to visitors the attention which they really require.

Mr. KING. A good many visitors have told me that clerks and subordinates in the offices of ministers show very little interest in Americans, and very much of a disinclination to exhibit any courtesy or to aid them in getting their passports viséed, or to furnish them information with respect to other countries to which they are going.

Mr. CURTIS. As I said a moment ago to the Senator, if he will bring any complaints of that character to my attention, as chairman of the subcommittee, it will give me pleasure to take them up with the State Department.

Mr. KING. I called the attention of some of the State Department officials to some such complaints.

Mr. CURTIS. I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator in his efforts if he will let me know what they are.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to communicate with the Senator.

May I inquire of the Senator as to just one further matter? How does the appropriation for the Department of State compare with the appropriations, say, in 1916 and 1917, before we got into the war?

Mr. CURTIS. I have not the data with me, but I should judge that there is a small increase over those years. I may state that we are gradually cutting down the expenditures, and that our appropriation in this bill is some $6,000,000 less than it was for the current fiscal year, which will expire on July 1. I think that shows that the committee and the department are trying to reduce expenditures.

Mr. KING. Of course, during the war it was imperative that the expenditures should be increased.

Mr. CURTIS. They were very greatly increased, yes; and the committee is doing everything it can. I want to say that the subcommittee went into every item in this bill. We did not take anything for granted. We asked questions and asked for an explanation upon every item contained in the bill.

Mr. KING. How do these items compare with the Budget recommendations?

Mr. CURTIS. There is not a single increase over the Budget, and the bill carries a million dollars less than was estimated by the Budget.

Mr. KING. Then the Senate is more economical than the Budget?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not want to put it that way. We thought that in some cases the Budget had estimated amounts which we, from our experience in making appropriations, could afford to reduce; and so we have reduced the appropriations a million dollars below the estimate of the Budget.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator will agree with the view that some of us expressed at the time we passed the Budget law, that if any economies were effected they would have to be effected by the legislative branch of the Government rather than by the executive branch.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I would hardly say that, because the Budget report was several million dollars below the amount carried last year, and I think the Budget has shown a disposition to reduce appropriations.

Mr. KING. The Senator must know that during the war, in all departments—the War Department, the Navy Department, the State Department, and others—the expenses were very much greater than they would be in normal times.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator realizes that; but the Senator also realizes that in this passport matter the expenses are bound to be more now than they were before our entering the war.

Mr. KING. That is quite likely; but, generally speaking, the departments of the Government during the war assumed responsibilities and duties and obligations very much larger than those in peace times, and the expectation was that as soon as possible we would get down to pre-war conditions.

Mr. CURTIS. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, line 1, to increase the salary of the Turkish secretary of embassy to Turkey from "$3,600" to "$5,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 7, to increase the salary of the Turkish assistant secretary of embassy to Turkey from "$2,000" to "$4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service from "$403,600" to "$407,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 12, to increase the appropriation for employment of necessary clerks at embassies and legations from "$300,000" to "$394,828."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 4, after the word "interpreters," to insert "translators"; in line 5, after the word "compensation," to insert "and rent"; and at the end of line 17, after the word "mission," to strike out "$700,000" and to insert "$800,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, repairs, postage, telegrams, furniture, typewriters, including exchange of same, messenger service, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreters, translators, and the compensation and rent of dispatch agents at London, New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, including such loss on bills of exchange to officers of the United States Court for China, and payment in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized: Provided, That no part of this sum appropriated for contingent expenses, foreign missions, shall be expended for salaries or wages of persons not American citizens performing clerical services, whether officially designated as clerks or not, in any foreign mission, $800,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not advised as to the reason for such a large appropriation for contingent expenses. It seems to me that $800,000 is rather excessive, in view of the liberal appropriations made in other parts of the bill for embassies and for clerks and for transportation and various incidentals.

Mr. CURTIS. They had $992,000 for this work in 1921. They had $800,000 last year and they estimated $800,000 this year. There has been a great increase in the telegraph bills and other expenses, rents, and messengers. I will state to the Senator that we went over this item article by article, as will be shown by the notes on the margin of the bill, and the committee was unanimous in favor of the increase that is made there.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague also that 20 new legations are to be established this year out of this appropriation that were not established in the years past on account of the war.

Mr. KING. Let me say to my colleague that the other provisions of the bill carry appropriations for those legations.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not the general expenses. These cover the general expenses for all of the legations.

Mr. KING. The rent of the legations?

Mr. CURTIS. Rents, telegrams, messengers, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. Translators, and so forth, for all legations; and I will say to the Senator that this is much less than it used to be in ordinary times.

Mr. KING. Was evidence brought before the committee showing the reason for increasing the appropriation $100,000 above the amount allowed by the House?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; there was, as I stated a moment ago. We asked the department to present to us an itemized statement, and we have it here in the notes on the margins of our bills, showing each item asked for, and they total up this $800,000. They had that amount last year and used it. They had $992,000 in 1921.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague right here that the reason for the various increases in the bill is that these new legations must be established now, and, of course, in establishing them we have to provide money for their maintenance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 9, line 5, to increase the appropriation for salaries of consuls general, consuls, and vice consuls from "$1,874,500" to "$1,974,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 10, to increase the total appropriation for salaries of the Consular Service from "$1,909,500" to "$2,009,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 23, to increase the appropriation for allowance for clerk hire at consulates from "$1,350,000" to "$1,400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 20, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses, United States consulates, from "$1,100,000" to "$1,200,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 2, to increase the appropriation for relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries, and in the Panama Canal Zone, and shipwrecked American seamen in the Territory of Alaska, in the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and the Virgin Islands, from "$150,000" to "$220,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 15, on page 11, the last paragraph read being:

EXPENSES, PASSPORT CONTROL ACT.

For expenses of regulating entry into the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1918, $350,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire about the item of $350,000 for expenses, passport control act, in view of the liberal appropriations made for the Immigration Inspection Service and the liberal appropriation made in this bill for the passport division.

Mr. CURTIS. They had last year $600,000. The department asked the Bureau of the Budget to give them $425,000, and the House gave them $350,000, and after very careful consideration the Senate committee left the appropriation at the amount put in by the House. That, if the Senator will notice, is $250,000 less than they had this year, and it is some $75,000 less than the estimate. The committee took that into consideration. That is why they reduced the appropriation, but we thought it was cut just as much as it could be this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, line 24, after the word "Statutes," to strike out "$50,000" and to insert "$65,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

To pay the salaries of ambassadors, ministers, consuls, vice consuls, and other officers of the United States for the period actually and necessarily occupied in receiving instructions and in making transits to and from their posts, and while awaiting recognition and authority to act in pursuance with the provisions of section 1740 of the Revised Statutes, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 10, after the word "absence," to strike out "$275,000" and to insert "$300,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

To pay the itemized and verified statements of the actual and necessary expenses of transportation and subsistence, under such regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, of diplomatic and consular officers and clerks in embassies, legations, and consulates and their families and effects in going to and returning from their posts, or of such officers and clerks when traveling under orders of the Secretary of State, but not including any expense incurred in connection with leaves of absence, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 18, after the word "Statutes," to strike out "$100,000" and to insert "$400,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States and to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds," on page 13, after line 12, to insert.

For expenses of the alteration, repair, and furnishing of the American Embassy building in London, England, located at Nos 13–14 Prince's Gate, including the installation and repair of heating, lighting, and electrical apparatus, and such other items as the Secretary of State shall deem proper, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, on page 14, at the end of line 24, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for the salary of a commissioner.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire the reason for the elimination of the proviso.

Mr. CURTIS. The committee was satisfied that with that amount of money they could appoint a commissioner there. There is no commissioner now. The work is being done by a clerk. Mexico has a commissioner, and a number of complaints are coming up from Texas and from New Mexico and from the border States, and they are all asking for a commissioner. We thought that the department ought to be given authority to appoint a commissioner if they saw fit.

The Senator can realize that with a commissioner on the Mexican side a great deal of damage might result to an American citizen claiming damages for anything that might have occurred when it had to be determined where the river ran at a certain date, for instance; and we must have somebody to protect our interests. This is very strongly urged by the State of Texas. The Representative from that district appeared before the committee and made a strong showing, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] appeared before the committee in person and made a very strong appeal. They asked us to put in $25,000. That was the amount estimated by the department. The House reduced the amount, and the Senate committee accepted the amount put in by the House, but thought the department should be given authority to appoint a commissioner, if necessary.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator if this is a permanent commission?

Mr. CURTIS. It is a treaty commission, and will last as long as the Rio Grande River is a boundary between the two countries.

Mr. KING. It adjusts the boundary resulting from the fluctuations of the river?

Mr. CURTIS. It does.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me one moment, because the matter has been before our committee a great deal, I think the commission has been in existence something like 30 years or more, and there never will be an end of the matter until we make a new arrangement and run an arbitrary line. The river shifts every year, and they have to make a new arrangement about the bancos, and so forth. It ought to be entirely changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 15, at the end of line 23, after the word "State," to strike out "$30,000" and to insert "$54,000", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, in conformity with the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties, including employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, draftsmen, and clerks as are necessary; and for the more effective demarcation and mapping, pursuant to the treaty of April 11, 1908, between the United States and Great Britain, of the land and water boundary line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, as established under existing treaties, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, including the salaries of the commissioner and the necessary engineers, surveyors, draftsmen, computers, and clerks in the field and at the seat of government, expense of printing and necessary traveling, for payment for timber necessarily cut in determining the boundary line not to exceed $500, and commutation to members of the field force while on field duty or actual expenses not exceeding $5 per day each, to be expended in accordance with regulations from time to time prescribed by the Secretary of State, $54,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 16, to strike out "$1,500" and to insert "$2,550," so as to make the paragraph read:

For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission, and the expenses of a commission, including preparation of reports, $2,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 2, after the word "and," to strike out "that," so as to make the paragraph read:

For printing and binding for the Pan American Union, and the Public Printer is authorized to print an edition of the monthly bulletin, not to exceed 6,000 copies per month, for distribution by the union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 7, to reduce the appropriation for the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1923 from $19,577 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 15, to reduce the total appropriation for the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, from $29,577 to $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 6, to strike out:

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, as follows:

Salaries and expenses of the tribunal: For the payment by the United States of one-half of the following expenses: For three arbitrators for three months, at $1,200 each per month, $10,800; stenographers for arbitrators, for three months, at $120 per month, $360; traveling expenses of arbitrators, $4,000; reporting proceedings, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and for printing, stationery, and supplies, $500; in all, $10,330;

For rent of office for joint secretaries, $480;

Salaries, United States agency: Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum; counsel and joint secretary, who shall also act as disbursing clerk, $3,000 per annum; two counsel, at $2,750 each per annum; one law clerk, $2,240 per annum; two stenographers, at $1,440 each per annum; and messenger, $840 per annum; in all, $26,960;

Expenses, United States agency: Necessary and contingent expenses, $15,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, including salary and expenses of the tribunal, and of the agent, counsel, joint secretary, and other assistants, contingent expenses, and personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $72,430.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Research Council," on page 22, after line 15, to strike out:

To pay the annual share of the United States, as an adhering member of the International Research Council and of the Associated Unions, organized at Brussels, July 18–28, 1919, as follows: International Research Council, $129; International Astronomical Union, $772; International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry, $290; International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, $1,338; International Union of Mathematics, $129; in all, $2,658, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

To pay the annual share of the United States, as an adhering member of the International Research Council and of the Associated Unions, organized at Brussels, July 18–28, 1919, as follows: International Research Council, $200; International Astronomical Union, $1,200; International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry, $450; International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, $2,080; International Union of Mathematics, $100; in all, $4,030, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 3, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL TRADE-MARK REGISTRATION BUREAU QUOTA OF UNITED STATES.

For the annual share of the United States for the expenses of the maintenance of the International Trade-Mark Registration Bureau at Habana, including salaries of the director and counselor, assistant director and counselor, clerks, translators, secretary to the director, stenographers and typewriters, messenger, watchmen, and laborers, rent of quarters, stationery and supplies, including the purchase of books, postage, traveling expenses, and the cost of printing the bulletin, $9,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 9, after the word "appropriation," to strike out "of $275,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

The appropriation for the transportation of diplomatic and consular officers carried elsewhere in this act shall be available for the transportation of the officers of the United States Court for China to the same extent as for the transportation of such diplomatic and consular officers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 13, to insert:

REVISION OF CHINESE CUSTOMS TARIFF.

To enable the United States Government to carry out its obligations arising under the treaty relating to the Chinese customs tariff signed February 6, 1922, $47,750, to be immediately available.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts just exactly what the modus operandi is for enforcing the treaty?

Mr. LODGE. The appropriation is desired to carry out the terms of the treaty which provides for the establishment of a commission, on which each one of the signatory powers has a member, for the revision of the customs tariffs. It is a treaty obligation.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with the treaty. It seemed to me, from my point of view, an improper treaty, and I voted against it.

Mr. LODGE. We have had a treaty since 1853.

Mr. KING. I was wondering why it required so large an appropriation. The work seems to me to be rather clerical, the assembling of data already available, and amplifying regulations already in existence.

Mr. LODGE. It was hoped that we would be able to take this step toward bringing about the autonomy of China. In the first place, we have to revise the customs tariffs in order to carry out this provision of the treaty:

That the customs schedule of duties on imports into China adopted by the Tariff Revision Commission at Shanghai on December 19, 1918—

That is, the treaty we ratified a month or more ago—

shall forthwith be revised so that the rates of duty shall be equivalent to 5 per cent effective, as provided for in the several commercial treaties to which China is a party.

A revision commission shall meet at Shanghai—

And so forth.

The commission shall be composed of representatives of the powers named and of representatives of any additional powers having governments at present recognized—

And so forth.

This is for that work, which is expected to last a year, and which is very difficult work, indeed. We pay our tariff commissioners a good deal more than that.

Mr. KING. I do not object to a reasonable amount to carry out the terms of the treaty. Though I opposed the treaty, I realize that we are in honor bound to live up to its terms. I believed we were interfering with the fiscal autonomy—indeed, with the sovereign rights—of a friendly nation when we entered into the treaty, and that our course was in contravention of the traditional policy of the United States, which was not to interfere with the territorial integrity or the political independence of a friendly nation.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfectly true, it does interfere with the autonomy of China, and that is a thing we have been interfering with for about 80 years. These treaties exist, and, as the Senator knows, as it was all set out by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Chinese did not want to have a return to autonomy immediately, and the best we could do was to give them these increases. Of course, China has the right, as the Senator from Alabama pointed out, to renounce these treaties.

Mr. KING. Yes; I appreciate that fact.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a question as to what is right or what is wrong; it is a question of what is best to be done under these circumstances. As to the appropriation, I know that the estimates have been made as closely as possible. I think the Senator from Kansas probably has the detailed estimates, showing what this appropriation is to be used for. I do not think the work can be done possibly for less.

Mr. KING. I did not rise for the purpose of challenging the making of an appropriation, but merely to inquire as to whether so large an amount is necessary, in view of the fact, as I supposed, that the data are already available.

Mr. LODGE. It is a very complicated and difficult thing to collect data and to settle all the treaties with all the different nations and revise the tariffs.

Mr. KING. I shall ask for no record vote on it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 18, after the word "pardons," to strike out "$3,600" and to insert "$4,200," so as to read:

Attorney in charge of pardons, $4,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had not noticed that we had come to the end of the provisions for the Department of State, and I should like at this point to be allowed to offer one or two amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. Unanimous consent was given that we would complete the bill before any outside amendments were offered. However, if the Senator desires to leave the Chamber, I am perfectly willing that he should offer his amendments now.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not want to leave the Chamber.

Mr. CURTIS. I prefer to have the bill completed and then to have outside amendments offered.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I have nothing to do with the Department of Justice appropriations, but I have some amendments that I desire to offer to the diplomatic and consular provisions, and I do not want to be foreclosed.

Mr. KING. I suggest that the Senator offer his amendments now, and then we can vote on them later.

Mr. LODGE. The amendments are all here. I shall offer them when we are ready to dispose of them.

Mr. CURTIS. I would prefer that that course be followed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I direct the attention of the committee to an item which appears not to be an amendment of the House text. It provides for six assistant attorneys general. Does that change existing law?

Mr. CURTIS. It is the same number they had last year.

Mr. KING. During the war, and particularly when there was so much complaint about the activity of aliens, because of the vast amount of work which devolved upon the Department of Justice on account of the war, my recollection is that we increased the number of employees of that department. May I inquire of the Senator whether there has been any reduction?

Mr. CURTIS. There is a reduction in this bill in the number of attorneys and as to several other employees, although they state that on account of the claims of various kinds which are pending there is a great deal more work to be done now in that department than there was before.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator state the cost of the Department of Justice now as compared with the cost in 1916?

Mr. CURTIS. I have not those figures at hand. I had no idea that that question would be asked, or I would have had them. I can give the Senator the information later on if he desires to have it.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that the cost now is very much greater than it was.

Mr. CURTIS. That naturally would be the case. The Senator must remember that there are suits pending between the United States and other countries, the crime wave has increased all over the country, and there are many more cases pending.

Mr. SMOOT. Prohibition cases.

Mr. CURTIS. There are cases under the prohibition enforcement laws, cases involving unsettled contracts growing out of the war, and cases under the patent laws. I have here a memorandum of the amount of money recovered by the Government for the departments, and my recollection is that in two or three cases they have recovered amounts, in individual suits and for the Treasury Department, somewhere between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000. That is money already recovered or to be recovered.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator means by that that back taxes have been collected.

Mr. CURTIS. No; it refers to actual recoveries in cases which were brought and where there were contests.

Mr. KING. Growing out of war contracts or growing out of cases where it was alleged taxes had not been paid?

Mr. CURTIS. Growing out of various subjects where there were broken contracts and violations of the law.

Mr. KING. Those arose under the Internal Revenue Bureau of the Government, did they not?

Mr. CURTIS. Out of the Crucible Steel cases, and various other claims. They recovered specifically in one case $8,000,000, in another case $10,000,000, and in another $8,500,000. Those were separate cases brought by the Department of Justice, where the money went through the Department of Justice; and then there were controversies which turned into the Treasury between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000, or will, when they are settled.

Mr. KING. I repeat, Mr. President, rather by way of interrogatory than a declaratory statement, that it has been alleged by the Treasury Department that there were cases involving more than $1,000,000,000 of uncollected taxes, some of which cases were contested, and it was reported that the Government of the United States would derive from that source a very large amount, indeed, hundreds of millions of dollars, which would go to meet the supposed deficit which would arise in meeting the obligations of the Government.

Mr. CURTIS. That class of claims is not included in this item. The claims I have referred to were suits which had been brought by the Department of Justice directly for violations of the law, as in the Crucible Steel case, and in other cases. The controversies where there was a recovery of between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000 were suits which came from the Treasury Department. They were not for the nonpayment of taxes, the class mentioned by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I would be glad to know, if the Senator can advise me, what those cases were which came from the Treasury Department.

Mr. CURTIS. I have not the information as to the cases here. They gave us simply a statement of the total amount, and we were satisfied from the statements made by the Department of Justice that they were doing that work, and that they needed this amount of money, and we gave it to them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my colleague speaks of claims on the part of the Government involving a billion dollars. Many of those claims have been settled, but I want to say frankly that of late the Government has been compelled to refund about as much money as we have collected—that is, on account of overtaxation—and I think that the estimate of a billion dollars that would be collected because of false returns is exaggerated. We can not collect that amount——

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think many of the Government claims were just. Upon the face of the returns as reported it might tend to show that there was an endeavor to evade taxation, but in a great many of the cases, involving great sums of money, after the investigation had been made and the parties' books examined it has been demonstrated beyond question of doubt that the Government of the United States owed the taxpayer rather than the taxpayer owing the Government.

Mr. KING. I think my colleague is right. I recall that only recently within a deficiency bill there was an item of some twenty-odd million dollars as a refund for taxes which had been improperly collected.

Mr. SMOOT. And there will be for a number of years, I will say to my colleague, appropriations of that character.

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SMOOT. As to the number of employees in the Department of Justice, I have the statistics for perhaps a year back showing every one of the employees, together with the increases or decreases. In the Department of Justice there have been, with the exception, I think, of two months, gradual decreases in the number of employees, not very many, but all the way from 2 to 20 each month. The work of the department has, in fact, doubled in many cases.

Mr. KING. I am entirely willing to vote for whatever is necessary for the enforcement of all laws. It is often claimed that there is a growing disrespect of law and all proper authority. Without commenting upon these claims I do not hesitate to aver that failure to enforce criminal statutes will ultimately weaken authority and undermine government. With reference to the Attorney General's office, I have upon several occasions mentioned Colonel Goff and the excellent work which he is doing. I think he perceives the importance of enforcing the Sherman law and preventing the oppressive and destructive projects of trusts, monopolies, and combinations in restraint of trade and to stifle competition.

I have felt, however, that the Department of Justice has not accomplished all that it could or should have accomplished in its attacks upon illegal combinations which are treating with contempt the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. During the war, as was indicated yesterday in the debate upon the so-called Edge joint resolution, many combinations in the industrial field and in business enterprises were formed. We were mobilizing all our strength and resources on the prosecution of the war, and many corporations as well as individuals took advantage of the situation and organized combinations to advance prices and to destroy competition. Conspiracies in restraint of trade were formed and monopolies multiplied. They invaded many lines of business, and ramified all parts of the law.

There were many retail organizations formed, and they exploited the people. Manufacturing concerns were drawn within the vicious circle of confederacies and combinations—all having for their object the maintenance of high prices, the limiting of production, the prevention of competition, and the exploitation of the people. We had the Cement Trust and the lumber combines, and the plumbers' conspiracies and the builders' corrupt agreements, and hundreds of organizations, secret and open, all oppressing and robbing the consuming public. The high prices were in part due to these criminal combinations—the promoters of which should have been prosecuted criminally and sent to the penitentiary. There are combinations to-day which defy the Sherman law.

The Department of Justice should not in its zeal to prosecute small offenders overlook these great malefactors whose acts so disastrously affect the social and economic life of the people. This administration has been in power more than one year. I have felt that it has not been sufficiently earnest in bringing before the criminal courts those who are transgressing the provisions of the Sherman and the Clayton Acts. It has been said that the Sherman law is a dead letter. I deny it. All that is needed is vigorous prosecutors. If the Department of Justice will vigorously enforce the criminal provisions of the law there will be convictions and a speedy revision of the methods of business upon the part of many corporations; and the law of supply and demand will operate more freely to the advantage of the entire country.

As stated, I shall gladly give to the Department of Justice whatever it requires to enforce the laws of Congress. And I particularly desire that it receive such appropriations as will enable it to enforce the Sherman and Clayton Acts. Efforts are being made to nullify these statutes and to give to business a free field to form combinations such as was revealed in the Hardwood Lumber Co. case.

Our economic and industrial system was founded upon the competitive theory. Adam Smith gave to us his great plan, and our people have grown in power and in wealth under the policies established by the fathers of this Republic. If we do not prevent combinations and trusts, then the people will demand the destruction of business enterprises, big and little, which are within confederations. If business is wise, it will not challenge public opinion. There must be freedom in business and the free application of the competitive theory. If not, then an irresistible demand will be made that the Government take charge of business and place it under the authority of Federal commissioners and bureaucrats. It is either freedom of trade, freedom from combinations, or Federal control.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Attorney General advised the committee that he has 27 attorneys ready to go to work, and in fact who are already working on that matter now.

Mr. KING. To enforce the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to know that. I am sure that will be reassuring to the legitimate and honest business interests of the United States. There have been too many cases like the Hardwood Lumber case and the Lumber Companies case from the Northwest, the report of which was recently filed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 27, in line 20, after the numerals "$2,000," to insert "Chief of division of investigation, $4,000."

Mr. KING. May I inquire what the item is?

Mr. CURTIS. That is for an office that had not been filled for four months, and for some reason the House left it out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 7, under the subtitle "Division of Accounts," after the word "chief," to strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500."

Mr. KING. What is the reason for the increase in this item?

Mr. CURTIS. A showing was made, and the committee was asked to give this chief $3,500. He has as much work to perform as other chiefs, but as the other chiefs are being paid $3,500 the committee thought it best to fix his salary at $3,500 and so bring him in the same class with the others.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether his duties relate merely to work in the Department of Justice?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; entirely.

Mr. KING. Is it necessary to have a separate division of accounts there?

Mr. CURTIS. It is. I think he is about the busiest man in the department.

Mr. KING. I think it is a bad time to increase salaries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 11, in the total of the items for the office of the Attorney General, to strike out the numerals "$478,110" and insert in lieu thereof "$483,510."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, Department of Justice," on page 29, line 3, to increase the appropriation for furniture and repairs, including floor coverings, file holders and cases, from "$5,000" to "$6,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 16, to increase the appropriation for stationery for the Department of Justice and its several bureaus from "$12,500" to "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 22, to strike out "$37,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of buildings, care of grounds, books of reference, periodicals, typewriters and adding machines and exchange of same, street car fares not exceeding $300, and other necessaries, directly ordered by the Attorney General, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 4, to strike out "$36,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, $75,000, if space can not be assigned by the Public Buildings Commission in buildings under the control of that commission.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this seems to be a very considerable increase.

Mr. CURTIS. I will ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who is chairman of the Public Buildings Commission, which has been looking into the matter, to explain that to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to be a pretty large increase in the rental.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall be glad to explain it to the Senator from Florida. The Department of Justice made a lease of the building in which they are now located for $36,000 a year for a period of five years, with the privilege of renewing for five years. About six months after the lease was first made there developed an amendment which was desired to be made to the lease by the department, and thereupon they made a new lease a little over five years ago. The making of the new lease, by the change that was made in it, cost them the privilege of the five-year renewal period, because immediately that lease was made they began on the second period of the lease, it being a renewal of the lease. The renewal term expires now on either August 2 or November 2; I have forgotten the exact date.

The owners of the building have ordered the Department of Justice out of the building unless they pay $3 per square foot, which would mean over $300,000 a year instead of $36,000. The Department of Justice appealed to me as chairman of the Building Commission to know what to do, and whether we could place them in some Government building. We have not the room at present to do it. We are in hopes of making a shift so as to move them out of the building soon, however. I told the Department of Justice that we would recommend an appropriation of $75,000 for the rent of the building now occupied by them and no more, and if the owners of the building get any more out of the Government of the United States they will have to bring suit. That would give them a little more than 70 cents a square foot.

I recognize that is a small rent compared to what was paid in the District during the war, but the war is over, and I think we had better begin right now to say that, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, we are not going to pay war prices for rent in the District of Columbia. I do not know of a better building to start with than the Department of Justice Building, and if the Congress of the United States will support us we are going to follow that plan, and we will pay them no more than $75,000 rent if we are compelled to remain in the building. However, if we can get them out of there, we are going to do so. That in brief is the story.

Mr. FLETCHER. How does that rental compare with the rent of other buildings similarly located?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a lower rent than we are paying in some of the other buildings, I will say to the Senator, but it is not a lower rent than we paid before the war. It is, as a matter of fact, a higher rent than we paid before the war.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was in hopes we might utilize some of the Government buildings elsewhere.

Mr. SMOOT. We have every foot of space in them utilized now.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am referring to some of the temporary buildings.

Mr. SMOOT. The temporary buildings are all filled, and the departments in many of them are complaining most bitterly to the commission that they have not room and that we are crowding them so it is unhealthy for the employees. But I will assure the Senator and the Senate that every foot of space in Government buildings in the District of Columbia is going to be used if it is within the power of the Public Buildings Commission to do so.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, if we have not room and do not expect to have room, would it not be cheaper to erect new buildings?

Mr. SMOOT. That would lead us into a long discussion, but if the Senator and I had to pay all the expenses of the Government and run it as a business proposition, I know what the Senator would do, and I know what I would do. I would not pay a dollar of rent in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIAL. I agree with the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator has said that all the space in the Government buildings is being utilized.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. During the war there were erected a number of not temporary buildings but very permanent buildings in Potomac Park—the Munitions Building and the Navy Building—and I do not know how many thousand square feet of space we have there. Is it not possible to have more of the employees and offices in one room and utilize more space in those buildings?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it has been the policy of the Government, recommended by the Public Health Service, that each employee shall have 70 feet of space. They say it is unhealthy unless they have that amount of space. We have many bureaus that have not nearly 70 feet of space for each employee. If the Senator were to go down into those buildings now he would find that they are filled with a great many more people than have been occupying them in the past.

Mr. HARRISON. In both the buildings there in Potomac Park?

Mr. SMOOT. In all the buildings. We have moved out of many of the rented buildings all over the city. I know that Senators do not realize the number of buildings that were rented in the District of Columbia, rooms here and rooms there, part of a building here, a floor in this building, half of a building somewhere else. What we are trying to do is to take every one of the Government employees out of rented buildings and put them into Government-owned buildings. Every foot of space in the Government-owned buildings is going to be occupied by Government employees. What we are trying to do now is to make a shift in the different departments of the Government where we can make a thorough investigation and find that they are occupying too much space to take some employees out of one building or section of a building and move them elsewhere. We are in hopes of being able to make sufficient moves so that we can provide for the Department of Justice. That is the largest building we are now renting in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator is thoroughly familiar with this subject, being chairman of the Public Buildings Commission; but it appears to some of us that such buildings as the two in Potomac Park—which some one has suggested cover 162 acres, although I have no idea as to that—are too large, and that we should crowd more employees together and get rid of some of the rented buildings, or, if that is impossible, that we should construct buildings to take care of the employees of the public service.

Mr. SMOOT. The commission is going to make a full and complete report just as soon as it can get this matter settled permanently and can know what space will be available and what space will be required. When those facts are known we are going to tell Congress how much money we have saved in leases by making these moves and just what space we have got to provide in order to erect new buildings to care for all of the employees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON. The rooms in the two buildings in Potomac Park are quite large. If they could be divided up, of course, more space would be available. It is natural that the head of every little bureau should want a big room to himself and another room for his stenographer, and all that; but it does seem to me as though we could do more than we are doing toward reducing to a minimum the necessity of renting quarters.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that about a month and a half ago I took General Sherrill and the secretary of our commission down one morning to the Arlington Building. We went into most of the rooms from the basement to the top floor; we took an account of the space. The following day an order was issued requisitioning two complete floors in that building for other employees of the Government. Immediately upon the issuance of that order there was complaint, of course, made that the force there could not vacate the floors; that they did not have space enough; that it was more than they could possibly do; or, in other words, that the other nine floors were not sufficient for the employees of that bureau.

They stated that they could not possibly surrender the space, but the commission immediately told them if they did not have the men who could make the necessary changes the commission would send a man there to see that it was done. Then the question of the strength of the floors came up, whether we could put an additional number of people in the restricted space, together with the files, as it was intended to arrange them. It was claimed that the building had not been constructed with a view of having such an amount of weight upon the floors. Immediately the commission requested the Government architect, Mr. Wetmore, to go there and to go over the building and make an examination of them and report. He did so, and a report was made.

Then the order of the President was issued to transfer all of the agencies of the Public Health Service affecting the war veterans to the Veterans' Bureau, taking with them about 478 employees, as I remember. We are waiting now until that order is put into effect. When that is done, and those employees are transferred, the remainder of the space will be occupied by the employees of some other bureau of the Government. Until that is done, however, we can not make the moves which will be necessary; and I can not say now that we can take care of the employees of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator tell approximately what rental the United States Government pays now for buildings in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it has been cut down now to about $400,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. It used to be $800,000, did it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, more than that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator say whether or not the question of rental for the Department of Justice Building will come under the Ball Rent Act? Would that law apply to that building? In other words, would the rent of that building have to be determined by the Rent Commission?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would if complaint were made.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Government should get out, that question could be raised?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say frankly to the Senator that 70 cents a square foot is a very low rent as compared with other rents paid for office buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the corridors of some of these buildings are so crowded that it is hardly possible to get around them. Instead of enlarging the corridors we might dispense with some of the useless employees. I feel that it is a reflection upon our intelligence to employ so many messengers to guide us to the rooms of the various officials.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say that some time in the near future there will be established in all of the departments of the Government, in each of the buildings, a central office for messengers, so that whenever anybody in a particular department wants a messenger he will ring a bell for a messenger, and the messenger will be sent to him. The practice will not be followed, as it has been in the past, of having a messenger, and sometimes two or three, for every official of the Government.

Mr. DIAL. If the names of the officials were placed on the doors, we could find them without the necessity of having so many escorts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 12, after the word "binding," to strike out "the Attorney General may allot from appropriations applicable to the enforcement of law carried elsewhere in this act under the Department of Justice not to exceed a total of $150,000: Provided, That the Attorney General shall report to Congress in connection with the estimates of appropriations for the department for the fiscal year 1924 a detailed statement of such allotments and the purposes for which they are being expended," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the enforcement of the provisions of the national prohibition act of October 28, 1919, including the employment, as authorized by said act, of experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and the purchase of such supplies and equipment as may be deemed necessary by the Attorney General, including also the expense of necessary printing and binding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 7, after the name "United States," to strike out "the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, referees, and trustees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time," so as to read:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice or the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General; hire, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, including not to exceed $3,750 for purchase of one automobile, and including not to exceed $10,000 for taxicab hire to be used exclusively for the purposes set forth in this paragraph and to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, whose certificate as to the expenditure thereof shall be conclusive on the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, including not to exceed $250,000 for necessary employees at the seat of government, and including a director of the bureau of investigation at not exceeding $7,500 per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $2,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 17, to insert:

For the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, referees, and trustees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 4, to increase the appropriation for enforcement of the antitrust laws from "$225,000" to "$300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, at the end of line 4, to strike out the following:

Provided, however, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or of any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products or associations of farmers who cooperate or organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, reading over rather hastily the amendment beginning on line 5, page 34, striking out two provisos and inserting the provisos which begin in line 15, I can not see any difference in the language except in the first few words.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator will permit me, the only difference is that the proviso inserted by the Senate committee is existing law and is in the same language which has been carried in previous appropriation bills, and only applies to the particular section of the bill, whereas the provision which was inserted in the House, and which the Senate committee recommends be stricken out, I think by an inadvertence, was made to apply to the whole bill, which, of course, it should not do. That is the only difference.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are practically the same in substance.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; except that the amendment recommended by the Senate committee applies only to the immediate section, while the provision embodied in the House bill applies to the entire bill. The Senate committee followed the existing law.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment reported by the Senate committee provides "that no part of this money shall be spent," and so forth, and the provision of the House bill reads "that no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be spent."

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of line 12, page 36, the last clause read being as follows:

Porto Rico: District judge, $7,500.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the head of "District courts" I do not find any provisions for the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Are they carried in some other bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; they are carried in another bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are carried in the District bill, I presume?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 36, line 24, before the word "stenographic," to strike out "three" and to insert "five," and on page 37, line 2, to strike out "$59,140" and to insert "$62,340," so as to make the paragraph read:

COURT OF CUSTOMS APPEALS.

Salaries: Presiding judge and four associate judges, at $8,500 each; marshal, $3,000; clerk, $3,500; assistant clerk, $2,000; five stenographic clerks, at $1,600 each; stenographic reporter, $2,500; messenger, $840; in all, $62,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, at the end of line 10, to strike out "$3,965" and to insert "$5,385," and at the end of line 11, to strike out "$10,965" and to insert "$12,385," so as to make the paragraph read:

For rent of necessary quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $7,000; books and periodicals, including their exchange; stationery, supplies, traveling expenses; heat, light, and power service; drugs, chemicals, cleansers, furniture, and not to exceed $500 for printing and binding; pay of bailiffs and all other necessary employees not otherwise specifically provided for; and for such other miscellaneous expenses as may be approved by the presiding judge, $5,385; in all, $12,385.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, at the beginning of line 17, to strike out "$2,250,000" and to insert "$2,300,000," so as to read:

MARSHALS, DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, CLERKS, AND OTHER EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

For salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, including the office expenses of United States marshals in the District of Alaska, and hereafter the Attorney General shall pay the office expenses of United States marshals in the District of Alaska from the appropriation, "Salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies," services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise, services in Alaska in collecting evidence for the United States when so specially directed by the Attorney General, and maintenance, alteration, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles used in connection with the transaction of the official business of the office of United States marshal for the District of Columbia, $2,300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 10, after the word "attorney," to strike out "$900,000" and to insert "$950,000," so as to read:

For salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants, including the office expenses of United States district attorneys in Alaska, and for salaries of regularly appointed clerks to United States district attorneys for services rendered during vacancy in the office of the United States district attorney, $950,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 20, after the word "compensation," to strike out "$550,000" and to insert "$600,000," and in line 24, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$3,000" and to insert "$3,500," so as to make the paragraph read:

For regular assistants to United States district attorneys who are appointed by the Attorney General at a fixed annual compensation, $600,000: Provided, That except as otherwise prescribed by law the compensation of such of the assistant district attorneys authorized by section 8 of the act approved May 28, 1896, as the Attorney General may deem necessary may be fixed at not exceeding $3,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, at the end of line 9, to strike out "$850,000" and to insert "$1,000,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, including $200,000 for assistant attorneys to enforce the national prohibition act, and including not to exceed $50,000 for clerical help for such assistants, and for payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney General in special cases (such counsel shall not be required to take oath of office in accordance with section 366, Revised Statutes of the United States), $1,000,000, to be available for expenditure in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the provision of the bill following the amendment just agreed to and beginning in line 11. That provision reads:

For salaries of clerks of United States circuit courts of appeals and United States district courts, their deputies, and other assistants, expenses of travel and subsistence, and other expenses of conducting their respective offices, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved February 26, 1919, $1,300,000—

I direct especial attention to the proviso, which reads:

Provided further, That from and after July 1, 1922, office expenses of clerks of United States circuit courts of appeals, also the personal compensation of said clerks, their deputies, and other assistants, and their expenses of travel and subsistence, when absent from official headquarters on official business, shall be allowed after authorization and approval by the Attorney General, and shall be paid from this appropriation by the respective United States marshals designated by the Attorney General: Provided further, however, That the salaries of clerks of the United States circuit courts of appeals shall not be fixed at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum. All fees and other moneys of every character and description received by said clerks, by virtue of their offices, shall be paid into the Treasury, as in the case of clerks of United States district courts: And provided further, That from and after July 1, 1922, the salary of the clerk of the United States district court for Hawaii shall be fixed in the same manner as salaries of clerks of United States district courts under the act of February 26, 1919.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that the provision I have read deserves some consideration at this stage of the proceedings on the bill. I fear that the committee is not clearly informed with reference to this matter if they acted upon the information which the committee in the House furnished that body when the bill was under consideration there.

I find on page 4982 of the RECORD of April 4, 1922, that Mr. HUSTED made the following remark:

The third item is one in relation to the clerks of the United States circuit courts. The clerks of the United States circuit courts are paid a salary of $4,500 each, but in addition to that the fees of the clerk's office go into their own pockets.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senate committee was not deceived by that remark in any way whatever. We knew what the law was, and the practice, namely, that the salary was fixed at $4,500, and they were allowed $500 out of the fees collected, so as to make their salaries not to exceed $5,000.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am glad that the committee knew better, because there was displayed in the House a total lack of knowledge and capacity to consider such a measure.

Going on, Mr. President, it will be found that this speech would go to show that these clerks are putting all the fees into their pockets. Such is not the case. I have here a statement sent me by the clerk in the fifth circuit for the purpose of correcting this misinformation which was given out. This statement shows the excess fees paid into the Treasury of the United States for the past 12 fiscal years. These are the excess fees after all expenses connected with the office have been settled.

In 1910 there was $4,880.53 turned into the Federal Treasury.
In 1911, $2,712.78.
In 1912, $2,761.31.
In 1913, $3,451.44.
In 1914, $1,081.88.
In 1915, $1,318.63.
In 1916, $2,095.02.
In 1917, $2,876.56.
In 1918, $4,026.04.
In 1919, $1,902.41.
In 1920, $2,098.82.
In 1921, $2,880.92.
Making a total of $32,086.34.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not understand that this bill reduces the pay of the clerks of the United States circuit courts of appeals.

Mr. BROUSSARD. No. I will say that my interpretation of the provisions to which I object is that they do not reduce it, but that they fix the same maximum limit of $5,000 and leave it to the Attorney General to fix the salary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator propose to amend that in any way?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Not to amend it; but I think that the present law, which places the clerk under the jurisdiction of the circuit judge and really makes him responsible to the judge, should not be removed and then have him placed under the Attorney General, who may fix his salary at any figure not to exceed $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the clerk is now under the circuit judge. He appoints him and has control over him; but the policy of the Government in regard to all these clerkships has been to allow the Attorney General to fix the salaries instead of the fees, and we made the limit $5,000, knowing that the Attorney General would make the salary $5,000, because most of them are getting that now. Some of them do not, but those that make it have been getting $5,000; that is, they get $4,500 salary and $500 additional. As I say, I had a letter the other day from Judge Bryan, as did the Senator from Florida and others, on this same subject. I do not think the Senator can object to allowing the Attorney General to do in this respect that which he does with regard to every other clerk in the courts of the United States, and of course he will fix the salary at $5,000 where they make it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. He will fix it, under this law, at not to exceed $5,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. At not to exceed $5,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understood that there was a bill introduced in the House to reduce the salary, and that was perhaps the cause of the complaint.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. FLETCHER. This bill does not do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. There was a good deal of complaint made in the House. Mistakes were made by the Congressmen who made those statements.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree that those salaries are not too large. The clerk of the circuit court of the State in my county in Florida gets $7,500. I do not see why the clerk of the circuit court of appeals should get less than $5,000.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, if the Senators will permit me, I should like, in conclusion, to show just exactly what it costs the United States Government to pay these circuit clerks. For instance, here is a statement showing all of these receipts and the amounts paid into the Federal Treasury:

Nineteen hundred and ten to 1920, inclusive, 11 years at $3,500, $38,500.

Nineteen hundred and twenty-one, one year at $4,500—that was the time when the salary was increased—$4,500.

Total salary paid clerk in 12 years by appropriations of Congress, $43,000.

But there were turned into the Federal Treasury $32,086.34 excess of fees after paying all expenses, including traveling expenses for the clerk and his assistants, and all the help connected with the court; so that in the 12 years this office cost the United States Government $10,903.66, or an average of $909.47 per year. So the statement made in the other House that these clerks are pocketing all of these fees is purely an extravagant and an untruthful statement.

I shall not read the present law, Mr. President, but it is to be found in Thirty-first Statutes at Large, at page 639; and I ask that I may be permitted to insert that part of the statute in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Provided, That clerks of the United States circuit courts of appeals, annually and within 30 days after the 30th day of June in each year, shall make a return to the Attorney General of the United States of all the fees and emoluments of their offices respectively. Such return shall cover all fees and emoluments earned during the preceding year and also the necessary office expenses for such year, including clerk hire, the compensation of the clerk not to exceed $500 per annum as now provided by law. Such expenses, including clerk hire, shall be certified by the senior circuit judge of the proper circuit and audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department. The respective clerks of the circuit courts of appeals, after deducting such expenses and clerk hire, shall at the time of making such returns pay into the Treasury of the United States the balance of such fees and emoluments. In case the amounts claimed for such expenses and clerk hire have not been audited by such accounting officers prior to the time fixed for making such returns and payment, said clerks may retain the sums claimed by them respectively until the audit is made, and in case any sum so claimed and retained is not allowed the amount disallowed shall within 10 days after notice of disallowance be paid into the Treasury of the United States. All laws and parts of laws so far as in conflict with this proviso are hereby repealed.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It will be seen that in addition to the $4,500 fixed by the law the clerk may not receive more than $500 out of the fees of the office, thus fixing his salary at not to exceed $5,000.

Having corrected the misstatements made, I desire to make a point of order against that part of the bill which I first read, beginning on page 16 with the words "Provided further."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that a point of order would not lie against that provision. It is a House provision. The Senate did not change the House provision. The only way in which the Senator could do that would be to move to have it stricken from the bill.

Mr. BROUSSARD. This provision was not inserted by the committee, then?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all; it was a House provision.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Then I move to strike it out.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator does that, let me say that the unanimous-consent agreement was that we should consider all committee amendments first. Then, if the Senator wants to offer the amendment, he can move to strike it out.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Then, at the proper time, I shall offer an amendment to strike out that part which I first read with reference to the fixing of these salaries by the Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 43, at the end of line 23, to strike out "$80,000" and to insert "$100,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For supplies, including the exchange of typewriting and adding machines for the United States courts and judicial officers, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not know that we had passed the item of $1,000,000 on page 41.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I will recur to it; and I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas, in view of the very liberal appropriations carried in the bill for attorneys, assistant attorneys, and so forth, what is the necessity for this large sum—"$1,000,000 for assistants to the Attorney General"?

Mr. CURTIS. This is largely for the enforcement of the prohibition act.

Mr. KING. Two hundred thousand dollars of it is for the enforcement of the prohibition act.

Mr. CURTIS. Two hundred thousand dollars of it is for that purpose. Last year they had $850,000, and had to ask for a deficiency appropriation. The year before they had $1,000,000, and they have the attorneys employed now and at work under this provision, and in order to carry on the work they must have these lawyers. If they discharge them, it means that the work will stop. The Senator said a few moments ago that he wanted the cases prosecuted. The only way for them to prosecute the cases is to have these lawyers employed.

Mr. KING. I do not think there are 50 cases under the Sherman antitrust law now pending. I may be wrong, but very few cases have been brought.

Mr. CURTIS. My judgment is, from reading the hearings, that the Senator is mistaken. There are quite a number of cases pending, and more are going to be brought; and the officers of the department told the committee that they wanted to proceed to bring other cases just as fast as possible.

Mr. KING. There are a number of old cases where injunctions have been sought that have dragged along for a number of years; but my recollection is that the new cases brought by this administration to enforce the Sherman antitrust law have been very few, and there have been but a few indictments. When Mr. Untermyer was acting in New York recently, some convictions were secured. Convictions can be obtained, where criminal actions are instituted, if the cases are vigorously prosecuted. If the Department of Justice will get the facts—and act with courage and vigor—there will be no difficulty in obtaining convictions for violations of the Sherman antitrust law. There has been in the past too much of a desire to proceed civilly and to ignore the criminal features of the act.

Mr. CURTIS. They have 27 attorneys who are paid now under this section. Six of these attorneys are especially engaged in New York City in prosecuting violations of the antitrust act; and they have not enough attorneys now on the pay roll, they say, to bring the cases they want to bring, and to enforce the act. There is quite a statement made here showing that they are bringing these cases in the different cities and sections of the country; and the information furnished the committee was that they wanted to proceed and prosecute all these cases where prosecutions should be brought.

Mr. KING. Further back in the bill, the Senator will recall, provisions were made for various assistant district attorneys, and so forth.

Mr. CURTIS. I gave the number employed under that section—27 under that section, on page 34—and there are 31 employed under this provision of the bill.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, this $1,000,000, aside from the $200,000 for assistant attorneys to enforce the national prohibition act, is to be expended in the prosecution of those who have violated the Sherman law?

Mr. CURTIS. The Sherman antitrust law; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In 1921 we appropriated $1,000,000 for the purpose, and then they came to Congress for a deficiency appropriation in the year 1921, and the following year they thought they would cut it and we agreed to cut it to $600,000, thinking that perhaps there would not be the same amount of work called for. We immediately had to make an appropriation of $250,000 in the first deficiency bill; so the committee decided it would be better to give them now what we know we will have to give them ultimately, rather than to have them come in here with a deficiency bill.

Mr. KING. The Senator has not here the report showing what suits were instituted and what results were obtained by reason of this large appropriation?

Mr. CURTIS. I have not; but I will state to the Senator that the next time I have the bill up I shall bring all those data for the information of the Senator.

Mr. KING. I examined it hastily some months ago, but I have forgotten now the results obtained from these large appropriations. I have heretofore indicated that I was in favor of very liberal appropriations for the enforcement of this law, and if this is needed I shall not oppose the appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think there is any question but that it is needed. The subcommittee was unanimous for it, and so was the full committee; and, as I said a few moments ago, the subcommittee examined each of these articles, and cross-questioned the officers of the department, so that we would not make any mistake. Our idea was to keep the amount carried by this bill as low as possible.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator, however, that I think most of the Attorneys General—and I have no particular one in mind—have gotten into the habit of employing special counsel to do some work which ought to be done by the district attorneys and their assistants in the various States. I know in my own State special counsel have been sent to aid in prosecutions who did not know as much about the cases as local counsel, and who made but very slight contribution to the prosecution of the cases. The trouble is that the Department of Justice has drifted into the habit of employing a large number of special counsel, and they go roving throughout the country, giving here and there some aid to the local attorneys in prosecutions in particular States; that is, the district attorneys within the State or within the district who have the ability and are sufficiently familiar with the cases to prosecute them with as much zeal and with certainly as much success as the special counsel who may be designated. I am afraid that we are perpetuating a policy which I think it rather expensive, and certainly not proper, of relieving district attorneys of duties which they should perform and sending special counsel into their districts to perform their duties, although they are competent to discharge the same and are willing to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, in the item for purchase and rebinding of law books, on page 44, at the end of line 6, to strike out "$20,000" and to insert "$25,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That such books shall in all cases be transmitted to their successors in office; all books purchased thereunder to be marked plainly, "The property of the United States," $25,000, of which not to exceed 10 per cent, in the discretion of the Attorney General, may be used for the purchase of United States Reports and the Federal Reporter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 6, under the subhead "Penal institutions," in the items for the Leavenworth (Kans.) Penitentiary, after the word "printer," to insert "blacksmith," and at the end of line 6 to strike out "$3,600" and to insert "$4,800," so as to make the paragraph read:

For foreman, laundryman, tailor, printer, blacksmith, and shoemaker, at $1,200 each when necessary, $4,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

DISMISSALS FROM BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I do not care to interrupt the consideration of the pending bill, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to some statements and ask permission to insert in the RECORD certain newspaper clippings. I shall, then, not occupy the floor longer.

In the desperate effort to find some reason which would justify the President in issuing his Executive order striking from the rolls of the Government certain civil-service employees the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and twenty-odd chiefs of divisions, we are daily furnished with an "explanation" which is alleged to have been the reason which actuated the President in this indefensible act.

An attorney who represented Mr. Hill, the newly-appointed director, both in his contest to get this office and in his suit with his wife, who is suing him for a divorce, gave out a reason, he said, that affidavits which had been filed were the cause. It was immediately shown that those affidavits dealt with a question which the Secretary of the Treasury had previously investigated, and in connection with which he had approved everything Mr. Wilmeth had done. So that "excuse" failed.

Congressman MCFADDEN the other day was credited with a statement in which he is quoted as saying that the President is about to "find" a reason for having taken this action. That is not exactly the language he used, but is in effect what he said. Although I am not at liberty yet to publish the correspondence, but I hope to do so shortly, we all know this much, that the Congressman mentioned was very active, together with several other Congressmen and some Senators, in having the changes made for purely political reasons. I am not falling out with them about it. I presume they wanted patronage for their constituents, needed it to justify their continuation in office, and therefore sought these places. These statements, however, are discredited, as Mr. Davis, the attorney, knew that the statement he fathered was not true when he gave it out, because he knew the investigation had been had and knew of the vindication of these men of the charges.

The editor of the Plate Printer, a publication gotten out here in Washington, next came forward with a "happy" solution a day or two ago, which was published in the Post, which paper, of course, seizes upon every rumor in order to justify the President. The headlines of that article are as follows:

Back bureau change—Expert workmen praise Harding's step, union again says—Shoddy work era at end—Inefficiency sole cause of shake-up, Plate Printer asserts—Nation-wide counterfeiting of United States securities, made possible by inferior product of bureau, will now cease, it is declared—Highest art to be followed—Sure President will correct mistakes.

I ask leave to insert this article as it appears in the Post.

There being no objection, the article referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

President Harding's action in changing executive personnel of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has the approval of the expert workmen employed in the big Government plant on the ground that an improvement was vitally necessary along the lines of efficiency of operation and workmanship. The position of the men was made known yesterday through the Plate Printer, official organ of the Plate Printers' Union, composed of highly skilled workmen employed in the bureau. Poor quality in the money and securities turned out by the bureau under the direction of the discharged executives, making counterfeiting easy, is the reason which the workmen declare made a change necessary. Their statement of position reads:

COUNTERFEITING REQUIRED SHAKE-UP.

"With the country flooded from coast to coast with millions of counterfeit Federal reserve notes, United States notes, Federal reserve currency, national bank notes, silver certificates, war savings stamps, postage stamps, internal-revenue stamps, and all issues of the war bonds and their coupons, drastic action was required to stop it, and drastic action was taken."

The President's statement to the effect that the changes were made "for the good of the service" are upheld by the skilled employees of the bureau, who point out that the printers themselves have frequently complained in the past of the deterioration of standards allowed under the administration of Director Wilmeth and his associates.

"Efficiency" is the one word that explains the action of the President, the plate printers' statement declares, and hints of other motives actuating the administration which have been circulated since the change in executive personnel was announced are not credited by skilled workmen in the bureau.

INSINUATIONS ARE DEPLORED.

Their opinions to what was "back of" the removal order is indicated as follows:

"We deplore the insinuations that have been cast upon the integrity of the deposed officials of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, as we are confident that their honor is beyond reproach.

"We insist, however, that the greater majority of those removed from the service by President Harding were inefficient and largely responsible for the poor quality of product that has been issued from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the past several years. We also believe that one or two mistakes have been made in the general list, and where mistakes have been made they should be rectified, as President Harding has stated that if mistakes have been made they will be corrected. The Plate Printer, however, approves of the change of administration in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing."

IMPROVEMENT IS PREDICTED.

Confidence is expressed that the changes in the bureau will result in a great improvement in the quality of the money and securities produced there, and the new director, Louis A. Hill, is praised as a "practical portrait engraver and one of the foremost picture engravers of the country." "He knows what good engraving and plate printing means to the securities of this country, and has announced as his policy the accepting of only the highest style of the engravers and plate printers' art from the engravers and plate printers employed in the bureau."

Officials of the union last night declared that intimations have been received of impending changes in methods in the production of money and securities in the bureau to eliminate the possibilities of counterfeiting, which they ascribe to the introduction of inferior standards during the régime of the discharged officials. Better materials will be used also, the union paper declares, "as soon as the present stock has been used up."

BACK TO FORMER STANDARDS.

Skilled employees of the bureau have frequently complained that some of the methods of printing and engraving that have been installed in the bureau during the past few years have resulted in a very inferior product. They believe the changes made by the Executive order will put the bureau back to its former standards of excellence. "The Bureau of Engraving and Printing was thus restored to the country as an engraving and printing bureau and orders issued to engrave and plate print our Government securities in the future in the highest style of the art," is the way the employees describe the action of the President.

"The shoddy work that has been the source of many a protest from the columns of the Plate Printer will no longer be tolerated and every employee of the bureau will be compelled to render first-class workmanship in every particular."

Mr. CARAWAY. In this article Mr. Coleman, the editor of the Plate Printer, said there was a perfect swamping of all the Government activities—a flooding of this country with counterfeits of Federal reserve notes, of bonds, of thrift stamps; that there was a saturnalia of counterfeiting, due to the inefficiency of the men who had been running the bureau. Or course, everybody, including Mr. Coleman, knew when he made the statement that he was "joking," but he doubtless hoped somebody away from here might accept it.

Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, a man whose stand on this question is exciting the admiration of men who believe in justice and fair play, yesterday said that the statement of Mr. Coleman was untrue and called on Coleman for evidence to sustain his charge. That appeared in Tuesday's Washington Herald. I wish, without objection, to insert that article in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENIES NATION FLOODED WITH COUNTERFEITS—SECRETARY MELLON REPLIES TO ASSERTIONS MADE IN PRINTERS' ORGAN—CHALLENGES EDITOR TO PRODUCE PROOF—DIRECTOR ADMITS CHARGES WELL FOUNDED—FORMER CHIEF DISPUTES CLAIM.

[By Arthur Sears Henning.]

Charges that the country is flooded with millions of counterfeit currency notes and Government securities brought the faction now dominating the Bureau of Engraving and Printing into a head-on collision with the Treasury Department yesterday.

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon emphatically denied the assertions, called the authors of the charges sharply to account, and demanded that proof be produced.

In an article lauding Louis A. Hill, the new director, and President Harding for his summary discharge of Director Wilmeth and 29 other employees, the Plate Printer, official organ of the plate printers' union, said:

FLOODED WITH COUNTERFEITS, HE SAYS.

"With the country flooded from coast to coast with millions of counterfeit Federal reserve notes, United States notes, Federal reserve currency, national-bank notes, silver certificates, war-savings stamps, postage stamps, internal-revenue stamps, and all issues of the war bonds and their coupons, drastic action was required to stop it, and decisive action was taken."

After a conference with Assistant Secretary Wadsworth, who has jurisdiction of the Engraving Bureau, and Chief Moran, of the Secret Service, Mr. Mellon issued the following statement:

"In view of the statements made in a publication known as the Plate Printer, which are receiving wide publicity, to the effect that the country is flooded with millions of counterfeit bank notes, bonds, war-savings and other stamps, and war bonds and coupons, the Secretary of the Treasury deems it proper to make public announcement that no such condition exists.

CLAIMS TREASURY ON ALERT.

"No information has come to the Treasury of any overissue or counterfeiting of United States bonds or coupons attached to the same.

"As regards war-savings and other stamps, bank notes, and other forms of currency, attempts are made from time to time to counterfeit the issues or raise the denominations of genuine issues. The Treasury is constantly on the alert to stop such attempts. In substantially every case where efforts have been made on any considerable scale the guilty parties have been apprehended and brought to trial, and their activities ended.

"The Secretary of the Treasury desires to state in the most emphatic terms that the public need have no apprehension as to the genuineness of the Government securities and currency now outstanding."

Secretary Mellon also addressed a letter to Frank J. Coleman, editor of the Plate Printer.

"I request," the letter said, "that you immediately furnish me with any evidence upon which you based the statements referred to. The Treasury will be glad to receive such evidence and will at once investigate it with the greatest care."

MAINTAINS HE CAN PRODUCE PROOF.

Coleman said that he could produce the proof of the charges, but declined to go into details. Director Hill said he knew that the charges were well founded, but to what extent he was unable to say.

"Developments of photomechanical processes have made counterfeiting easy," he said. "The best safeguard against counterfeiting lies in the use of a better grade of ink by the bureau, the use of better paper, and a more rigid inspection of work."

This statement is disputed by George U. Rose, former chief of the engraving division and the immediate superior of Hill, who was discharged by the President at the instance of Hill.

"A photomechanical counterfeit is easily detected," said Rose. "In a photomechanical counterfeit the lines in portraits particularly are blurred. The best safeguard against counterfeiting is in the quality of engraving on the notes and securities turned out by the Government. The assertion that the country is flooded with counterfeits is absolutely untrue."

Mr. CARAWAY. This morning Mr. Coleman has an interview in the local papers stating that his charge about counterfeiting was based on "reports." I presume he intends to say street-corner rumors. He admits he has no evidence to warrant him in having made his charge, and in the face of the demand made upon him by the Secretary of the Treasury to produce his evidence he admits he has no evidence. In other words, it is just a part of a continuous slander that is carried on by certain interests who profited by the shake-up and are trying to satisfy the minds of the public with reference to President Harding's action in the matter.

I am not surprised that they should do it. I am only surprised that they should be so stupid in doing it. It would seem they ought to get together and give out a story that small children could not detect its flagrant insincerity. They change their statements daily. I shall say—but I do so with regret—that since "they" have seen fit, day after day, to slander these men who have been discharged by circulating false rumors, I intend to call attention to the character of some of the men who have profited by this change.

The present director of the bureau, Mr. Hill, is the defendant in a divorce suit in which rather salacious charges are made by his wife, which were published in a local paper the other day. It is charged, among other discreditable things in reference to his conduct toward his family, that he had the brutality to strike his own daughter in the face with his fist.

His assistant was at one time a bookmaker and a gambler in the department; and the wife of the man who took Mr. Ashworth's place, on the day he got his promotion, got an order of the court in a suit for limited divorce she had filed, in which she alleged that he was guilty of statutory offenses and named a corespondent.

These are the men in charge of a great bureau where more than 2,000 white girls, who are subject to their supervision and control, work. These are the men for whom decent citizens are thrown out of employment and disgraced, and these are the men who are constantly busy, they and their paid attorneys and their satellites, conjuring up slanderous stories against the men whom they displaced, trying to account for the discharge of those men, men like Rose, men like Wilmeth, and men like Ashworth.

I am not falling out with them because they got the places. They got the places because they were in position to command influences which persuaded the President to override the law and discharge these other men and give the places to them. But they ought to have the decency, after they have the places, to do what the President is doing, and remain silent. Since they can not give any valid reason why the President should have violated the law to put good men and women, former soldiers and sailors, out of employment to place them in their places, they should copy the President and make no statement. The President has maintained silence. He knows he had no right to remove these men and women to pay a political debt, and he is offering no excuse, but these men and their paid apologists, after they have been the beneficiaries of this illegal order, are conjuring up slanderous, slurring falsehoods to blacken the names of the men and women whom they succeeded, and they should have at least enough sense of decency to cease.

I am calling attention to-day to three of these men's reputations. I do so that the country may know their character when they read their statements. I would like to have the country know also what was the effect of this great "moral" upheaval in the Treasury, in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I want the country to know these three men, one dismissed from the service for being a gambler and bookmaker, two of them being sued by their wives on statutory charges and for cruelty and neglect—these three men who are put in charge of more than 2,000 white women, many of them young girls. I do not think any comment is necessary.

Mr. President, I ask leave to print in the RECORD the story which appears this morning in the Washington Post, purporting to be the statement of Mr. Coleman, seeking to justify both men, apologizing for the slanderous statement he made the day before.

There being no objection, the statement referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BASED COUNTERFEIT STORY ON REPORTS—F. J. COLEMAN, MANAGER OF PLATE PRINTER, REPLIES TO LETTER FROM SECRETARY MELLON—ADDED UP WARNING TOTALS—OBTAINED SUM REFERRED TO, HE SAYS, FROM OFFICIAL FIGURES—RECALLS BOLSHEVIK PLOTS.

Secretary Mellon's request for information as to the authority for statements to the effect that the country is "flooded" with millions of dollars' worth of counterfeit Government securities, as charged in the Plate Printer, official organ of the International Steel and Copper Plate Printers' Union of North America, will be complied with, according to Frank J. Coleman, editor and business manager of the publication. Discussing Secretary Mellon's protest against the statements, which were contained in an editorial praising the administration for its recent changes in the personnel of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Mr. Coleman said that bulletins issued by the Treasury Department itself are the basis for his allegation of counterfeiting.

"As the Secretary of the Treasury says," Mr. Coleman declared yesterday, "warnings are sent out from time to time of attempts to counterfeit various issues of Government notes and securities. These warnings are the basis for my statement that the country is flooded with millions of dollars' worth of counterfeit paper. I have simply taken the trouble to compile these warnings, and evidently the Treasury has not thought to do so."

QUOTED REPORTS BY TREASURY.

The detailed information which, Mr. Coleman says, "consists simply of reports and warnings issued by the Treasury Department itself" will be furnished to the Secretary in conformity with his request, it was said. The letter and documents will be mailed this morning.

Mr. Coleman last night said that he is confident that his declaration as to the extent of counterfeiting under the administration of the discharged officials of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will be sustained. "There is nothing mysterious about it," he said. "We have simply taken the Government warnings at their face value and added up the totals."

There has been a considerable amount of publicity regarding counterfeiting during the past few years, Mr. Coleman added, expressing surprise that there has been any question as to the existence of the condition which he referred to in the Plate Printer. In addition to the warnings issued by the Government authorities, there have been several stories printed in many of the leading newspapers and in the Plate Printer itself during the past few years, he said.

RECALLS BOLSHEVIST PLOTTINGS.

One of the most spectacular exposés of this nature, he said, was that which occurred in January, 1920, when it was discovered that the Bolshevist Government of Russia had planned to flood the United States and other nations with counterfeit currency in an effort to disrupt their financial systems. Numbers of counterfeit $50 and $100 bills were detected in circulation at that time, he said, and evidence in the possession of the Government, according to the published accounts at that time, revealed plans to circulate $200,000,000 in counterfeit currency in the United States, of which an undetermined amount was actually placed in circulation.

The Plate Printer of January 15, 1920, printed the following in reference to the Bolshevist plot:

"In this country alone, it is officially reported, the reds planned to circulate bogus bills of an apparent value of $200,000,000, as well as counterfeit Liberty bonds and war savings stamps. These were to be put into circulation through certain agents of the Russian Soviet Government in this country and through bands of communists and of the Russian Socialist Federation.

WITHHOLDS THE TOTAL SUM.

"Just how much of this counterfeit they have succeeded in getting into this country is not known. Government agents who are working on the case have refused to divulge the results of their investigations. Certain of the bills and notes, however, have been detected by bank tellers and turned over by them to the Secret Service. They are said to be so expertly made that detection is extremely difficult. Their chief fault is that the counterfeiters used heavier paper than that used for genuine United States bills."

While Mr. Coleman said that the figures of his compilations of the amount of counterfeit in circulation, according to Government reports, will bear out his previous assertions, he would not make public the actual totals which will be included in his letter to the head of the Treasury. This information, he said, he would not make public until after the Secretary of the Treasury has had an opportunity to study it.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 47, at the end of line 13, to increase the total of the appropriations for the Leavenworth (Kans.) Penitentiary from "$756,600" to "$757,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, at the end of line 17, to strike out "$175,000" and to insert "$200,000," so as to read:

Atlanta (Ga.) Penitentiary: For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, at the end of line 20, to strike out "$110,000" and to insert "$120,000," so as to read:

For clothing, transportation, and traveling expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 3, to strike out "$6,500" and to insert "$7,500," so as to make the paragraph read:

For hospital supplies, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 13, after the word "guards," to strike out "$92,800" and to insert "$97,980"; and at the end of line 13, to strike out "$127,000" and insert "$132,180," so as to read:

For salaries: Warden, $4,000; deputy warden, $2,000; chaplains—one $1,500, one $1,200; chief clerk, $1,800; physician, $1,800; pharmacist and physician's assistant, $1,000; bookkeeper and record clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $900; clerks—one $1,200, one $1,000, four at $900 each; engineer and electrician, $1,500; two assistants, at $1,200 each; steward and storekeeper, $1,200; superintendent of farm and transportation, $1,200; two teamsters, at $600 each; head cook, $1,000; three captains of watch, at $1,500 each; guards, $97,980; in all, $132,180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, at the end of line 21, to increase the total of the appropriations for the Atlanta (Ga.) Penitentiary from "$552,500" to "$593,680."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, at the end of line 26, to strike out "$35,000" and to insert "$41,000," so as to read:

McNeil Island (Wash.) Penitentiary: For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., and for supplies for guards, $41,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, at the end of line 3, to strike out "$20,000" and to insert "$26,750," so as to read:

For clothing, transportation, and traveling expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., $26,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, at the end of line 9, to strike out "$1,500" and to insert "$3,500," so as to read:

For hospital supplies, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, at the beginning of line 15, to strike out "$24,000" and to insert "$26,000," and in the same line, after the words "in all," to strike out "$36,800" and to insert "$38,800," so as to read:

For salaries: For warden, $2,000; deputy warden, $1,200; physician, $1,600; steward and cook, $1,000; chief clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $900; captain of watch, $1,500; engineer and electrician, $1,200; superintendent of boats, $1,200; chaplain and teacher, $1,000; guards, $26,000; in all, $38,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 19, to increase the total of the appropriations for the McNeil Island (Wash.) Penitentiary from "$143,300" to "$160,050."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 16, to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,100,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

Support of prisoners: For support of United States prisoners, including necessary clothing and medical aid, discharge gratuities provided by law, and transportation to place of conviction or place of bona fide residence in the United States or such other place within the United States as may be authorized by the Attorney General; support of prisoners becoming insane during imprisonment, and who continue insane after expiration of sentence, who have no friends to whom they can be sent; shipping remains of deceased prisoners to their friends or relatives in the United States and interment of deceased prisoners whose remains are unclaimed; expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped prisoners and for rewards for their recapture; and not exceeding $2,500 for repairs, betterments, and improvements of United States jails, including sidewalks, $1,100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, at the end of line 23, to strike out "$11,000" and insert "$12,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

Inspection of prisons and prisoners: For the inspection of United States prisons and prisoners, and for the collection, classification, and preservation of criminal identification records and their exchange with the officials of State and other institutions, including salary of the assistant superintendent of prisons, $2,500; to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 1, after the word "Ecuador," insert the word "Egypt."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 6, in the total appropriation envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, strike out "$300,000" and insert "$310,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 9, strike out "Agent and consul general at Cairo, $7,500," and insert:

The President is hereby authorized to appoint as the representative of the United States an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Egypt, who shall receive as compensation the sum of $10,000 per annum, and there is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year 1922 for said salary the sum of $600 in addition to the unexpended balance of the amount already appropriated for salary of an agent and consul general, which amount is also made available for the salary of a minister when appointed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 13, in the total for ambassadors and ministers, strike out "$583,500," and insert in lieu thereof "$586,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] desires to offer an amendment, and I will delay offering other amendments which I have until he has offered his amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, after line 26, insert:

PAYMENT TO DAISY CRAWFORD CARROLL.

To Daisy Crawford Carroll, widow of B. Harvey Carroll, late consul to Cadiz, Spain, $3,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask whether that is the usual procedure?

Mr. CURTIS. It has been the practice to put items of this character in appropriation bills, but the subcommittee and the full committee thought under the new rule it might make the bill subject to that rule, so it was suggested that the amendment be offered on the floor of the Senate. Similar items have been carried in appropriation bills at nearly all sessions. There is another item similar to this from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I now offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 18, line 1, after "Arbitration," strike out the words "at Brussels, Belgium," so as to make the item read:

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment along the lines of the amendment adopted just a moment ago. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 31, after line 20, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States of America not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 to the estate of W. L. Dunham, deceased, of Richton, Miss., on account of the death of said Dunham while in the discharge of his duty as a posse man under the Federal prohibition enforcement officer for the southern district of Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will not make it until he has heard my explanation.

Mr. CURTIS. I withhold the point of order to hear what the Senator from Mississippi has to say.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I am sure the Senator will not make the point of order. The facts in the case are these: Dunham was a marshal in a little town in Mississippi and was deputized by one of the prohibition officers to assist in arresting some "blind tigers." The "blind tigers" proved to be desperadoes. They were hiding out in the swamps, making their "hooteh," so to speak. These men went there and found them. The "blind tigers" opened fire upon the prohibition officer and the deputized marshal. The marshal was killed and the prohibition officer was killed, and two of the "blind tigers," I think, were killed.

This man Dunham left a wife and nine children. They are absolutely penniless. They have not a nickel in the world, I am informed. It would seem to me, since he was deputized by the agent of the Government—and under the authority of law there is no place else for them to go to get any money—that the Government would be doing a generous act to appropriate $1,500 for his family.

Mr. CURTIS. I judge from the Senator's statement that the man was not an employee of the Government, and therefore would not come under the general law.

Mr. HARRISON. He was deputized by an agent of the Government.

Mr. CURTIS. We have had nothing submitted from the department on the subject. So far as I am personally concerned, while I think that the item is subject to a point of order, I am willing to accept it so far as I can, and take it to conference, and ascertain what the department has to say about it.

Mr. HARRISON. I would be very glad if the Senator would do that.

Mr. CURTIS. I would not want to commit myself to the item unless the department approved it.

Mr. HARRISON. It is a case that will appeal to the sense of justice of any man.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I submit the following amendment, to follow the one introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York offers the following amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the amendment proposed by Mr. CULBERSON insert:

To Alice Potter, widow of Julian Potter, late consul to Rouen, France, $3,000, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died as a result of illness incurred in the Consular Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary I move the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Insert, after the salaries of the judges of the Court of Claims, as follows, to wit: In line 14, page 37, strike out the words and figures "chief clerk, $3,500," and insert in lieu thereof the following words and figures: "Chief clerk, $5,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator withhold that until the Senator from Minnesota explains the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have moved the amendment by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary. The facts in the case are these: Clerks of circuit courts of the United States receive a salary of $4,500 a year, and in addition to that they are allowed fees amounting in all to about $5,000. None of the clerks of the circuit courts have anywhere near the amount of business that is handled by the clerk of the Court of Claims. Most of the clerks of the district or circuit courts get a salary of from $4,000 to $5,000. The clerk of the Court of Claims has more work than any clerk of the circuit court in the country. His calendar will show the amount of business transacted. In addition to that the clerk of the Court of Claims can perform, and is at times required to perform, the duties of a master, to take testimony, reduce it to writing, and make a report thereon to the court.

In order to equalize the pay and put him on a parity with the clerks of the circuit courts and on a parity with most of the clerks of the district courts, the Judiciary Committee have agreed to this amendment and recommend its adoption.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment as well as to the large salaries which are paid to the clerks of the Federal courts generally. In my own State the clerk of the district (State) court in Salt Lake City has more to do than the clerk of the Federal court. The business in the State court in that district is very much greater than that in the Federal court. The clerk of the State court receives, as I remember, less than $3,000. The clerk of the Federal court receives a larger salary.

Mr. President, there is no reason for marked differences in the rate of compensation paid to clerks of the Federal and State courts. If we should fix the compensation of the clerks of the Federal courts at $2,500, or in the large districts such as New York at $3,500, there would be a hundred applicants from men of standing and probity for every vacancy. The trouble is, Congress has the habit of spending the people's money with lavish hand. We are multiplying the offices and increasing the office-holders in the Government far beyond its needs.

Doubtless what the Senator from Minnesota has said is true, namely, that the present clerk of the court to which the Senator refers does perform many duties. Perhaps his work is more important than that of some of the clerks in other Federal courts.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I omitted to state that, as a consequence of the war, there are a multitude of war claims that have arisen, and where they are not settled amicably the Senator knows well as a lawyer that they have to go to the Court of Claims. There is only one exception. Where the claim is less than $10,000 the claimant can sue in the district courts; otherwise all these claims have to pour in to the Court of Claims. That court has within the last two years been overwhelmed with business, and it is growing more and more all the time. That entails more work on the clerk of the court, of course. I just wanted to suggest that to the good Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is always distressing for me to disagree with the Senator from Minnesota. He is so delightful and so thoroughly honest and conscientious that when he espouses a cause any courage that I may possess in opposition usually evaporates.

Yet, returning to what I was observing when the Senator interrupted me, it does seem to me that we are culpably extravagant in creating offices and in fixing salaries. The clerk of the Court of Claims to whom the Senator refers is a man of ability and competent to fill positions much more responsible than the one he now occupies. I know his case. I have talked with him, and he has furnished me a statement showing the services which he performs. I know that by reason of war claims the court has been required to perform more work than in pre-war years. However, that fact does not warrant the change in the salary of the clerk.

Mr. President, I believe that the salaries paid to clerks and to marshals are too great. There is a bill now pending to increase the salaries of many of the clerks and marshals. Since I have been in the Senate a number of bills of like character have been before the Committee on the Judiciary; these I have uniformly opposed. I believed that it was not the proper time during the war to begin raising salaries; and, in view of conditions following the war, I felt it was unwise to revise salaries upward. In most positions in private employment salaries and compensations are being reduced from the war levels. There will probably be further reductions in many lines of business. While salaries are coming down in private enterprises, we are increasing salaries and the compensation of Federal employees in many of the departments. In my opinion we should wait until, in the language of President Harding, "normalcy has arrived." I might add, in parentheses, that I hope we shall never return to some of the conditions of normalcy that obtained in the past. I believe in a living wage; I believe that the laborer is worthy of his hire; but I think that it is a mistake to make the salaries in Government service so attractive that there are a hundred or a thousand applicants for every job. Scarcely a day passes that I am not visited by one or more persons who have been separated from the public service asking my influence in their efforts to secure a position in the Federal service. I ought to add that since the Republicans have come into power the Democratic Senators are not bothered as much as they previously were. Apparently it is not felt that the influence of a Democratic Senator with this Republican administration, particularly in view of the great and overpowering devotion of the Republican administration to civil service, is of much advantage.

However, Mr. President, it is a fact that for practically every position under the Government there are a multitude of applicants. Men in many of the positions in Government employ are receiving much higher compensation than they can obtain for like service in private employment. I grant that during the World War, and for a short period thereafter, many experts in various lines of activity were better paid in private employment than in the Government service, but many persons who resigned their positions with the Government because of the promise of higher salaries in private service are now anxious to get back into Government service.

Mr. President, the fact that the Government requires usually only seven hours' work a day for about 10 months in the year and that after a certain number of years of service pensions are granted makes such service exceedingly alluring. If one will make a critical examination of the conditions of service with the Government and then investigate the conditions attending the work of thousands scattered throughout the country who are in private employment they will understand why there are so many seeking positions with the Government. Why should a clerk in a Government position obtain $3,500, whereas for similar employment in many of the States where the work is just as great the compensation is from $2,000 to $2,500? There is no reason for that distinction, but we proceed upon the theory that when a person enters the Federal service he must have a higher salary than is paid in private service or is paid by States or municipalities.

I am reminded of the fact—the suggestion was made sotto voce by my colleague [Mr. SMOOT]—that a classification bill may soon be before us. My understanding is that the classification bill will deal with clerks—indeed, with substantially all employees of the Government.

The passage of such a measure was promised during the closing hours of the last administration, and is also one of the pledges of the present administration. I know that my colleague, who has given attention to the subject, and who is interested in the reform which will be effectuated by the passage of a measure of that kind, will use his influence, as will other Republican Senators, to enact a proper classification law.

Mr. SMOOT. But not in the shape in which the bill has already been reported to the Senate. I am opposed to the so-called Sterling classification bill as presented to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. However, I shall express my views in regard to the bill when it comes before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. KING. Of course, when I spoke of the classification bill, I did not have reference particularly to the bill that is now before a Senate committee, but to the subject generally.

Now, why should we begin in this stepladder fashion to adjust and readjust salaries? If we raise the salary of one official it creates a disparity with respect to other salaries and other officials, and the latter will immediately come to Congress and demand that as we have increased the salary of Mr. A, whose work is no more important than theirs, a bill shall be passed increasing their compensation. When these demands are granted and the salaries increased, other demands will be made, and so on ad infinitum. Thus in this stepladder fashion we are proceeding and will continue to act.

The sensible, the rational, and the proper thing to do is to deal with the entire subject in a comprehensive manner in one bill, then we could deal with it justly; but if we proceed in this piecemeal fashion, injustices and inequalities inevitably will result.

So, Mr. President, without detaining the Senate further, and without in any manner depreciating the valuable service of the present clerk of this court, I feel constrained not only to oppose the amendment but to raise the point of order against it, for the reason that it attempts to change existing law, and to effect such change by means of a general appropriation bill; and further, that it is not estimated for by the Budget Bureau.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the point of order is not well taken, the requirement of clause 2 of Rule XVI having been complied with.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the amendment is general legislation, then it is subject to the point of order. The only exception making an item in order is where an amendment not estimated for comes from a standing committee. I can cite, if the Chair desires, an authority upon that question. I am in favor of the amendment, and I very much dislike to make this argument on the point of order, but I do not want the Chair to make a mistake. If the point of order is made against the amendment on the ground that it is general legislation, and the Chair should hold that it is general legislation, then the point is well taken even though the amendment is reported from a standing committee.

Mr. KING. I made that point; that was the first point I suggested, that it is general legislation; and if it is not general legislation, then, I most respectfully submit to the Presiding Officer, we may fix any salary we please, or make any amendment to the general laws of the United States we desire in this general appropriation bill. Of course, this has not been reported by a standing committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been reported by a standing committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that it had been so reported, and that that was the point of order made.

It appears from the caption that the amendment was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in order to be printed on the calendar day, February 10, and on the calendar day, February 27, it was "reported by Mr. NELSON, with amendments, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations." So clause 2 of Rule XVI has been complied with.

Mr. CURTIS. That is true; and that relieves it from the necessity of an estimate. That, however, is all it does relieve it from.

Mr. KING. I respectfully submit it was never designed that an amendment was to be relieved from the rule forbidding general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the point of order to be that the amendment had not been moved by the direction of a standing committee.

Mr. KING. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been so moved.

Mr. KING. If the Vice President will pardon me, I first suggested that, or attempted so to do, and then later I suggested an additional reason, that it was general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Chair will turn to Gilfry's Precedents, on page 62, he will find a precedent on this question.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment does not propose general legislation. General legislation is that character of legislation which applies generally and deals with more than a single case. The amendment relates merely to one particular official. The amendment was presented, referred to the Judiciary Committee, approved by that committee, reported by it, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator that it is not general legislation, because legislation on this subject already has been enacted; the salary has been fixed by legislation. Now, another standing committee comes in and reports a provision to increase a salary which has been adopted under general legislation. Therefore the amendment is not subject to the rule.

Mr. WARREN. It is special legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not a matter of general legislation, because the question has already been legislated upon; the salary has already been fixed by law; and the amendment merely provides an increase in a salary fixed by general legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina knows a great deal about the rules, but, if I understand him, I respectfully suggest that he is in error. The amendment proposes legislation which seeks to change existing law. It is general, because it applies to an existing law which can not be denominated special, although it may refer to only one clerk. There is an existing statute, a general statute, and this amendment aims to modify such statute. It proposes to change a general law, and by means of a general appropriation bill. There is a general statute defining the duties of this office and defining the compensation which the incumbent shall receive. Now, by this proposed special enactment it is sought to change an existing statute. An existing statute can not be changed by this species of special legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, while they are not before me at the moment there are at least two rulings by Vice President Marshall on similar points of order. In the instances that I have in mind he termed the legislation sought to be enacted "special legislation" and not subject to the rule which forbids general legislation on appropriation bills. Under those rulings the amendment would be special legislation and not general legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not general legislation at all.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator from Wyoming because he denominates this "special" to contend that it is not subject to the point of order?

Mr. WARREN. I am stating that heretofore it has been ruled twice that similar amendments were special and not general legislation.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator, because he labels it "special" and assumes that it is "special," to contend that it is not subject to the point of order?

Mr. WARREN. I am not assuming anything about it, but the fact remains that it is special in that it applies merely to one clerk at one time for one year.

Mr. OVERMAN. And the Vice President has ruled that it is in order.

Mr. KING. I do not concede the Senator's position.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas find any precedents bearing on this matter?

Mr. CURTIS. I had a note citing a precedent on page 62 of Gilfry's compilation, but in looking at page 62 of the volume I have before me I do not find the decision. I have a note in my book, however, that there is a decision to the effect that if the provision reported from a standing committee is general legislation it is still subject to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems to the Chair that this comes explicitly within the second section of Rule XVI:

> All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

This is moved by direction of the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; but that only makes amendments in order by reason of the fact that they have not been estimated for. The clause in regard to general legislation is a separate provision. Of course, if the Chair holds that this is not general legislation, then it is in order; but if it is general legislation no committee can report it out and make it in order. If a committee could do that, the rule in regard to general legislation would be useless, and items of general legislation could be added regardless of the action of the Committee on Appropriations. If this is not general legislation it is in order, but if it is general legislation under the next provision of the rule it is not in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. It can not be general legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Chair will read the next section, he will find that no legislation is in order on an appropriation bill. Why, we can not bring in general legislation on an appropriation bill from the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations can not report legislation on an appropriation bill. Such an item would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. If that were so we could not report increases of anybody's salary except by statute, which we have done in this very bill. Therefore, I say it is not general legislation; it is special legislation in regard to one man, increasing his salary. It is not general legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the point of order, as the Senator from Kansas says, the point of order of general legislation can not be gotten rid of by reporting the matter from a committee. Nothing can get rid of that point of order except the fact that it is not general legislation.

It seems to me, under the previous rulings as I remember them, though I have not looked at them lately, that this is special legislation. The confusion arises from the fact—and I have seen it arise again and again in the Senate—that Senators think of the House rule, which is an entirely different one. The House rule is "change of existing law." That is not the rule of the Senate. The rule of the Senate is "general legislation"; and the sole point to be decided here in this question is whether or not the matter is general legislation. Personally, I do not see that it is general legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I differ from the position of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts. The question of whether a matter is general legislation or special legislation is not to be determined by the smallness or the bigness of the subject or of the appropriation. We have a general statute. Certainly it is general legislation that created this office. It is general legislation which fixed the salary of this office at $3,500. That is general legislation, though it related to only one office and one salary. It does not cease to be general legislation if it deals with the same office or with the salary. If we may in this manner on appropriation bills bring in special or general legislation, whatever it may be labeled, increasing or diminishing salaries, changing existing law, then we open the door to the conversion of appropriation bills into general salamagundi measures dealing with all forms, subjects, and matters. There would be no end to the amendments which might be put upon an appropriation bill. That, I submit, is one of the vices of legislation in the Senate. We have loaded our appropriation bills with all sorts of legislation of the most important character as well as of the most insignificant character, and a person examining an appropriation bill of the Senate will be astounded to find legislation upon almost every conceivable subject with which legislative bodies deal. Whoever dreamed that appropriation bills should deal with the multitude of matters that we have dealt with in our general appropriation bills?

Coming back to this specific matter, a general law was passed creating this office. The general statute fixed the salary of this office. I submit, Mr. President, that that can be changed only by legislation dealing with that or with cognate questions, but we can not upon this appropriation bill change that salary, any more than we could increase the number of clerks and provide for two clerks in this court instead of one.

Only the other day I proposed an amendment to the Agricultural bill diminishing a salary, and the point of order was raised that I was attempting to change the existing law. It was an appropriation bill. The Chair held that if I would limit it for one year—the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], as I recall, made that suggestion—it would not be subject to the point of order. So I concede, under that ruling, that if the Senator from Minnesota should offer his amendment so that it would provide only for the current year——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator say that this appropriation bill runs for more than one year?

Mr. KING. No; but this is an attempt to change the present statute and make the appropriation, as I read it, for more than one year.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. WARREN. No; only for one year—that is all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Only for one year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The appropriation is for one year.

Mr. LODGE. The word "hereafter" is not used.

Mr. KING. May the Secretary state the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 37, under the heading "Court of Claims," on line 14, it is proposed to change the salary of the chief clerk for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, from $3,500 to $5,000.

Mr. KING. Then I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota what would be the salary for the next year? Would it drop back to $3,500?

Mr. OVERMAN. It certainly would.

Mr. NELSON. It would be left that way.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me to say so, that same matter has come up already from the House, and in all cases it has been put back to where it was sent to us in the first instance.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call attention to the fact that this is a bill—

Making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

That is what this bill is for. Our next appropriation bill may provide for $4,800, or may not.

Mr. KING. But the Senator knows that the appropriation for the preceding year is always adopted as the basis of the appropriation for the year under consideration, whether it is for compensation or for anything else.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is not what may be done hereafter. The question is what is being done now.

Mr. KING. I insist on my point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This appears to be for one year. Under that interpretation the Chair understands that it is the general rule of the Senate that it is special and not general legislation; so the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. KING. Of course, while we are dealing with legal matters we are allowed exceptions; but as we are not in court, I can not take an exception to the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to go on page 13, after line 19.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

The appropriation of $300,000 for the fiscal year 1922 for the acquisition of embassy, legation, or consular buildings or grounds at any or all of the following places: Rome, Brussels, Berlin, Christiania, Athens, Belgrade, Bucharest, Prague, Monrovia, Vienna, Budapest, Canton, Hankow, and Amoy, contained in the diplomatic and consular appropriation act approved March 2, 1921, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the same purposes and under the same conditions for the fiscal year 1923, and the commission created to approve such acquisitions is hereby continued for that purpose for the fiscal year 1923, with the same powers and duties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

POST ALLOWANCES TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

To enable the President, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make certain allowances by way of additional compensation to diplomatic and consular officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the post to which they may be assigned, $200,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 23, after line 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

INTERNATIONAL HYDROGRAPHIC BUREAU.

For the second annual contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the International Hydrographic Bureau, $3,860.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether or not that is a matter of treaty?

Mr. LODGE. That has been carried in many bills.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know it has. A great many of these appropriations have been carried in bills heretofore.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but if the Senator will allow me to finish——

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It is an agreement to which we have adhered. It is not a treaty. We adhered to this agreement, and have always been a subscriber to it; and it is a very useful matter, which concerns the navigation and the hydrographic work of the whole world.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand that the United States is a party to an agreement in connection with this matter?

Mr. LODGE. The United States adhered to an agreement of the nations; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer another amendment, to go on page 24, after line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 24, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON MARITIME LAW.

For expenses necessary for the representation of the United States at the International Conference on Maritime Law, to be held at Brussels, Belgium, for the purpose of considering draft conventions relating to collisions, salvage, the liability of shipowners, and cognate subjects, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be made immediately available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On the same page, after line 20, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Following the amendment last agreed to, insert the following, with the heading:

FIFTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES, SANTIAGO, CHILE.

For the expenses of the United States in participating in the Fifth International Conference of American States, to be held at the city of Santiago, Chile, in 1923, including the compensation of delegates and employees, travel, and subsistence, notwithstanding the provisions of any other act, and such miscellaneous and other expenses as the President shall deem proper, $75,000.

Mr. KING. I wish the Senator would give us a little further information about this appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. Ever since the formation of the Pan American Union we have had at long intervals a Pan American conference of this kind. It is a mere question of policy on the part of the United States to take part in these Pan American conferences. We have never failed to do so hitherto, and in view of our relations with those countries I think it would be very unfortunate to refuse to attend a conference of this kind. This is the fifth annual conference, and we have never failed to attend one of them.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment provides for the compensation of delegates and employees. I never understood that delegates were compensated.

Mr. LODGE. It is not intended that any compensation shall be provided for the delegates.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not understand that there ever has been any compensation provided for delegates.

Mr. LODGE. There is no compensation provided for them. It is simply to pay their expenses.

Mr. FLETCHER. The language of the amendment includes the compensation of delegates.

Mr. LODGE. It was not intended that there should be any compensation paid to the delegates. I think the word "compensation" ought to come out.

Mr. SMOOT. There will be some compensation paid.

Mr. FLETCHER. There may be compensation paid to the employees.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what it is for.

Mr. LODGE. Compensation of employees, but not of delegates.

Mr. SMOOT. I can tell the Senator from Florida about what the detailed costs of it will be.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not concerned about that, but it struck me that it was not the intention to compensate the delegates.

Mr. LODGE. I am very sure the delegates are not to be compensated.

Mr. CURTIS. The act provides $20 per diem for the delegates.

Mr. LODGE. That is for expenses.

Mr. KING. How many delegates are there and what employees will be required?

Mr. LODGE. That is all given in the statement.

Mr. CURTIS. There are to be eight delegates.

Mr. SMOOT. Twenty-one persons will go, the cost of passage will be $30,000, the hotel expenses will be $15,000, and the per diem is $20.

Mr. KING. What employees are there?

Mr. SMOOT. There are to be 21 persons in the party altogether—8 delegates and 13 employees.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know what the practice has been before, but my impression is that delegates have never been compensated. The delegates to the conference at Buenos Aires were not compensated.

Mr. LODGE. I have always understood that there was no compensation paid to delegates.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the expenses ought to be provided for, as well as the compensation of employees.

Mr. LODGE. I find that this is the form in which it was submitted as an estimate. I did not suppose they received compensation. That can be disposed of in conference.

Mr. CURTIS. I was going to suggest that we strike out the words "delegates and."

Mr. LODGE. Yes; those words can be stricken out.

Mr. CURTIS. That would make it read "including compensation of employees."

Mr. LODGE. I accept that amendment.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer another amendment, to be inserted on the same page, following the amendment just agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. To follow the amendment last agreed to insert:

COMMISSION OF JURISTS TO CONSIDER AMENDMENT OF LAWS OF WAR.

For one-half year's salary for a representative of the United States on the commission of jurists to consider the amendment of laws of war in accordance with the resolution adopted by the Conference on Limitation of Armament on February 4, 1922, $3,750, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer also another amendment, which is simply to carry out an agreement in a resolution adopted unanimously by the conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 18, insert with a heading:

INQUIRY INTO EXTRATERRITORIALITY IN CHINA.

To enable the United States Government to carry out its obligations arising under resolution No. 4 adopted by the Conference on the Limitation of Armament at the fourth plenary session, December 10, 1921, regarding extraterritoriality in China, including the compensation of delegates or other representatives, clerks, and employees, rent of offices, expenses of transportation, and subsistence, notwithstanding the provisions of any other act, stationery and supplies, telegraph, and such other objects as the President may deem necessary, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, $21,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer one other amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 11, insert with a heading:

CLAIMS OF GOVERNMENT OF NORWAY.

To pay, out of humane consideration, without reference to the question of liability therefor, to the Norwegian Government as full indemnity to Trygve Andersen, Sigurd Nilsen, and Arthur Rasmussel for hardships and expenses suffered by them as the result of their detention as witnesses to the damage caused the Norwegian vessel Ingrid by an explosion at Jersey City, February 1, 1911, $2,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 24, following line 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 24, after line 3, insert with the heading:

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

For the expenses of the World War Foreign Debt Commission, to be immediately available, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 31, line 2, I ask that $83,000 be changed to $86,100. As a reason for that amendment, I wish to say that I have a letter from Hon. Charles D. Lawrence, United States special attorney for the customs division of New York, in which he calls my special attention to this item, and states that if we do not adopt the amendment just offered by me the attorney who has charge of the customs division at New York will be out of a job on July 1 of this year, and they can not get along without him. The amendment is on page 31, line 2, to strike out "$83,000" and in lieu to insert "$86,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I am asked by the Secretary of Commerce to offer an amendment, on page 20, line 25, to strike out "$19,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000."

The Budget asked for the $25,000. This work has been under way for a number of years past. It is the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission. They have never had less than $25,000. Their organization is complete, and if they are to get satisfactory results from this work the $25,000 must be provided. If only $19,600 is allowed, the Secretary of Commerce tells me that it will interfere with the organization they have to-day, and the work can not go on as they have intended it to.

Mr. OVERMAN. What line is that?

Mr. SMOOT. Line 25.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 20, line 25, to strike out "$19,600" and in lieu thereof to insert "$25,000."

Mr. OVERMAN. I would like to know what these people have to do. We gave them $19,600. I know very little about it, and before I agree to it I would like to know something more about it. We have consular agents, and we appropriated a large amount of money for them, and now there is some sort of a commission that is asking for an appropriation, the Inter-American High Commission. I do not know how it was established or anything about it.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been established for some time.

Mr. CURTIS. Since 1915.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is commonly called the Latin American Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. What was the appropriation last year?

Mr. SMOOT. Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. OVERMAN. How much was expended?

Mr. SMOOT. The whole of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the Senator certain there was no unexpended balance?

Mr. SMOOT. There was none whatever.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why did the House cut it down to $19,600?

Mr. SMOOT. For the very reason that they cut a good many of these appropriations down, simply to cut them down.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the House would not cut down an appropriation like this unless they had some reason for it. I would like to know about this.

Mr. CURTIS. If I may be permitted to state, this is the result of the Pan American Financial Conference held at Washington, D. C., in 1915. The object is to bring together the ministers of finance of the various countries and adopt resolutions, hoping to bring closer financial cooperation between the Republics of the American Continent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is this the same thing Secretary McAdoo had in session here?

Mr. CURTIS. It is the same thing. They have gathered a lot of data which has not yet been published. They claim they have two experts working in the preparation of it, and that if this appropriation is not made they will have to discharge one of those experts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why was this not brought to the attention of the committee?

Mr. CURTIS. It was brought to the attention of the subcommittee, and the subcommittee refused to put the amount in. After the subcommittee refused to put the amount in, it was reported to the full committee, and no discussion of it was had there. Then the Secretary of Commerce brought the matter to the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee, and he refused to consider it, because the committee had already taken action. Then it was referred to the Senator from Utah, who is a member of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to this kind of legislation. This is a matter which has been before the House of Representatives. They fixed the sum at $19,600. We have an Appropriations Committee, and we have a subcommittee of that committee. The subcommittee went into this thoroughly, examined into it, and refused to increase it, leaving it where the House fixed it. Then the full committee fixed it at $19,600, the amount at which the House fixed it. I do not generally criticize the Senator from Utah, but I can not understand why he should come and ask for this increase after the subcommittee has turned it down, after the full committee has turned it down, and after the House has turned it down, just because Mr. Hoover comes in and asks for the increase.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah has a good excuse for doing it. Mr. Hoover called my attention to it, and told me of the organization that they had. By cutting this down we will not save any money in the end, because this work is going to be done. There will not be any economy in having them take a longer time to do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Hoover did not come before the committee on this matter.

Mr. CURTIS. I think, in justice to the Secretary, I ought to say that he asked to be heard, and I advised him that the subcommittee had completed its hearings, had reported the bill to the full committee, that the full committee had directed a report, and that there would be no further hearings. I think I ought to say that in justice to the Secretary.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am glad the Senator stated that, because I never saw the Secretary there, and if he wanted an increase he could have been there. The chairman of the committee is very courteous and invites everybody to come who wants to be heard. The Secretary was not heard by the committee, and it has been turned down everywhere, including the House of Representatives. Now the Secretary comes in and asks for this increase through the mouth of the Senator from Utah. It is not right. It is not the way to legislate.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a question of legislation. It is a question as to whether we want to carry out what we have already instructed the Secretary of Commerce to do. If we do not want him to do it and if we want to cut it out entirely, why not cut it off and be done with it?

Mr. OVERMAN. He has $19,600 with which to do it, and it only requires an expert, as he has said.

Mr. SMOOT. There are a number of cases in this bill of exactly the same kind. The House cut them down and the Senate committee has restored them in order to have the work finished. For instance, there is the case of the boundary between Canada and the United States. The House cut it even lower than it has ever been before; yet the Senate said, after hearing what the commission had to say, that it ought to be raised to $54,000—and why? Because with $54,000 the work can be concluded in a very short period of time.

Mr. OVERMAN. Because we had a hearing and went into the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have had no hearing on this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not make any difference whether we had a hearing if the facts are now before us.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have not had an opportunity to go into the matter, and the Senator knows that the committee turned the proposition down for some reason. If there is some reason for the item they would have known it and had a hearing. We never had a hearing, we never had the Secretary before us; and I am not going to agree to it unless I see some good reason, and no good reason has yet been stated here.

Mr. SMOOT. The purpose of it was distinctly stated by Mr. Rowe when he appeared before the House committee. He said:

> The purpose of that conference was to bring together the ministers of finance of the Republics of the American Continent for the purpose of considering the financial situation that had developed as a result of the outbreak of the European war and the position in which the American Republics were placed financially and commercially as a result of the outbreak of the war. That conference met here and adopted a series of resolutions, the purpose of which was to bring about closer financial cooperation between the Republics of the American Continent.
>
> Mr. TINKHAM. During the war or for all future time?
>
> Mr. ROWE. For all future time, but with a view of bringing about closer relations, especially at that time when the finances of all the Republics had been thrown into a very unfavorable condition by reason of the outbreak of the war. As the discussions proceeded here at Washington it became evident that one of the important things which the conference would have to do would be to make provision for the removal of certain obstacles to international trade in order to secure closer financial and commercial cooperation. The conference found, for instance, a great diversity in commercial legislation, such as laws relating to conditional sales, to bills of lading, to notes and bills of exchange; great diversity in fiscal regulations relating to customs; great diversity in statistical methods and the classification of merchandise in the statistical publications. It also found that one of the real obstacles to closer relations was the fact that there was as yet no valid adequate protection for industrial property rights as between the Republics of the American Continent. All of these matters required not an international agreement so much as changes in domestic legislation. The great disadvantages of all international conferences is that after meeting and adopting resolutions those resolutions are not carried into effect by some, sometimes by none, of the countries participating.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason for the $19,000. Now, will the Senator give me a reason for increasing it to $25,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Because they have the organization and need $25,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. They have $19,000 to carry on the organization, and the Senator has not shown me any reason for increasing it from $19,000 to $25,000.

Mr. SMOOT. In 1915 John Bassett Moore, then the representative of the United States, at the first conference held—and Mr. McAdoo, I think, was the father of the organization—was given $25,000, and they have had $25,000 since, and now Congress is cutting it down just when the work is being brought to a point where we will get some results from it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I never thought it amounted to anything, although Mr. McAdoo instituted the whole proposition and brought these men here. What do we know about it to-day?

Mr. SMOOT. Then cut it out altogether. The Senator ought to vote to strike out the whole proposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would do so.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the Senator ought to do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let me make this suggestion: The International Joint High Commission, afterwards changed to the American High Commission, was organized, I think, by Mr. McAdoo when he was Secretary of the Treasury. The present Secretary of the Treasury is ex-officio chairman. They have done splendid work, and there is no question about that. Some very excellent results have followed from the organization and from their conferences held in Buenos Aires and held in Washington. They have to have a certain number of experts. A great deal of the literature has to be translated from English into Spanish——

Mr. OVERMAN. This is what I thought the $19,000 was for.

Mr. FLETCHER. And from Spanish into English. They are doing very good work and they need some experts. It requires one or two of them to do the detailed routine work in the office. I suggest to the Senator that he let the amendment be agreed to and let the matter go to conference, and unless the House can be satisfied about it they will disagree on it. That would merely put the matter where it could receive further consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would like to knock the whole thing out. These men all travel around and do nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the fact, then the item should go out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the amendment I am about to offer is not a committee amendment. It is offered because of the fact that the United States marshal for the District of Columbia now is forced to use a horse that is 18 years old, and the expense for maintaining the horse and vehicle is $618 a year. The amendment authorizes the War Department to give the marshal an automobile without any expense to the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 39, after the numerals "$2,300,000," insert a comma and the following:

> And the Secretary of War is authorized and directed, if available, to deliver to the office of the United States marshal for the District of Columbia, without payment therefor, one passenger-carrying motor vehicle.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not object to the amendment, provided the Senator adds to it a further provision, and yet I shall not insist upon it. The point I make is this: I think it is unfair to charge the War Department, as we have done, with millions of dollars for the purchase of vehicles and war supplies, and then every once in a while pass a bill taking away from them that property and giving them no credit for it. If they would get credit for this automobile, I would not see any objection to it. Of course, it is a mere matter of bookkeeping, but I think the War Department ought to get credit where we take from them these vehicles.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the general law provides that they shall be given credit. It is my recollection that there is a general statute to that effect.

Mr. KING. I remember suggesting such a provision.

Mr. CURTIS. If there is not, I have no objection to the Senator offering his amendment.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] promised that that should be done, as I understood him, but I do not know whether we have made that provision. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, on page 41, I move to strike out, beginning in line 16 with the words "Provided further," down to and including line 11, on page 42.

I will state, in addition to what I have already said, that this language transfers from the circuit judge to the Attorney General the right to fix the compensation of circuit court clerks and their deputies and assistants and transfers from the jurisdiction of the circuit judge to the Attorney General the approval of the expenses of travel, subsistence, and so forth. I think the present law is ample to cover the subject. The circuit judge accompanies the clerk and is more familiar with the expenses incurred than the Attorney General ever could be.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. There has been a fight made for 50 years against the fee system. We were successful about 10 or 12 years ago in abolishing the fee system, which was a scandalous and outrageous proposition. The Committee on the Judiciary, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] knows, proposes to allow the Attorney General, who knows more about these things than any other person because the items all come to his office, to pass on all such matters. We allow the Attorney General to fix the salaries of the clerks. Now, we place the same power in his hands as to clerks of the circuit courts of appeals of the United States, providing, however, that the salaries shall not exceed $5,000. They are now getting $4,500 and the judge can allow them to retain $500 of the fees collected, which would give them a total of $5,000. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I join in the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina, and I, too, hope the amendment will be defeated. The object of the provision is to put the clerks of the courts of appeals on exactly the same basis as the clerks of the United States district courts. This will not prevent the judges from fixing the fees and the salaries, but the fees and salaries do not become effective until they are approved by the Attorney General. That is what is required as to the district courts. I think the clerks of the circuit courts of appeals should be treated just the same as are the clerks of the district courts. This does not take anything away from the clerks. It authorizes their fees and salaries to be fixed not to exceed $5,000. Under the existing law they get a $4,500 salary, and they may deduct and retain $500 from the fees collected, thus giving them a total salary of $5,000. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to explain the matter briefly to the Senator from Louisiana. By the act of February 26, 1919, the Attorney General was authorized to fix the salaries of the clerks of the district courts throughout the entire country within a limit of not less than $2,500 and not to exceed $5,000. Under that provision he has fixed the salaries of many of the clerks in the district courts at $5,000. But lately the Comptroller of the Currency ruled that once he acted under the law and fixed the salary he had exhausted his power and could not make any further change.

Yesterday we passed in the Senate a bill which came from the House, on the recommendation of the Attorney General, which authorized the Attorney General once in four years—not oftener than once in four years—to revise the salaries of the clerks. He can raise or lower them, based on the business done in the particular office and the emoluments and fees there received. This puts the clerks of the circuit courts exactly on a par with the clerks of the district courts, and the present law in respect to the clerks in the district courts has worked exceedingly well.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, all I desire to say further is that the present law is not based on the fee system. The present law provides an annual salary of $4,500 and that the clerk may receive out of the fees collected in his office an additional sum of $500, but the total shall not in any case be in excess of $5,000.

In the fifth circuit the result of the operations of the law for the last 12 years was read into the RECORD by me. After paying all the expenses of the office, the salaries of the clerk, deputy clerk and assistant, traveling expenses, subsistence and incidental expenses due to holding court in different localities in that circuit, the cost to the United States Government was a little over $908 per annum. I have heard from a number of prominent law firms in my State and in other States within that circuit, who protest against the methods proposed and who prefer to see the present law continued. They believe the circuit judge could pass upon the expenses incurred and approve them better than the Attorney General here in Washington could pass upon small items, with which the circuit judge is necessarily familiar because the clerk accompanies him, whereas in the way proposed in the bill the Attorney General, who is far distant from that circuit, is supposed to pass upon all those incidental expenses.

I hope that the Senate may agree to strike this provision out of the bill. The present law was recently amended—I think only a couple of years ago—and it seems to be working well.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator is it his purpose to restore the fee system in part?

Mr. BROUSSARD. No, indeed. The present law carries a salary of $4,500, and, in addition to that, out of the fees collected after other expenses are paid the clerk may receive $500.

Mr. KING. The Senator now is referring to clerks of the circuit courts of appeals?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am referring to the clerks of the circuit courts of appeals.

Mr. KING. And not the clerks of the district courts?

Mr. BROUSSARD. No.

Mr. KING. And the Senator objects to conferring any authority upon the Attorney General to raise or lower the present statutory compensation?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I object to transferring that authority to the Attorney General.

Mr. KING. From the judge?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I object to transferring the authority from the judge to the Attorney General. I think there is too much of a tendency to centralize everything in the departments at Washington. It might happen that a lawyer, instead of having something done by the clerk, might, in some instances, be compelled to appeal to the Attorney General; in other words, everything is drifting toward the centralization of power here at Washington. The circuit judges have in the past approved such bills, and the present law is not working an injury to anybody. The emoluments are not on the fee system but on a salary basis.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like the Senator from Louisiana to explain to us the reason for this change. If the present system works admirably and satisfactorily, why should there be any change? Are economies to be effectuated, or will greater efficiency result? If not, why the change, unless it is to centralize all power in Washington, as the Senator has said? Of course, that is important, in view of the centralizing tendencies and the consolidation of all governmental activities in Washington.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I can see no reason for it, and that is why I object to it.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is right, if that is the only reason.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think the position taken by the Senator from Louisiana is eminently sound. There is a growing tendency, I observe, to reduce the officers charged with the administration of justice locally to the position of mere clerks, to act in accordance with directions which emanate from the city of Washington. That tendency is observable, and regretably so, in connection with the office of the United States district attorney. That officer is no longer vested with any kind of discretion whatever, but merely carries out instructions which emanate from the Department of Justice here in the city of Washington. He can not turn either one way or the other without asking the consent and moving in accordance with the direction of that department. I do not, understand me, make any complaint about the present administration, because it is a vice that has been growing in the Department of Justice for many, many years.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to state that I do not construe this provision in that way. I think under this provision the judges will continue to fix the salary and allowances, but their action will not become operative until approved by the Attorney General.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Indirectly, then, the Attorney General will fix the salary.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and myself were on the subcommittee, and we agreed upon and reported to the Senate the bill, which is the law to-day, providing that the Attorney General shall fix the salaries of the clerks. What is the difference between that provision and this?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will observe that the provision under discussion does not refer at all to the matter of fixing the salaries of the clerks. I agree that perhaps it was a wise policy to fix limits within which the Attorney General might establish the salaries of the various clerks of the district courts and of the circuit courts of appeals; but I do not agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that this provision does not effect a change in the existing law; nor does it, in my judgment, supplement the existing law.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not want my remarks to be construed that I meant that it would not change existing law. I think it does change existing law, of course, when it requires that the Attorney General shall approve the allowance; but my statement was that the judges of the local courts would fix the fees and the salaries, and then they would not become operative until approved by the Attorney General. Of course, that addition requiring the approval of the Attorney General is a change of existing law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Again, I observe, Mr. President, that the provision under consideration does not deal with salaries at all. It merely relates to the fees, office expenses, and traveling expenses. It reads as follows:

Provided further, That from and after July 1, 1922, office expenses of clerks of United States circuit courts of appeals, also the personal compensation of said clerks, their deputies, and other assistants, and their expenses of travel and subsistence, when absent from official headquarters on official business—

I do not know what "personal compensation" means. It certainly does not mean salary, or it would say so. If it is intended that within certain limits the Attorney General shall say what the salary of the clerk shall be, I would be disposed to give my approval to that; but when it comes to his allowing and authorizing office expenses and expenses for travel and clerk hire, and that kind of thing, we are concentrating here in Washington the administration of justice throughout the whole country.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I drew the conclusion I did from the wording of the proviso, which reads:

That the salaries of clerks of the United States circuit courts of appeals shall not be fixed at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum.

I drew the conclusion from that provision that, as the existing law fixes the salary at $4,500 and allows $500 out of the fees collected, it was intended that the Attorney General should approve not only the salary but what was allowed from fees, but that the total should not exceed $5,000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Take the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, which, according to my recollection, sits at St. Paul, St. Louis, and at Denver——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as there seems to be a misunderstanding concerning the provision, if there is no objection, I am willing that the amendment may be adopted and go to conference. We can then send for the Attorney General and arrange the matter in conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let me ask the Senator from Montana if all items of expense, including compensation, traveling expenses, and so forth, do not now go to the Attorney General for his approval? Every court sends its accounts here to the Attorney General to be passed upon. That has been the practice for 50 years.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know what the practical operation is, but the law provides that these expenses shall be authorized by the judge in case of the clerks of the district courts. The usual plan is for the United States attorney to check over the accounts of the subordinate officers, to submit the matter to the judge, and usually, as a mere matter of form, the judge approves or disapproves as the district attorney recommends. I see no reason for departing from that procedure and putting the obligation upon a central office here under this great Government and calling upon the Attorney General to audit all these accounts for expenses incurred away out in the State of California, for instance.

Mr. OVERMAN. I repeat that for 50 years it has been the practice that all accounts covering the expenses of courts are sent to Washington for audit and investigation. We have had that matter up before our committee.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. How would the clerks be paid if their accounts had to be audited here at Washington before payment could be made?

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not say that was the case; I said that every account has to be approved by the judge and then the account is sent here and goes, under the new system, to the Comptroller General upon the approval of the Attorney General.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I think the Senator from North Carolina must be mistaken about that. I do not deny that the accounts are audited, but they are audited after the transaction is completed and settlement has been made. Under this provision, however, a clerk traveling from Denver, say, to some other point in the circuit would have to send his accounts here and have them approved before settlement could be made.

Mr. OVERMAN. The accounts have to go through the Attorney General to the auditor.

Mr. BROUSSARD. How long will that take?

Mr. OVERMAN. The accounts are audited at intervals throughout the year and payment is sent by check from the Treasury after they have been audited. All receipts, as the Senator knows, must go into the Treasury, for no official is allowed to retain Government funds.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will yield, he will be a member of the conference committee, and, if Senators will accept my suggestion, we will send for the Attorney General and ascertain if we can not work this matter out satisfactorily.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But the disposition of the committee is to do exactly what the Attorney General wants in this matter, and I am opposed to that. Why should he be consulted about it?

Mr. CURTIS. This provision was not put in the bill on the suggestion of the Attorney General, but was put in by the House. Neither the Attorney General nor any official for the Attorney General recommended this provision or asked for it before the committee; but, after considering the matter, we thought it best to follow the suggestion of the House.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It appears to me that the Attorney General, in addition to the duties which he already has, could hardly wish to have imposed upon him the duty of examining and checking up, for instance, the price of a railroad ticket from one station to another and then to ascertain how many meals may have been eaten by various clerks and other employees in attendance upon the court.

Mr. CURTIS. I have stated that the Attorney General and the department did not ask for this proposed legislation.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Then, why should we ask him what he wants done about it?

Mr. CURTIS. In order to ascertain the attitude of the department in reference to the provision. I presume the House was influenced by the fact that the clerks of the district courts were treated in this way; I know that had an influence upon our committee; and, after going over the matter, we thought the House provision was better than existing law. There has been much complaint about the fee system.

Mr. BROUSSARD. May I ask the Senator from Kansas if the present law is based on the fee system?

Mr. CURTIS. To the extent of $500 of the compensation allowed, it is; yes. There has been a great deal of complaint about it, as the Senator must know, in view of the action of the House after complete hearings and the remarks of the chairman of the subcommittee of the House which have been read here. I am satisfied that he was mistaken and misconstrued the law, but at the same time it can be appreciated from his remarks that there exists a great deal of agitation about the fee system.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Or misinformation. We are discussing the facts of the situation, and it looks to me to be perfect folly to expect the Attorney General to pass upon the traveling expenses and the subsistence accounts of the clerks and their assistants.

Mr. OVERMAN. How would the clerk ever get his traveling expenses; how would he ever get his per diem unless the Attorney General approved his accounts?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understand such accounts are approved by the circuit judge.

Mr. OVERMAN. They are approved by the circuit judge, but how is the clerk going ever to get his money? If one dollar of Government money is taken from the Treasury without a warrant the person taking it is guilty of a penitentiary offense. Everything is paid from the Treasury Department here; all fees go into the Treasury. How would the clerk get his money?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understand that upon the approval of the circuit judge the Treasury pays out the money.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who pays it out—the clerk?

Mr. BROUSSARD. No. It is paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has to be audited by somebody before it is paid out.

Mr. BROUSSARD. When it comes here, approved by the circuit judge, the Attorney General does not have to investigate it. That is what I am talking about—that necessarily there will be delay, because the Attorney General does not know.

Mr. OVERMAN. The judge almost never investigates; he approves.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But he is present, and the Senator will admit that he knows more about the matter than the Attorney General does.

Mr. OVERMAN. He ought to; but everybody knows that it comes here and is audited here, and it has to go not only to the Attorney General but through the comptroller before any man gets his money.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerks be authorized to correct the totals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may ask the indulgence of the Chair, will the Secretary kindly turn to the amendment which was offered increasing the appropriation for the South American organization that was charged with obtaining certain statistics? The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] offered the amendment, which was accepted. Will the Senator from Kansas accept an amendment that the commission—that is, the American part of the commission—shall conclude its labors at the expiration of the coming fiscal year?

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment, but we can not bind another Congress in the next bill. We can put in this provision, of course.

Mr. KING. It looks as though this machine that was set in operation by Mr. Secretary McAdoo is going on forever.

Mr. CURTIS. So far as I am personally concerned, I should like to close out all these commissions.

Mr. KING. I think if we put in that amendment it will have a salutary effect.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. KING. Will the Secretary kindly state the amendment that was adopted, so that I can tender an amendment?

The READING CLERK. The amendment is to the paragraph relating to the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission, where "$19,600" was stricken out and "$25,000" inserted.

Mr. KING. Will the Secretary kindly read the section as it is now amended?

The reading clerk read as follows:

To defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. KING. Now I move to add the following:

Provided, That said commission shall conclude its labors and submit a final report on or before the 30th day of June, 1923.

Mr. LODGE. Let the amendment be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add, after the words "Secretary of State" and before the period, the following proviso:

Provided, That said commission shall conclude its labors and submit a final report on or before the 30th day of June, 1923.

Mr. CURTIS. What effect would that have upon their getting their pay from month to month? We would not want to interfere with that. Why not say that the commission shall make its report at the end of the year, or conclude its work before the end of the year?

Mr. KING. I am only interested in having the commission wind up its work and go out of business; we have so many of these commissions.

Mr. CURTIS. Why not strike out the word "provided," and say that the commission shall do this?

Mr. KING. Yes; strike out the word "provided." If it is not right, we can fix it in conference.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest striking out the word "provided" and inserting the word "and." Then let the amendment be adopted, and we can work it out in conference if necessary.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I notice that the bill carries an appropriation to meet the expenses of arbitrating outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910. I observe that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is present. I want to inquire if any steps are being taken to adjust claims of American nationals against Great Britain arising out of injury claimed to have been done to American shipping and American cargoes prior to our entry into the war?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means the general provision about carrying on the pecuniary claims arbitration?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I say, there is a provision here for arbitrating the claims in accordance with the agreement made in 1910.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But I am asking the Senator whether, so far as he knows, any steps are being taken by the State Department looking to the adjustment of claims of our citizens against Great Britain arising out of the acts of Great Britain during the time that we were neutrals in the late World War and before we became participants in it?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think this provision covers any claims except those arising prior to our entry into the war.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no; I appreciate that it does not. I ask the Senator if any steps are being taken?

Mr. LODGE. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was of the impression that practically all of those matters had been adjusted in some way that was satisfactory to the claimants; but, much to my surprise, I learned recently that nothing had been done toward the settlement and adjustment of a large number of those claims which arose out of alleged interferences with our rights as neutrals, against which the State Department at the time protested very stoutly.

Mr. LODGE. I can only say to the Senator that I have heard nothing in regard to those claims. I do not know just what they amount to. I suppose some of them must be very large, but I have heard of no negotiations for their settlement. I assume, of course, that there will be negotiations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was asked to interpose at one time on behalf of some shippers from Chicago claiming property to the amount of $57,000 which they alleged had been illegally seized, and I have not heard anything about the matter.

Mr. LODGE. These are claims against Great Britain?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Against Great Britain; but I learned within the last day or two that they have not been able to make any progress whatever toward securing satisfaction. I merely desire to say that, as a matter of course, if our Government does not secure satisfaction for those claimants from Great Britain they will have a just claim against the Government of the United States, which we will eventually be obliged to pay.

Mr. LODGE. I had supposed that those claims were all in the hands of the State Department for arrangement by negotiation or by arbitration.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I imagined myself that they had practically all been adjusted, but I have learned that that is not the case.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether they have been settled or whether anything has been done; but I am very sure that those claims were filed with the State Department.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes.

Mr. LODGE. And I assume that they have been pressed. I know about one claim that has been pressed by the State Department. I do not know that it has been settled, but I know of one of that nature that has been taken up and pressed by the State Department. They may be trying to settle them by negotiation. I can not tell the Senator about that. That is all I know about those claims.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may ask for information from the department on that subject.

Mr. LODGE. I know that they have been prosecuted.

Mr. CURTIS. I may state to the Senator that a list of the claimants is given on page 262 of the report, but the nature of the claims is not given; simply the names of the claimants.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is that in connection with the item found on page 20?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Montana is not asking about those claims.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Massachusetts advises me that they are not the same claims.

Mr. LODGE. No; what is in the bill relates only to claims arising prior to the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BURSUM. I move that the Senate take up for consideration House bill 4, Order of Business 509.

Mr. KING. Let it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4, the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4) granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors; and to certain Army nurses.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to take up that bill this evening. The hour is late, and I can tell the Senator that he will not get through with it to-night.

Mr. BURSUM. I submit that unless we do take it up there will be very little time to consider this legislation. The tariff bill will come on to-morrow. The bill is very important. It passed the House several months ago and ought to be considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had intended this afternoon to address myself to the situation in Mexico and devote considerable time to a discussion of the conditions there prevailing, to the Obregon government, to its failure to establish order, protect American lives and American property, and make reparation for the wrongs which have been done to American citizens. I pretermitted entering upon that discussion, which would have consumed considerable time, in order that we might proceed with the consideration and the conclusion of the bill which has now been passed.

My understanding was that if I would not enter upon that discussion this afternoon, at the conclusion of the consideration of that bill we would take a recess. I sincerely hope that we will not undertake now to take up this bill, because, if so, I shall have to start in on the address which I intended to enter upon some time ago.

I can assure the Senator from New Mexico that he will make nothing by taking up the bill to-night. It will not advance the bill at all. It may retard it.

Mr. BURSUM. There is no need of having any great length of debate on this bill. It is a very simple bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I wonder if we could not agree to have a night session some day next week in order to dispose of these pension bills?

Mr. KING. We will talk of that when we see what we do to-morrow with the tariff bill, and what arrangements are made respecting it. I am sure the Senator will find on this side a desire to accommodate him in every reasonable way.

Mr. CURTIS. Of course, we want these pension bills disposed of. They have been here a long while. Some of them are House bills, and because of the work of the former chairman of the Committee on Pensions in the Committee on Finance they were held in committee. The chairman has reported them out. Many of them are very old, and we would like to get rid of them. I doubt if we could go on with them to-night. If the Senator would consent, we might see if we could not to-morrow agree upon some night this week or next week to take them up and dispose of them.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to meet to-morrow with the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Kansas and see what is done to-morrow with the tariff; and we can then steer our course a little better, when we know what our friends upon the other side are going to do with the tariff bill.

Mr. BURSUM. If there is any way of having an assurance that the bills will be considered, I shall have no objection to waiting until then; but it seemed to me that under the program for consideration of the tariff bill there would be no opportunity to have these bills considered except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator that they will be considered before the session adjourns.

Mr. BURSUM. During the morning hour it has been habitual with the Senator from Utah to object to the consideration of all these bills. So that there will be no chance to take the bill up during the morning hour.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator that his bills will be considered before we adjourn. He need not worry.

Mr. BURSUM. I want to have an arrangement made as to a time to have them considered.

Mr. KING. I will be glad to talk with the Senator to-morrow about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico, to take up House bill 4.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURSUM. What became of my motion?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from New Mexico can move to-morrow morning that his bill be taken up. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought we were to have an executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. There are very few matters on the Executive Calendar, and we can have an executive session to-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 20, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 19, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord be gracious unto us according to our necessities; have compassion upon our weakness and ignorance, and give us great desire to be Thy children of light and truth. Day by day help us to live well, not because we are going to die but because we are going to live. Deepen our thoughts, inspire our purposes, and bring us into complete harmony with the very best that is in human thought and action. Above all transient things, may we still feel how supremely essential are the truths of the unseen and the eternal. When we separate to-day dismiss us with Thy blessing and go home with us. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEATH OF EX-REPRESENTATIVE LAFEAN.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I notice by the public prints that a former colleague of ours, Hon. Daniel Lafean, of Pennsylvania, died yesterday. It is thought appropriate by some of us who sat here with him that this statement be made in the RECORD so that the public may know that we have not forgotten him and that our esteem for him still continues.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1059. An act for the relief of J. B. Waterman;

S. 3111. An act to authorize the collection in monthly installments of indebtedness due the United States by general prisoners restored to duty, and for other purposes;

S. 1026. An act for the relief of Albert E. Magoffin;

S. 249. An act for the relief of certain tribes and nations of Indians in the State of Montana;

S. 250. An act authorizing the Crow Tribe of Indians residing in the State of Montana to submit claims to the Court of Claims;

S. 2281. An act to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Daniel S. Glover;

S. 3307. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the city of Springfield, Mass., certain streets within Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., and for other purposes; and

S. 2014. An act to provide for the settlement of small holding claims on unsurveyed land in the State of New Mexico.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 2158. An act to provide for the monthly payment of pensions; and

H. R. 2303. An act to provide for the establishment on the Mississippi River of a fish-rescue station, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 3057. An act for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown;

H. R. 9710. An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government-land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, North Dakota and South Dakota;

H. R. 8342. An act to empower the Attorney General of the United States to fix the compensation of clerks of the United States district courts;

H. R. 5762. An act providing for a municipal park for the city of Butte, Mont.;

H. R. 7234. An act for the relief of Miles Swift; and

H. R. 8460. An act to authorize the occupation and use of certain lands in Alaska by Ketchikan Post, No. 3, American Legion, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1059. An act for the relief of J. B. Waterman; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3111. An act to authorize the collection in monthly installments of indebtedness due the United States by general prisoners restored to duty, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1026. An act for the relief of Albert E. Magoffin; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 249. An act for the relief of certain tribes and nations of Indians in the State of Montana; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 250. An act authorizing the Crow Tribe of Indians residing in the State of Montana to submit claims to the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2281. An act to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Daniel S. Glover; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2014. An act to provide for the settlement of small holding claims on unsurveyed land in the State of New Mexico; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3307. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the city of Springfield, Mass., certain streets within Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COMMITTEE ELECTIONS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 327.

Resolved, That HARRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, Member of Congress from the tenth district of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on Education.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I have another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas submits another privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 328.

Resolved, That JOHN N. SANDLIN, Member of Congress from the fourth district of Louisiana, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on the Census.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania presents a privileged report from the Committee on Printing, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 21.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as reported to the Senate, be printed as a Senate document with an index, and that 27,000 additional copies be printed, of which 10,000 shall be for the Senate document room, 15,000 for the House document room, 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

With the following committee amendments

In line 6, strike out "twenty-seven" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen."

In line 7, strike out "ten" and insert "five," and in line 8, strike out "fifteen" and insert "eight."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, has it been customary in the past to print in this way as a document the bill as reported to the Senate?

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, yes; it has been. I hold in my hand a copy of the bill which was printed as a Senate document last summer, and the resolution which has been reported by our committee is in exactly the same form.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it to be printed in bill form?

Mr. KIESS. No; in document form with an index, and the Senate resolution provided for 27,000 copies. The House committee thought that number was excessive and reduced it to 15,000. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. I will.

Mr. WALSH. None of the amendments provide for the distribution of this document through the folding room, do they?

Mr. KIESS. No, Mr. Speaker. The resolution provides that the copies shall be distributed through the document room, which has been the form heretofore used with reference to tariff bills.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], in charge of the naval appropriation bill, whether it is his purpose to complete the bill to-day? I mean not only to carry it to the previous question, but to have the final vote to-day?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not see any reason why the bill may not be fully disposed of to-day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I merely ask that because numerous gentlemen are calling upon me to know whether or not we are going to vote to-day.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not see anything in the way of finishing up the bill to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 11228).

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Michigan will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 344, nays 0, not voting 85, as follows:

YEAS—344.

Almon	Davis, Tenn.	Kinkaid	Perkins
Andrew, Mass.	Deal	Kirkpatrick	Perlman
Andrews, Nebr.	Denison	Kissel	Petersen
Ansorge	Dickinson	Kline, N. Y.	Porter
Anthony	Dominick	Kline, Pa.	Pringey
Appleby	Dowell	Knight	Purnell
Arentz	Drane	Knutson	Quin
Aswell	Dupré	Kopp	Radcliffe
Atkeson	Echols	Kreider	Raker
Bacharach	Elliott	Lanham	Ramseyer
Bankhead	Ellis	Lankford	Rankin
Barbour	Evans	Larsen, Ga.	Ransley
Barkley	Fairfield	Larson, Minn.	Rayburn
Beck	Faust	Layton	Reber
Beedy	Favrot	Lazaro	Reece
Begg	Fenn	Lea, Calif.	Reed, N. Y.
Bell	Fess	Leatherwood	Reed, W. Va.
Benham	Fisher	Lee, Ga.	Rhodes
Bird	Fitzgerald	Lee, N. Y.	Ricketts
Bixler	Focht	Lineberger	Riordan
Black	Fordney	Linthicum	Roach
Blakeney	Frear	Little	Robertson
Bland, Ind.	Freeman	Logan	Robsion
Bland, Va.	French	London	Rogers
Blanton	Frothingham	Longworth	Rose
Boies	Fuller	Lowrey	Rosenbloom
Bond	Fulmer	Luce	Rouse
Bowers	Funk	Lyon	Rucker
Bowling	Gahn	McArthur	Sanders, Tex.
Box	Gallivan	McClintic	Sandlin
Brennan	Garner	McCormick	Scott, Mich.
Briggs	Garrett, Tenn.	McKenzie	Scott, Tenn.
Britten	Garrett, Tex.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Shaw
Brooks, Ill.	Gensman	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Shreve
Brooks, Pa.	Gernerd	McLaughlin, Pa.	Sinclair
Browne, Wis.	Gilbert	McPherson	Sinnott
Buchanan	Glynn	McSwain	Sisson
Bulwinkle	Goldsborough	MacGregor	Slemp
Burdick	Graham, Ill.	Madden	Smith, Idaho
Burke	Green, Iowa	Magee	Smith, Mich.
Burroughs	Greene, Vt.	Mann	Smithwick
Burtness	Griest	Mapes	Speaks
Burton	Griffin	Martin	Sproul
Butler	Hadley	Mead	Steagall
Byrnes, S. C.	Hardy, Colo.	Michener	Stedman
Byrns, Tenn.	Harrison	Miller	Steenerson
Cable	Haugen	Mills	Stephens
Campbell, Kans.	Hawes	Millspaugh	Stevenson
Campbell, Pa.	Hawley	Mondell	Stoll
Cannon	Hayden	Montague	Strong, Kans.
Carew	Hays	Montoya	Strong, Pa.
Carter	Herrick	Moore, Ill.	Sullivan
Chalmers	Hersey	Moore, Ohio	Summers, Wash.
Chandler, N. Y.	Hickey	Moore, Va.	Sumners, Tex.
Chandler, Okla.	Hicks	Moores, Ind.	Swank
Chindblom	Hill	Morgan	Swing
Christopherson	Himes	Morin	Tague
Clague	Hoch	Mott	Taylor, Ark.
Clarke, N. Y.	Hogan	Mudd	Taylor, N. J.
Classon	Hooker	Murphy	Temple
Clouse	Huddleston	Nelson, Me.	Ten Eyck
Cockran	Hukriede	Nelson, A. P.	Thomas
Codd	Hull	Nelson, J. M.	Thompson
Cole, Iowa	Humphreys	Newton, Minn.	Tillman
Collier	Husted	Newton, Mo.	Tilson
Collins	Hutchinson	Nolan	Timberlake
Colton	Jacoway	Norton	Tincher
Connally, Tex.	James	O'Connor	Tinkham
Connell	Johnson, Ky.	Ogden	Treadway
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, Wash.	Oldfield	Tucker
Cooper, Ohio	Jones, Pa.	Oliver	Tyson
Cooper, Wis.	Jones, Tex.	Olpp	Underhill
Coughlin	Kahn	Osborne	Vaile
Crago	Kearns	Overstreet	Vare
Cramton	Keller	Padgett	Vestal
Crisp	Kelley, Mich.	Paige	Vinson
Crowther	Kennedy	Park, Ga.	Volk
Cullen	Ketcham	Parker, N. J.	Volstead
Dale	Kiess	Parker, N. Y.	Walsh
Dallinger	Kincheloe	Parks, Ark.	Ward, N. Y.
Darrow	Kindred	Patterson, Mo.	Wason
Davis, Minn.	King	Patterson, N. J.	Watson

Weaver	White, Me.	Wise	Woodyard
Webster	Williamson	Wood, Ind.	Wright
Wheeler	Wilson	Woodruff	Wyant
White, Kans.	Wingo	Woods, Va.	Zihlman

NAYS—0.

NOT VOTING—85.

Ackerman	Goodykoontz	Lehlbach	Shelton
Anderson	Gorman	Luhring	Siegel
Brand	Gould	McDuffie	Snell
Brown, Tenn.	Graham, Pa.	McFadden	Snyder
Cantrill	Greene, Mass.	Maloney	Stafford
Clark, Fla.	Hammer	Mansfield	Stiness
Cole, Ohio	Hardy, Tex.	Merritt	Sweet
Copley	Hudspeth	Michaelson	Taylor, Colo.
Curry	Ireland	O'Brien	Taylor, Tenn.
Dempsey	Jefferis, Nebr.	Pou	Towner
Doughton	Jeffers, Ala.	Rainey, Ala.	Upshaw
Drewry	Johnson, Miss.	Rainey, Ill.	Voigt
Driver	Johnson, S. Dak.	Reavis	Walters
Dunbar	Kelly, Pa.	Riddick	Ward, N. C.
Dunn	Kendall	Rodenberg	Williams
Dyer	Kitchin	Rossdale	Winslow
Edmonds	Kleczka	Ryan	Wurzbach
Fairchild	Kraus	Sabath	Yates
Fields	Kunz	Sanders, Ind.	Young
Fish	Lampert	Sanders, N. Y.
Foster	Langley	Schall
Free	Lawrence	Sears

So the motion was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. Sanders of Indiana with Mr. Kitchin.
Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Jeffers of Alabama.
Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania with Mr. Sears.
Mr. Williams with Mr. Driver.
Mr. Walters with Mr. Doughton.
Mr. Merritt with Mr. Brand.
Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. Hudspeth.
Mr. Dunbar with Mr. Hammer.
Mr. Gorman with Mr. Rainey of Illinois.
Mr. McFadden with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.
Mr. Lawrence with Mr. Clark of Florida.
Mr. Dempsey with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Free with Mr. Ward of North Carolina.
Mr. Shelton with Mr. Cantrill.
Mr. Ackerman with Mr. Fields.
Mr. Luhring with Mr. Kunz.
Mr. Lampert with Mr. McDuffie.
Mr. Ireland with Mr. Pou.
Mr. Winslow with Mr. Upshaw.
Mr. Maloney with Mr. Mansfield.
Mr. Young with Mr. Sabath.
Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Drewry.
Mr. Foster with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi.
Mr. Snell with Mr. Hardy of Texas.
Mr. Dunn with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.
Mr. Greene of Massachusetts with Mr. Swank.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee of the Whole suspended last night we were discussing an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]. I am not quite clear whether the gentleman from New York had finished the discussion or not.

Mr. HICKS. I will say to my friend that I would like to add a few words at the conclusion of the discussion. There are several gentleman who have expressed a desire to speak on this matter, one of whom is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is before the committee.

Mr. LANHAM was recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a moment, not to be taken out of his time?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan, now that there are more Members here than when his statement was made previously, if he will not again advise the House as to his purpose to vote to-day?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say that I do not see anything in the situation which would prolong the consideration of the bill beyond to-day. It seems as though we might easily conclude the bill and have a final vote upon it this afternoon. That is my hope and expectation.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, from the study which I have given to this measure and the corresponding Army appropriation bill, I realize somewhat, I think, the importance of the respective items for aviation, both with reference to the heavier-than-air and the lighter-than-air machines. I have given probably more study to that feature of the question which deals with the lighter-than-air craft. The helium project has been carried on in this country on a 50-50 basis by the Army and the Navy, and consequently the appropriations for it have been made through the appropriation bills for those two services. In the Army appropriation bill which recently passed the House an item was carried of $400,000 for the helium project during the coming fiscal year. In order to carry out the 50-50 plan between the two departments, it would be necessary for a corresponding sum to be carried in the present bill.

I read with a great deal of interest the hearings, and I see by a statement made on page 935 of the hearings that that fact is recognized by the chairman and other members of the subcommittee, and that it is intended that of the total sum specified in the bill the amount of $400,000 shall be used for the helium project to meet and match the $400,000 in the Army appropriation bill. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Michigan if I am correct?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is entirely correct as to the amount included for the helium plant.

Mr. LANHAM. I have seen in the last day or two a statement in the press to the effect that a high naval officer gave the opinion that, owing to the "excessive reduction" of the lump-sum aviation appropriation, the operation of the helium plant would be curtailed as much, if not more, during the next fiscal year as it has been during the present fiscal year.

I do not know what the purpose of those in charge of the administration of the appropriation may be. Realizing the importance of the helium project, if it be true that the lump sum made available will necessitate the curtailment of the operation of the helium plant, I think it most important that the item should be increased, at least by a sufficient sum to take care of that project.

Last year the naval appropriation bill carried an item of $400,000 for the helium project, and the Army bill carried only $250,000. The practical operation was that, instead of having $650,000 available for the operation of the helium plant, when the Army appropriation of $250,000 was exhausted, inasmuch as the two departments worked on a 50-50 basis, the Navy Department went no further, and so the total expenditure was $500,000. If the statement in the press be true, we are going to have the situation reversed, with the smaller sum coming from the Navy, but with the practical operation the same as to the amount available.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I will.

Mr. MANN. What assurance would the gentleman have if we increased the lump-sum appropriation that any part of the increase will be used for the helium plant?

Mr. LANHAM. I will say that unless there was some amendment appended providing that it should be expended for the helium project, I do not know that there would be any assurance in fact that the increase would be used for that purpose. I think that if the sum were increased, as requested by the Navy Department for aviation, the whole program would be carried out.

Mr. MANN. It is just as easy to insert an amendment in the pending paragraph providing the $400,000 as to insert a similar amendment if the lump sum was increased.

Mr. LANHAM. I have in mind the offering of an amendment to that effect, inasmuch as that is the position of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I am opposed to increasing this appropriation, and in fact I am opposed to making any appropriation for the purpose of attempting to use for military purposes these large dirigible balloons. I had something to say on this subject in connection with the Army bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], who has just taken his seat, on that particular occasion saw fit to criticize my remarks to some extent, but if he will read in the RECORD what I had to say, and read also what he had to say, he will see that there was no difference whatever between him and myself with reference to the properties of helium gas, although he said at that time that I was very much mistaken about it. If the gentleman will take my remarks as I made them, he will be compelled to admit that every statement of fact that I made was absolutely correct.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. Has the gentleman since that time had the opportunity of hearing the illustrated lecture by General Mitchell with reference to the availability of lighter-than-air aircraft as carriers over heavier-than-air aircraft and the prospective use of helium in that important work?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would say to the gentleman that, due to sickness in my family, I was unable to attend that lecture, which did not relate to the subject of the production of helium, but I have made some considerable study of the subject. I have read a long article that recently appeared in the Scientific American, as perhaps the gentleman has, with reference to helium gas. However, I do not think it is worth while to continue the discussion of whether we will use these big dirigibles, because the House on a former occasion has voted that we would do so. I merely wanted at this time, so far as that matter is concerned, to make my position clear, in order that if I should be in Congress a year or two longer I might, as I believe I will be able to do, at some future time show how useless these great elephants of the air are for military purposes. This, of course, is a matter of opinion, upon which experts differ.

What I rose to call the attention of the committee to at this time is the fact that we have already expended $8,000,000 on helium gas. It can not be made for commercial purposes on account of the great expense connected with it. It is true that it is noninflammable; it has that great advantage for use in dirigible balloons, and they can not be set on fire either by sparks from the engine or by explosive bombs; but the question still arises whether it is worth while for us to continue our expenses until we have expended probably $15,000,000, as we will have to if we carry out this program, for the purpose of filling balloons that will be, as I think, of no use for military purposes after they have been constructed. I am for that reason opposed not only to an enlargement of the appropriation, but I regret that there is any appropriation whatever for this purpose.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is not a Member of Congress who does not appreciate the fact that in the next war, if we have a war, a determining factor in it will be the aircraft of the Nation. I do not believe there is a Member of Congress, although our duties are complex and sometimes are hard to fathom, who does not believe with me that there should be a saving in the obsolete methods and preparations for war, and that that saving should be used in the interest of the national defense in the air. Man has conquered the air to such an extent that if we have another war that war will be decided and won by the nation having the best aircraft.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman not also recognize, as of equal if not superior importance, synthetical chemistry?

Mr. TINCHER. Certainly, of equal importance, at any rate. What is the situation? Every Member of this Congress arose this morning to find what? To find a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury showing the depleted condition of our Treasury. Read on and what do we further find? We find the Secretary of War over at the Senate demanding an increase in the standing Army, and we came here to find in the galleries, with badges on and on the streets with badges on, the representatives of the navy yards and the Navy Department demanding a larger Navy. So long as these great departments have their representatives demand every dollar that is in the Federal Treasury, we are supposed to turn a deaf ear and be blind to the real way to prepare for national defense for the future. There is not a man here who would not in private conversation say to me that he would gladly take off the Army bill $50,000,000 and that he would like to take off the Navy bill $50,000,000, two great expenditures of this Government, and use it for a real American defense, for real defense for this Nation, in the way that will be used if we ever have another war, in the way that will be effective if we have another war, in the organization of a department that would not permit any nation to excel us in the development of aircraft. [Applause.] But we will not do that; we are in the old rut. We will not have an aircraft department of any importance in this Nation so long as the Secretaries of the War and Navy Departments through their organizations can take from the Federal Treasury every dollar that it is possible for the taxpayers to put into the Treasury. I have no patience with the arguments that have been made on either side of the big and little navy proposition. I believe the men in this House who voted for 67,000 personnel were firmly convinced that that number is sufficient to maintain the treaty Navy, and I am willing to go further and say that I believe the average Member of the House who voted for a larger personnel voted for it upon the theory that it would require that many men in the treaty Navy, but the country through the press has no way in the world of arriving at that conclusion, because a picture has been drawn here through the influence of these departments, that the man who stands for a 67,000 personnel wants to scuttle the Navy and that has been answered by those in favor of that number by saying that the man who stands for an 86,000 personnel is favoring some shipyard, and as confirmation of that to some extent here come the navy yard men this morning with badges on, with the plea to save the navy yards. However, the average Member of Congress does not pay much attention to those things. I wish this House might rise in its dignity as the representatives of the people of this country and, with the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury before us as to the condition of the Treasury, with our own opinions which we have, with the information which we have gained because of the experiments of last summer with reference to the use of aircraft on the Navy, with the information that we have concerning the probabilities of our needing a large standing Army in the near future, do what we all know to be our duty, viz, tell the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy that we are going to think of America first, and that we are going to take from them, which is the place the money is spent, sufficient money to maintain an aircraft division equal to if not in the lead of any nation in the world. That is the way the next war will be decided. There is no more prospect of these battleships that we are going to maintain or the standing Army that we are maintaining now winning the war than there is of the rifle that was used in the Civil War deciding the next war, and we all know it. I want to vote conscientiously for the best national defense possible, but you will all agree with me how hard it is to do that with this clamor that is going on. I say that if this Congress is able before its adjournment to pass a bill consolidating the departments of the Army and the Navy, it will have done a great work for this Nation, because then we will have only one man to fight if we want to get a little money for real progress. [Applause.]

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman [applause], my voice is not all for war but for peace. What is the emblem we always have of peace? Peace following Winged Victory. The sacred poet cried, "Oh, that I had the wings of a dove that I might fly away and be at peace." It is always a brooding peace or the gentle flight of the peace dove with her white uplifted wing. We have, too, the winged eagle, watching always, vigilant-eyed, over our homeland. So I come with just a word, only a word, for the wings and eyes of our national defense—the great winged birds of the Air Service, whose vigilance is that we may have peace. Our adventurous young men, in or out of the Army and Navy, are going to push forward into the wonderful realm of the air. Our General Government can do much for peace and for saving life by going forward in the development of knowledge, of safe transit for its messengers of peace through an adequate Air Service. On this one thing let us not fail our country, but through our strong aviation service strengthen the wings of vigilant eagles and gentle doves so that the great winged birds may fly over our country from shore to shore, from north to south, and by their vigilance help keep not only American peace but world peace. [Applause.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been listening for the past week to the debate on the bill now under consideration and have not expected to say anything, but after the vote of 177 to 130 on Saturday, in favor of increasing the personnel of the Navy from 67,000 to 86,000, I propose to let the people of the seventh district of South Carolina, as well as the committee, know why I voted with the subcommittee, which stood for 67,000 men.

The opponents of the bill, most of them able speakers, have been hashing and rehashing the same old story, "ye must be prepared." The experts say that a Navy with a personnel of 67,000 means war and destruction. This is but the same kind of propaganda being scattered by the Navy officials, naval experts, and practically all newspapers; even the crossroads country papers are carrying cartoons showing the United States with a 67,000-man Navy standing in third place with Great Britain and Japan. The United States Chamber of Commerce, the mouthpiece of big business, true to their calling, are yelling the same kind of propaganda, while big business, as represented by them, has used the big stick over this Republican Congress so successfully that they have removed or cut to the core the surtaxes and the excess-profits taxes. This same Chamber of Commerce is standing up for a sales tax, unmindful of the masses who are almost bankrupt on account of heavy taxation.

I voted for a Republican peace resolution because it was part of the program leading to an association for the purpose of arranging for disarmament; knowing, as I did, of the delay of two or more years after the war on the part of the United States to call together in conference or association the bleeding nations of the world, in order to further show them that we are a peace-loving people, that we did not enter the war for the purpose of enlarging our territory but for the purpose of putting an end to the spilling of blood, and for the further purpose of showing the world that we of the United States of America would not stand for such uncivilized conduct.

When Secretary Hughes told Great Britain, France, and Japan that we would fix the standing of the Navy of the United States along with that of Great Britain and the others according to their class, he showed clearly that we stand for peace. In doing this he proposed to scrap the finest ships that we now have under construction, which would mean millions of the people's money wasted. These so-called experts, who seem to dictate the wording of all important legislation in Congress and who would break the Treasury for their personal gain, no doubt brought about the building of the large ships and began the large program which, since it is necessary for us to destroy, is helping to break the people and put the country in a bankrupt condition. It is no wonder that the agricultural interests, the laboring people, and legitimate business are saying to-day that Congress is failing to function. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], and the American people have agreed, that it would be better for Congress to adjourn. I said in my campaign, and I say it on the floor of this House, that we need less speech making and more business in connection with legislation in Congress. Seventy-five per cent of the Members of this Congress are professional men, who are supposed to be capable of building constructive legislation; but I charge you that too many of you have your ears too close to the ground wires. You are listening to the politician and lobbyist and are not heeding the cries of the poverty-stricken miner, whose family has been deprived of a home, and even of the tents in which they lived; the cries of men, women, and children who are toiling 15 hours in the day that the world might be fed and clothed; the cries from legitimate business, which has been stifled by the premeditated high-handedness on the part of big business, the Money Trust, the Fertilizer Trust, and the Railroad Trust. We have thousands of parasites operating between the producer and the consumer who are sapping the very lifeblood out of them. You know this, and yet you have suggested no remedy to eliminate these wrongs. Banks, merchants, and farmers in the West and South are going daily into bankruptcy, losing their homes and all that they have been toiling for, and in a great many instances that which their forefathers worked for.

If you will look at this bill from any other standpoint than that of "I have a navy yard in my district or my State," or that big business is doing millions of dollars of business in foreign countries and it needs the protection of a large Navy at any price, although, as I stated a few minutes ago, these same big business interests find it necessary to be relieved of paying surtaxes and excess-profits taxes, then you will agree with Mr. KELLEY, the chairman of the subcommittee; my colleague [Mr. BYRNES]; and others who have shown you that this bill will come up to the full standard of the 5-5-3 ratio.

The rest of the world is watching the United States at this time to see if we propose to carry out the plans of the conference. I contend that since we are to be in a continued session that it would be much better to even come a little below the 5-5-3 ratio than to have an excess of 20,000 men. Should we find that we are below this ratio it would be an easy matter to increase the personnel of the Navy at any time. These gentlemen—Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, and Mr. OLIVER—have given you facts and figures to prove conclusively that the 67,000 personnel will be a gracious plenty to bring our Navy up to the 5-5-3 ratio. This being true, the addition of an excess of 20,000 men will tend to embarrass other nations who so willingly accepted our proposition.

Much has been said about "who are we going to fight?" You had better put it, "Who are we going to let perish?" During the past few months you have voted twenty millions to save starving Russia, you have voted to give Austria the twenty-five millions that she justly owes us in order to keep her from sinking by the roadside. Your experts, that you so much rely on for advice when you wish to pass important legislation, would to-day cancel the eleven billions which are owed to us by our allies, who say that they are unable to pay and that they are nearly bankrupt. Yet if you should want to give a decent cash bonus to the men who bled and died that we might live these same so-called experts and financiers object, saying that it would mean the breaking of the Treasury.

On April 28, 1921, I made a speech on the floor of this House and quoted figures from the Secretary of the Treasury to show where our money goes. I proved to you that 93 per cent of every dollar spent by the Government of the United States was spent for past, present, and future wars, and here you propose to keep it up.

I want to call your attention to the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he is in a position to know what he is talking about—

> If you increase the personnel of the Navy from 67,000 to 86,000, the additional cost, with bills now pending and others that will be pending, you will bring the expense of the Army and Navy at this time to $800,000,000, as against the expense during 1916 of $280,000,000.

We are told further by Mr. MADDEN that with this additional expenditure we will have a deficit of $455,000,000, which means that you not only eat up all revenue coming in from an already tax-burdened people but you will have to increase taxes many millions to pay off the deficit.

I have a letter from a lady in South Carolina stating that at the beginning of the war she and her husband had a home, had money in the bank, and stood well in society, but he felt it his duty to take up arms in defense of his country. He was promoted several times, wounded, and placed in a hospital where, in order to ease his pain, he was given dope until he became a drug addict. To-day he is in the hospital on his own expense, unnoticed and uncared-for by the Government. He has lost his home and his money and his wife is dependent on friends and neighbors for the support of herself and their three children. There are hundreds of such cases and thousands of ex-service men and others out of work. Yet we who have over one-third of the gold of the world, which should be used in developing our national resources and for the education of the people of our Nation, under the control of the influence of these experts and a Republican administration you propose to maintain a large Army and Navy during peace times. To show further how you propose to carry out your destructive plans, which are absolutely against the interests of the masses of people, you are using millions of this money in building skyscrapers for the Federal reserve banks in New York and elsewhere. These same banks, however, in the fall of 1920 put the agricultural interests in statu quo.

Some of you who claim to represent the laboring man, the agricultural interests, the one interest that if made prosperous means prosperity to all other legitimate business, thought when you created the Federal reserve bank system—and it is a great one—when you created the War Finance Corporation and the Interstate Commerce Commission, that you had completed the job. In a great many of these you have wonderful structures and instruments for the welfare of the country, but you need to go a step further and amend these laws so as to have some say-so in the matter as to how they are to function. Do you think it wise to allow seven men to be able to dictate the policies of these great financial institutions so as to make or break any section of the country at will? Do you think it right to give all power to the Interstate Commerce Commission that they, in turn, may allow the railroad owners to not only break down railroading but rob the American shipper at the expense of the producer and consumer? I stand for the extension of the War Finance Corporation, but I challenge the committee in charge of the loaning of this money in the Southern States to show me that even 10 per cent of the loans made to the banks have gone direct to the producer. On the other hand, I am satisfied that I can show you that 90 per cent of all the money borrowed by the various banks in the South have gone to liquidate frozen debts of the banks to their correspondent banks, mostly in New York. I agree with you who are ready to question this statement that by relieving the banks it, to a certain extent, relieves the farmer, but only in the granting of time by renewing his paper with his banker.

Check over the banks in the South who are in a position to carry not only whatever amounts are now owing to them by their customers but who are able to borrow of this War Finance Corporation and lend to the needy farmer and merchant. I charge that you will not find one out of ten doing it.

When my colleague [Mr. BYRNES] introduced last year an amendment to reduce the Army from 175,000 or more to 150,000 we had the same kind of propaganda from the newspapers and from the Members of the House, saying that we were going to destroy the Army. Even the Republican floor leader [Mr. MONDELL] made an extended argument on the floor of the House against any such procedure, and he, or some one of the other Republican Members, said it was a scheme to wreck the Republican Party. We, however, passed the amendment and saved several millions of dollars to the taxpayers. Contrary to Mr. MONDELL's contention and that of the experts, it worked so well that we voted a further reduction of 35,000 the other day.

I am ready to go to the limit in spending the people's money if you will do it along business lines, as you would in your own private business. The laboring people, the farmers, and the business men are getting tired of promises, and I predict that unless changes are made in the type of legislation passed here you are going to see in this House a different type Representative in the near future. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, when the Conference on the Limitation of Armament concluded its work on the subjects it considered I blistered my palms applauding the steps taken in the direction of disarmament. You did. That conference, however, did not take up the question of limiting the activities of the several Governments with respect to the development of their air service, which is by its limitation a means of defense at home and not of conquest in distant lands or seas. But the most effective weapon of defense, now and hereafter, will be in the air. A $40,000 airplane, manned with three men, carrying ammunition that costs less than $20,000, will be a match for a $40,000,000 battleship manned by 1,100 men and 125 officers, with ammunition that costs hundreds of thousands of dollars. I witnessed bombardments from airplanes 60 miles at sea, and I know how absolutely effective these weapons of defense can be and are. I am amazed, I was amazed last summer, at the inertia of men in high places in the Army and in the Navy whose duty it is to promote the national defense in the air. Instead of helping, they did much to smother every activity, so far as it was possible for them to do so, the development of means of defense in the air. The propaganda from the War Department and from the Navy Department—from the old, fossilized bureaus of those departments—was to the effect that there were no important developments in the achievements of the airmen. It was their contention that the sinking of a battleship with an airplane did not change the old methods by which the Nation must be defended in the future; that we must go on with our enormous battleships, with our great guns on land; that we must pursue the old methods. And the newspapers played into their hands, and the most untruthful statements with respect to what was accomplished and what was really developed were published daily while these experiments were being carried on on the sea and in the air with respect to what can be done by airplanes in the national defense. The secret of it is that you can provide for the national defense with hundreds of thousands of dollars in the air where it takes hundreds of millions of dollars [applause] with great battleships and large armies. You can with a few hundred officers and a few thousand men do the same work for the national defense in the air that it takes thousands of officers and hundreds of thousands of men on ships and in armies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ARENTZ. If the gentleman will yield, I think all Members who went on that trip last summer observed the same condition I did, namely, that instead of the airplanes being permitted to attack at once they were kept waiting for 30 or 45 minutes circling the air, and instead of the ships being 30 or 40 miles from shore they were 75 miles from shore, and everything possible done to make the bombing expedition a failure.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. The gentleman from Nevada is correct. The most that could be done to make a failure by those in charge was done. They would not permit the planes to go out and make the attack as they had planned to make it. Their plan of attack was not carried out according to the plan developed by those interested in the development of aviation, but by those interested in the development of large armies and large navies. If those in charge of the air activities last summer had been permitted to make the attack as they had planned it, they would have shown the development of a means of national defense that will make it unnecessary hereafter for any nation to maintain great armies and great navies at the expense of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. McSWAIN. I want to ask my friend if, having that in his mind, he does not think it would be necessary to establish an independent air service?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do.

Mr. McSWAIN. If it is left under either the Army or the Navy, these ultraconservative men will so completely throttle the progress of the work that it will not accomplish its possibilities.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Men who have been trained as naval officers in the management of battleships, men who have been trained as cavalrymen and infantrymen, are not the men to aid in the development of the Air Service. Many officers are converted to the value of this service. The men who will develop the Air Service are men who are as enthusiastic to the possibilities of developing that service as are those to-day who are developing the other arms of national defense.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Are not the officers of the Army and Navy, both, who are in charge of the Air Service in the respective services just as actively interested in the Air Service as anybody else could be?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They are; but they do not have the last word. They are subordinates in both the Army and the Navy. That is where the trouble lies.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it would be in the interest of anything to have an independent air service in control of our ships at sea with a Navy and not under the command of the Navy?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Air Service would coordinate, of course.

Mr. MANN. Maybe the independent air service would be in control of it, then. It is ridiculous to possess an air service that is independent in war.

Mr. McSWAIN. Do not the Army and Navy have to cooperate under one Commander in Chief in time of war?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Of course they do. This is true, that when you send men into the air with a well-equipped airplane they are under the control of the pilot, and should be. They should and must do what they think is the proper thing to do.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. What is a well-equipped airplane?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. One that has been thoroughly developed and has a good pilot and a good observer, with all the essentials of a fighting plane.

Mr. LAYTON. All of which is not worth a hill of beans unless they have got something to drop, to explode, and to destroy.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Surely.

Mr. LAYTON. And that depends upon synthetical chemistry.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes. And that does not cost a great deal of money, either; they go prepared with it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman get the information he is giving to the House to-day from a certain officer of the Air Service who has more ability to break in on the front pages of a newspaper than in anything else?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I got my information from experience in the air. I have been 60 miles out at sea in an airplane and I have seen bombs dropped from the plane and hit a target. [Applause.] We dropped six bombs from the airplane on which I happened to be at the time and hit the target four times out of the six.

Mr. KNUTSON. I congratulate the gentleman on his narrow escape.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENTZ. I suppose that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is talking about the man who made the expedition with airplanes 60 or 70 miles from shore and took his chances with his subordinates and taught them the greatest lesson that he could teach them—a man who made a record in France that can not be beaten by anyone. I refer to General Mitchell. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not think any officer in the late war made a more dashing or exceptional record than General Mitchell. [Applause.] No man to-day stands out more conspicuously as an expert in the line of work in which he is interested and engaged than he. Those who have been trained under his direction are enthusiastic airmen. They will take their lives in their hands any moment and go to the duties to which he directs them.

Mr. KNUTSON. I did not have General Mitchell in mind, and I am very sorry the gentleman from Nevada would connect General Mitchell with what I said.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not take anybody's propaganda as to what might be done in the air. In company with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] we went to Langley Field in the air. We went from Langley Field 60 miles to sea in the air. We dropped bombs on a target at sea. We know what can be done with bombs from airplanes. It is not a matter of hearsay. It is a matter of experience and observation. And I am in favor of this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] will increase, if adopted, the appropriation for maintenance of shore stations and for repairs about $1,000,000. The amount carried in the bill is about $500,000 more than the amount being expended for a similar purpose this year. We went into the matter very thoroughly when the chief of the bureau was before the committee. There was one item of about $500,000 set down as a miscellaneous item. The chief of the bureau was not able to give the committee any information to speak of as to what the $500,000 miscellaneous item was for. Ordinarily miscellaneous items are small items, and the committee did not feel that we would be justified in allowing $500,000 out of an item of $5,000,000 under the head of miscellaneous expenditures unless the bureau chief could give in much greater detail what he intended to do with the $500,000. So we eliminated it entirely.

Mr. MONDELL. Otherwise you gave them what they asked.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, not just that. Now, the other reductions made were various smaller reductions at different stations, where the committee did not feel that it was necessary to spend as much money as was spent last year. They asked for more money than was spent last year, and while the committee granted some increases over last year we did not in every instance give quite all that was requested. We could not see any reason why, with the same shore establishments, and with wages for civilian employees being somewhat reduced and expenses for material somewhat reduced, there should be an expenditure in excess of $500,000 over last year, and I am inclined to think that the committee was reasonably generous in the allowance.

Let me say that the committee was in full sympathy with everything in the bill which had for its purpose the putting of aviation into the fleet. We gave them all the men that they asked for for the two carriers that are to go into commission, or rather for the one carrier and one tender. We gave them 500 additional men to go on the battleships when the catapults are completed, and we carry the necessary funds for the construction of the catapults; so that the committee was thoroughly in sympathy with this air development, so far as it is made effective in the fleet, and we did not stint the department in any way in the funds which they asked for for fleet purposes. But we felt that we should make whatever reductions could properly be made in the upkeep of these shore establishments.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Was the importance of inspecting planes and having expert mechanics on the shore in connection with these planes brought to the gentleman's attention?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Was it called to the attention of the gentleman that recent accidents in the Air Service have been largely due to the fact that pilots took their planes into the air without having been properly inspected because of a shortage of men and skilled mechanics to make the inspections?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, I rather doubt the accuracy of the statement of my good friend from Kansas as to the cause. The fact may be correct, but I am inclined to think that the Navy Department, with 96,000 men in the Navy, could have properly assigned to aviation such men as were necessary for inspection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But did not.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If they did not do so, of course that is beyond the control of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield first to my friend from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to pay my compliments to the gentleman from Michigan for his very liberal attitude toward aviation. He and I have worked together in regard to this matter, and I am sincere in saying that he is a friend of aviation. In the past he has very kindly consulted me in this matter, and, on the whole, I think his bill is liberal toward aviation. In certain matters we disagree, however. The department asked for more men than he has given. He has given them 2,000 men less than they asked for.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I spoke of that the other day. Perhaps the gentleman was not then on the floor. The chief of the bureau did ask for a greater number from the department itself, but the department never brought to the Committee on Appropriations any such request for men as the Chief of the Bureau of Aviation conveyed to the department.

Mr. HICKS. I think there is a little confusion in regard to what came from the department, but I will not press that matter now because that water has gone over the dam. This last year we spent about $4,500,000 for these shore stations, which was $500,000 less than they were able to get along with, and they had to take that amount from construction account, which means that we curtailed the construction of planes that much. In order to continue on last year's basis it would take $5,000,000, which is the amount provided for, but this will only permit aviation to operate on a very reduced basis. I feel it should operate on a full basis.

It seems now, when we have cut down battleship construction, aviation should go ahead, and in order that it should go ahead we ought to have the additional amount as provided for in my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This is a department that has been recently organized. The Chief of the Bureau of Aviation has been at the head of the bureau only four or five months, as I recollect, and he had to bring together an organization picked out from the various other bureaus of the Navy, and he was not in a position, because of that fact, to supply the committee with as much information as he, no doubt, will be able to supply at a later date, and we excused some shortcomings as to the information furnished on the ground that he had been connected with the bureau only a short time. But there is this fact to be considered in connection with what the gentleman from New York says: That because this bureau is a new one we have provided that the fund for aviation shall be continued as it was last year, as one fund, so that if we have made any error in supplying an amount too small for one purpose and they have an excess in some other fund, as they had last year, they can use the excess to make up the shortage.

Mr. HICKS. I do not think they had an excess in any item. What they did was absolutely to stop construction of planes by $500,000, and they took that money to make up the deficit in shore stations, a deficit caused by a too heavy reduction in this year's appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, the whole question of what they are going to do in aviation down there is still in a rather unsettled state. Their plans are not complete as to what they are going to do with lighter-than-air craft. They do not know how much they are going to spend on that. They do not know whether it is going to be a development which is worth while in war or not—the development of these dirigibles. And so there may be funds carried for that which they will not need. I am inclined to think that altogether we have been very liberal with the department for the upkeep of these shore establishments, and we have been very liberal in making the necessary appropriations to carry the work into the fleet.

Now, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York and the House to the further fact that this bill is now some $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 short of what it will be for aviation, because under the rules of the House we are not able to provide anything for new aircraft in this bill. Last year we put into the bill a provision for new aircraft, but it went out on a point of order, the Chair holding that aircraft were ships and that they had to be authorized before they could be appropriated for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. So this bill, carrying an aircraft item of $7,000,000 or $8,000,000, will have to be augmented further by some $8,000,000 or $9,000,000, so that the total for aircraft will be about $16,000,000.

I want to call attention now briefly to what we are doing for aircraft, taking the Army and Navy together.

Mr. SISSON. Before the gentleman begins to discuss that, will he yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. During the consideration of the Army bill I consulted with the gentleman in reference to the amount of money that the Navy would be willing to appropriate for the production of helium. It was understood at that time that the Navy were to meet the Army in whatever appropriation the Army bill might carry for that purpose. The Army bill carries $400,000. Now, is it understood that $400,000 will be carried in this bill for the production of helium?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is entirely right about that.

Mr. SISSON. I am very glad to know that that is understood also in the department, because we had quite an extensive hearing on that subject, and we feel that they can get the maximum result by adding enough to keep the helium plant running 12 months in the year. I do not know that this is quite enough to do that, but it will come very near doing it; and if we can get helium produced in that great quantity, we then will have enough to make our lighter-than-air craft a real adjunct of the Army and Navy in time of war.

In order that this may be properly understood, will the gentleman have any objection to a proviso in this clause providing that $400,000 shall be used for this purpose?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I shall not have the slightest objection to that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, something was said a while ago, or a colloquy took place between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] as to a separate air establishment. Of course, I do not know whether that would be an advisable thing or not, but it has a good many elements about it that appeal to me. It is the way the air service is handled in Great Britain. They have one air establishment. We have an air establishment in the Army and another air establishment in the Navy.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman might add also that we have a separate air establishment in the Marine Corps.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We have a separate air establishment in the Marine Corps. We have in the Army about 8,000 enlisted men in aviation, and there are about 8,000 more civilians in aviation in the Army, making a total air force in the Army of about 16,000, exclusive of the officers. We have provided in the bill here before the House about 3,200 enlisted men for naval aviation, and there are about 1,800 civilians, making a total of 5,000 men in aviation in the Navy, exclusive of officers. In the Army and Navy there is an air personnel of 21,000 men, enlisted and civilians, at the present time.

General Mitchell returned from Europe a few days ago and we asked him to come before the committee and give us some information relative to the British establishment. He testified that they have an authorized force in Great Britain of 30,000 men, but that up to the present time they have enlisted only 23,000 men, so that the British establishment of 23,000 men will be fairly comparable with our Army and Navy aviation forces added together. I asked Mr. Mitchell this question:

Is the total of enlisted men in the British air force 23,000?

General MITCHELL. Yes; about 23,000, and the total number of officers that they have at the present time is about 2,800.

He then testified that they did not have any civilians to speak of in the British air service; that all the men who were performing air duty in the British air service were enlisted men, so that we have a fairly comparable force in the two countries. I asked General Mitchell this question:

In the assignment of men and officers to the ships of the Navy have you any information as to what ships in the British Navy have aviation upon them and as to the number of officers and men so employed on each ship?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is a rather important matter, and I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then, General Mitchell went on and detailed ship by ship all the British airplane carriers and other craft carrying any air force, and said that the entire number of officers and men afloat in the British Navy was 188 officers and 850 men.

Mr. HICKS. That is, connected with the air service in the British Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; afloat. I said:

That would represent every man and every officer afloat on account of aviation in the British Navy?

General MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. One hundred and eighty-eight officers and 850 men represent every officer and every man afloat that can be chargeable to aviation in the British Navy at the present time?

General MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Then I asked him this question:

In addition to the number that are carried afloat, is there any other part of the British air service that can be properly charged against the navy?

He said:

Yes; and in that connection you must take into consideration their schools, supply points, etc.

Then I said:

Suppose you give us all the other units of the British air force which may be properly charged against the navy, giving the number of officers and the number of men in each unit.

Then he went down through the entire list of shore stations that are in any way connected with the British Navy, giving the name of the station, the number of men and officers at each station all through the British Empire, and finally gave this figure for such shore establishments—250 officers and 1,197 men. Then I said to General Mitchell:

If you add the 188 officers and the 850 men afloat to the 250 officers and 1,197 men that you have just mentioned, that makes a total for the British air force chargeable to the navy of how many officers and men?

General MITCHELL. Four hundred and thirty-eight officers and 2,047 men.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. They have a united air service—the army and the navy have no separate service?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is right. Then I said:

The royal air force has shops and repair plants at which aircraft and equipment for the air service are kept in repair?

General Mitchell replied:

They have central shops where they keep up the equipment that is on duty with the units.

Then I asked:

Now, what proportion of all the aircraft in the British Royal Air Service assigned afloat and to those shore activities that you have mentioned here would be properly chargeable against the navy?

And General Mitchell said:

Not over one-tenth.

Then I said:

The repair of the equipment which is assigned to the Navy is done on board the mother ships and at those various places where the units are located?

And General Mitchell replied:

Yes, sir; some of it.

Then I asked:

What proportion of the entire repairs for the British Royal Air Service on account of aircraft would be assignable to those repair shops which are operated by the Royal Air Service?

And General Mitchell said again:

About one-tenth.

Then I said:

I do not suppose you know how many men are employed in the central shops that do repair work on aircraft?

And General Mitchell replied that practically all of them come within the 23,000 men. Then I asked:

But do you know what proportion of the entire force is so employed?

And he said:

No, sir; not exactly.

Then I said:

Out of the 23,000 men how many mechanics would be engaged in the repair of airplanes?

And General Mitchell replied:

Well, about one-half.

I said:

That would be about 11,000 men?

And General Mitchell replied:

Yes, sir.

I said:

One-tenth of 11,000 men would be working on airplanes used afloat and at navy shore stations?

General Mitchell replied:

Not that many.

I asked him how many there would be, and he replied:

I should think not over 500 men.

I said:

Five hundred men in the shops would take care of everything in the way of repairs on that portion of the service operated afloat and at the coast stations chargeable to the Navy?

And General Mitchell replied:

Yes, sir.

Then I said:

Counting everything you can think of that is properly assignable to the Navy and considering the coastal supervision which in this country would probably be taken care of by the Army, and then considering a proper allowance for mechanics to keep that equipment in condition, these 500 extra men, besides the number you have given, you think would be an ample allowance?

And General Mitchell replied:

Yes, sir.

Then I said:

That would make a total of 2,500 men chargeable to the naval air service?

And General Mitchell replied:

That is about the maximum at present in use in England by the Royal Air Force.

And in this connection I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Navy Department advised the President that there were 30,000 enlisted men in the British air force and that 10,000 of them were properly chargeable to the navy. Whereas the facts are as testified to by General Mitchell that there are 23,000 men in the entire force and only 2,500 chargeable to the navy.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman appreciates the fact that he is speaking of the personnel, whereas my amendment is directed to the operation and maintenance of aircraft. What the gentleman is reading has nothing to do with my amendment, I think he will admit.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No.

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. SWING. Does the gentleman say in his statement that the figures he gave included the enlisted men and officers operating the airplane carriers?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; he not only gave the total number but he gave the number of men and officers on each carrier, also the number of men and officers at each station and the name of each station. I will say further that General Mitchell said he had just come back from England, and because of the fact that he had cooperated with the British officials in the war and had been on the most friendly terms with them in France, they said to him, "Go into the offices and get any information you desire; everything is open to you." But remember that the President was advised by the Navy Department that there were 10,000 men in naval aviation in Great Britain, whereas the best information obtainable from the best authority is to the effect that it does not exceed 2,500. They even fooled my good friend from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman will confirm this statement, that every member of the subcommittee was in full accord and agreement as to the importance of the Naval Air Service, and that we have endeavored to adequately provide for that service at this time. The subcommittee saw where sane and safe economy would be practiced, it was well to do so because the most urgently needed matter in the Air Service is the aircarrying ships, and this Congress will be asked to provide many millions for the purpose of constructing those ships. We only have one now.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; they want forty-eight millions for that purpose. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say to the gentleman that I am informed by the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics that they have taken up those figures given to the committee by General Mitchell, and they say that they have verified the figures that they gave, which I used, and that my figures are absolutely correct. They dispute the accuracy of General Mitchell's statement.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Personally, I am disposed to believe that General Mitchell's information is more reliable. He has just returned from a personal study of aviation in England.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HICKS) there were—ayes 34, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, line 19, after the word "Navy" insert: "Provided, That the sum of $400,000 of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance, repair, and operation of helium plants."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, while that would be subject to the point of order I have no desire to make it, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "further" be inserted after the word "provided," in line 19, page 49.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I sent to the desk last evening, and I ask that it be now reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HERRICK: Page 48, line 21, after the figures "1922," strike out "$400,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I shall not emulate some of my illustrious colleagues and while away a whole day here talking about a very small matter. I am just going to say a very few words and ask for a vote. There is one thing that I want to call to the attention of the House, connected with the Air Service, about which I have not heard anything in this discussion, and which might be pertinent. That is this: In some of these congressional inspection trips I have eaten with the officers' mess of the Air Service, I have eaten with the officers' mess of the Army service, and I have eaten with the officers' mess of the Navy service. I would say that if I were to make a choice in respect to boarding permanently with any one of them, I would choose the Navy service, because the food served there is better than that served in most of the hotels in Washington. The food served in the Army officers' mess is better than that served in some of the hotels in Washington, but I do consider that the subsistence of the air force, if the sample I had of it is to be taken into account, is grossly inadequate, and I certainly would not want to subsist upon it very long. That is just one little point that I want to bring to your attention. It seems to me that a little bit more money could be spent upon it, because these men are risking their lives every time they leave the ground, and at least we ought to give them decent food if we are going to ask them to do that.

Another little point I want to make is that in all the time that I have been around these different aviation stations the only complaint that I heard is as to the inadequacy of the equipment, the inadequacy of everything all the way down the line. It does seem to me that if we can spend $40,000,000 on a battleship, which an airplane can sink in five minutes or less, we ought to be able to spend a few hundred thousand dollars on the airplanes to do the job with, because we can lose several dozen aeroplanes and not lose the cost of one subchaser, to say nothing of a torpedo boat, or a destroyer, or a cruiser, or a battleship. So far as the loss of life is concerned, when we lose an airplane we lose one or two, while in the loss of a battleship it involves several hundred, at least, and sometimes several thousand at the most.

I am digressing in this discourse more than I had intended, but I want to come to another point, and that is this: I have offered this amendment to provide an additional $100,000 with this thought in mind. By increasing this appropriation $100,000 we might establish an airplane factory and keep down some of the excessive costs that we are paying to the private manufacturers. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] informs me that we already have a factory, but that it is labeled "experiment station." If that is true, and I have no doubt it is, then this $100,000 would come in very handy in connection with the work of the experiment station.

There is another thing that I want to call to your attention, and that is this matter of increasing the personnel of the Army from 67,000 to 86,000——

A MEMBER. The gentleman means the Navy.

Mr. HERRICK. That is correct. That is a mistake on my part; but we are human, all of us make mistakes, and the man who never made a mistake is dead, if he ever lived. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is to be a yea-and-nay vote on the matter of the personnel for the Navy before this bill is finally passed. There will be ample time for all of the Members who have not done so before that vote is taken to read the extension of my remarks, which I placed in the RECORD yesterday evening, to be found on page 5692. [Laughter.] They may exert a little influence on the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HICKS: Page 49, line 6, after the word "service" strike out the words "for aircraft stations."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, the matter is simply to faciliate the part of the bill referred to above, and I think the chairman has no objection to it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL ACADEMY.

Pay, Naval Academy: Pay of professors and others, Naval Academy: Pay of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, $346,500.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 50, line 14, after the word "librarian" in line 14, strike out "$346,500" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$421,500, provided that not more than $36,500 shall be paid for masters and instructors in swordsmanship and physical training."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, when the bill was under discussion under general debate I asked for and was given 20 minutes to discuss this subject; I afterwards waived the time allowed me on account of the time being short, with a sort of understanding that I could have a little extra time to discuss it when we came to this item in reading the bill, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to have 15 minutes in which to discuss this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered adds $75,000 to this item and makes it $421,500, which brings the appropriation for the civilian instructors at the Naval Academy back to the amount that is carried in the appropriation for the current year. In other words, my amendment simply brings the amount appropriated for civilian instructors at the academy to the amount carried this year and last year also, adding $75,000 to the amount carried in the bill. Now, in order that the committee may better understand this, I will say that the subcommittee have added to this item $36,600, which heretofore was carried in the item just below in the bill, so it is not an increase in expenditure, but a shifting or change of the place where the amount is allowed in the bill. That item covers instruction in swordsmanship and physical training, so that now instead of there being in this bill specific appropriations for instructors in swordsmanship and physical training, and instead of having an itemized appropriation for that purpose, the bill as it is reported by the subcommittee carries a lump-sum appropriation for that purpose of $36,500.

The committee have carried it up and placed it in the lump-sum appropriation for civilian instructors; so that the amendment which I have offered simply increases the appropriation back to where it is this year, with the proviso that not more than $36,500 shall be expended for that particular purpose. Now, I think that that proviso ought to be approved: We are making a lump-sum appropriation for civilian instructors; a great deal of discretion is allowed to the superintendent in expending the money. In training the cadets for their athletic contests a number of coaches and trainers are employed. For years such men have been employed and paid by the Naval Athletic Association, composed of the alumni of the academy. Many naval officers think they ought to be paid from the Public Treasury. I do not think a lump-sum appropriation ought to be turned over to the superintendent so that he can pay them out of that fund if he wants to, and therefore I think this proviso limiting the amount that can be expended for athletic training is proper, and I think the chairman of the subcommittee ought to accept it as being proper.

Now, as to the question of whether or not we want to increase the appropriation back to where it is at this time, namely, $385,000. Gentlemen, I hope this will receive the serious consideration of all the members of the committee. There has now been started by the superintendent a policy of undoing at the academy a great deal of what has been accomplished there in recent years upon the advice of the very best educators of the country. This is but the beginning of a policy of getting rid of all the civilian instructors at the academy and substituting naval officers in their places. The academic board, consisting of 11 heads of departments, including the superintendent, is supposed to decide all questions of policy at the academy. But the superintendent of the academy, Admiral Wilson, came before the subcommittee without having consulted anyone at the academy, without having mentioned it to any of the academic board, without having given anybody the slightest intimation of his intention—as I say, he came before the committee and recommended the immediate removal of 78 civilian instructors and substituting in their places lieutenants and lieutenant commanders of the Navy. Of course, the subcommittee would not stand for anything of that kind, but they yielded to this extent, of decreasing the appropriation for civilian instructors $75,000, which would mean the elimination this year of about 28 or 30 civilian professors.

Think of it, gentlemen. The present corps of civilian professors and instructors has been assembled and selected in accordance with carefully considered plans and after years of investigation. Boards of Visitors, appointed by the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House, have annually visited the academy, studied its needs, observed its operations, and carefully considered this whole question of the personnel of the academic instructors. These Boards of Visitors have included many of the country's most successful educators. Their recommendations have received the approval of former superintendents and of former Secretaries of the Navy. Civilian professors and instructors in nontechnical subjects, such as modern languages, English, mathematics, history, physics, and international law, have become the accepted policy for the academy. But Admiral Wilson, who had not been at the academy in 40 years, except perhaps as a casual visitor, is made superintendent, and, without consulting with anyone, recommends the removal of 78 civilian teachers.

Next year, of course, if the admiral can have his way, there will be a further elimination of the civilian instructors and substitution of naval officers, and the question is now presented to the House whether or not we are going to undo what has been done at the academy; whether we are going to, in my judgment, wreck the academy as an educational institution by the substitution of naval officers as teachers and instructors of the young men we send there.

Mr. MUDD. Is it a fact that the commandant of the Naval Academy, Admiral Wilson, asked the Appropriations Committee to recommend that 78 of these civilian instructors should be dismissed from the academy?

Mr. DENISON. Seventy-five or seventy-eight. I think the hearings show 78.

Mr. MUDD. If the appropriation remains as it is, you state that 25 or 30 of these men must be dismissed?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. In other words, gentlemen, the way they are going to get rid of the civilian instructors is to take away the appropriation, and, of course, their places will have to be filled by naval officers.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I wish to say that, reading from page 12 of the hearings, Admiral Wilson says the appropriation ought to be cut down to $140,000 or $150,000.

Mr. DENISON. That means the getting rid at one stroke of 75 or 80 of the civilian instructors.

Let me give you the history of this question. In 1913 there was another naval officer who was superintendent of the academy. He had the same Prussian idea that the present superintendent seems to have, of wanting to get rid of everybody there who wore civilian clothes and put naval officers in their places. He did not want to have them around. So he came before the Committee on Appropriations with this same recommendation, and there was a complete hearing in 1913 upon this whole subject. Congress went into it fully, and after a thorough hearing and investigation, turned the proposition down, refused to follow that policy, and inserted in the appropriation bill of that year, 1913, in order to prevent such a policy being carried out, this proviso:

No part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowance of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as instructor at the United States Naval Academy to perform duties which were performed by civilian instructors on January 1, 1913.

And that limitation was carried in every appropriation bill for the Naval Academy from 1913 until 1917.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I notice this statement by Admiral Wilson:

The civilian instructors came into the Naval Academy during the war, when officers were doing other work and could not be obtained.

That statement is not in keeping with the facts, because we had civilian instructors before the war.

Mr. DENISON. Certainly that statement is not in keeping with the facts.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think, in justice to Admiral Wilson, that his statement is very accurate, that during the war there was such great need for naval officers that they detailed them out of the stations and the academy and wherever they could get them, and supplemented them with civilian instructors.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. He certainly did not speak accurately, to use this language.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. As naval officers go, I think he did.

Mr. DENISON. The committee understands, of course, that during the war we increased the number of cadets, and therefore had to increase the number of instructors. This limitation had to be carried in every appropriation bill from 1913 to 1917. In 1917, when we were in war, the committee, of course, left it out, because there was no need for its being there, there being no naval officers to send to the academy, all of them being needed at sea.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think any member of the subcommittee was in sympathy with Admiral Wilson's recommendation that naval officers be substituted for civilian instructors. The committee felt that perhaps there would be a smaller attendance at the academy next year and some economy could be made on this account. However, if the attendance next year should be as large as it is this year and Members of Congress feel that this appropriation should be increased to retain the civilian instructors now employed at the academy, the committee will not seriously oppose the pending amendment.

Mr. DENISON. I am very glad to hear the gentleman make that statement—there will not be a decrease in the number of cadets this year. If we want to decrease the expenditures of the academy, then Congress ought to provide for a less number of cadets; but while we have such a large number there we must have competent instructors for them, if we keep faith.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman has not stated it in explicit language, but I take it for granted that he thinks the civilian instructors are more competent as teachers than men who wear the uniform of the Navy.

Mr. DENISON. I certainly do think so. Gentlemen, it ought to be apparent to anyone. These young men graduate from the academy and they soon go to sea. Very often many of them barely make passing grades. They do not look into their books again, perhaps, until in some future years when they are given orders to go to the academy to teach. They go there absolutely without preparation to instruct.

Mr. BEGG. Is it not a fact that 12 years is the least possible time before a man is ever detailed from outside duty to act as an instructor at the academy?

Mr. DENISON. It is true, as I understand it.

Mr. LAZARO. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in Great Britain they rely on civilian instructors in their school.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman from Illinois and I were on the Board of Visitors last year, and he will recall that the superintendent of the academy, Admiral Scales, told us that the Bureau of Navigation made the assignment of officer instructors to the academy, and that if such policy was continued the Bureau of Navigation should be required to specially consider the qualifications of officers assigned to the academy in future, with a view of ascertaining their adaptability to teach. We were told that many officers in the past had been assigned who were not well qualified as instructors.

Mr. DENISON. That is true, and Admiral Wilson testified at the hearings on this bill that he had no choice as to who should come there. They are assigned there. There is another thing, gentlemen, that the House should take into consideration in determining the question involved in my amendment. When officers are sent to the academy they only stay two years and then have to go back to sea under the rules. So we will have the ridiculous situation, if this policy is carried out, of practically all the instructors at the academy changing every two years; that would ruin any educational institution. The Naval Academy is the cradle of our Navy. The officers of our future Navy begin there. It is there their careers are largely determined. There ought to be at least some permanency in the teaching force as well as in the policies and traditions of the institution. No educational institution can ever amount to much that is continuously changing its teaching staff every two or three years. Admiral Wilson would have known this if he had been around such an institution in the last 40 years.

Now, the business of teaching young men in a college and helping to give them an education is a serious matter, and we ought to have men at the head of the different departments in the Naval Academy who are trained instructors. We have a corps of fine teachers there, men of college education, men who are trained instructors; and I want to say this, that there can not be found anywhere in the world, in my opinion, a naval academy with a finer set of civilian instructors and professors than those we have at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. At the British naval academy at Dartmouth, England, all of the academic subjects, except technical subjects like navigation, gunnery, ordnance, and perhaps marine engineering, are taught by civilian instructors. In fact, the head master of the British naval academy is a civilian. The same is true of the naval academy of France and of Italy and other European countries, and also of Japan.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What is the gentleman's intention in his amendment?

Mr. DENISON. My amendment will increase the appropriation to an amount sufficient to pay the salaries of all the present civilian instructors. I propose also to insert a provision that would prevent naval officers from being substituted for the civilian teachers.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. When a naval officer is assigned to the faculty, does he go without any increase in emolument or pay?

Mr. DENISON. He goes without any increase in emolument or pay. I am glad the gentleman from West Virginia suggested that. It may occur to some members of the committee that this policy recommended by Admiral Wilson would be in the interest of economy, but I think I can show you that it will not be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Gentlemen, it is not economy to substitute naval officers for civilian professors at the academy. Even if they could do the work as well it would not be economy, because the compensation allowed naval officers is at least a third more than the compensation paid to civilian professors. The compensation of a naval commander with allowances is $5,661 per year, and that of a lieutenant commander is about $4,975 a year; the compensation of a lieutenant varies from $2,400 to $3,360, depending on length of service. These amounts are on the average a third more than the compensation paid to the civilian professors. Civilian professors receive about $4,300; associate professors, $3,700; assistant professors, $3,200; and intructors, $2,800 per year.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course when this conference on disarmament was proposed we naturally supposed that there would be some slight reduction in the number of officers and in the amount of expense in the Naval Establishment. But I am beginning to think that possibly that was a great mistake; that it never was intended for that purpose. But I will say to the gentleman this, That while we have the officers, as he says, and must pay them, and there must be given effect to this conference treaty—the treaty growing out of the conference—there has to be a reduction in the establishment, and there will be a great number of officers whose duties will not be urgent, to say the least, and they might be assigned to the academy if they could render to the Government the proper service in that capacity. If, on the other hand, the House thinks that the naval officers should not be assigned, to the extent provided in the bill, to teaching in the academy, that would be a different matter. But so far as the expense is concerned, I think it would be a saving of expense to displace the civilians by the naval officers, because naval officers will have nothing else to do.

Mr. DENISON. I see the point of view. But, gentlemen, we can not take care of all the naval officers from the scrapped ships by sending them down to Annapolis and imposing them on the boys at the Naval Academy. We may go ahead and scrap some of the battleships; we may go ahead and scrap some of the personnel of the Navy; but let us not scrap the Naval Academy by substituting naval officers who have never instructed anybody and who know nothing whatever about the principles of teaching for the staff of highly educated, carefully trained civilian teachers who have been doing such fine work at the academy in recent years.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is it not also a fact that a naval officer who is assigned as a teacher has never had any academic instruction beyond the second year boy at the Naval Academy, the fellow he is trying to teach, and he had that 12 or 15 years prior to his assignment?

Mr. DENISON. That is true.

I have some telegrams and letters here which I would like to read. They are as follows, the first one being from Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California. The second is a letter from Mr. Frank Aydelotte, president of Swarthmore College; the third from Prof. A. N. Talbot, of the University of Illinois. I also insert a quotation from an article by Prof. Arthur Gordon Webster, of Clark University, one of the greatest teachers of the country, and a telegram just received from 35 members of the faculty of De Pauw University, Greencastle, Ind.:

BERKELEY, CALIF., April 11, 1922.

Hon. E. E. DENISON,
Washington, D. C.:

Appropriations Committee is making a serious mistake in recommending the displacement of civilian teachers at Naval Academy. Teaching is a profession. The teaching of subjects like history, English, modern languages, and international law presumes special preparation both as to knowledge of the subject and conveying the same. Going back to teaching by naval officers will mean practical annulment of the science of education as developed in the last generation.

BENJAMIN IDE WHEELER, President.

—

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
Swarthmore, Pa., April 12, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD E. DENISON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am informed that the naval appropriation bill now being considered by the House of Representatives proposes to replace a large number of civilian instructors in the Naval Academy by naval officers. While I realize that many of the officers in the Navy are excellent teachers, I nevertheless believe that such a policy would be fatal to the present educational efficiency of the institution.

No matter how well qualified for teaching an officer may be, he can in most cases not reach the same excellence as a civilian who makes teaching his life work. I believe it is the policy of the Navy to change men from one position to another every few years, thus making it impossible for them to make the same continuous study of the problem of teaching that can be made by a man who is in it for life.

Furthermore, scholarship and teaching ability are so rare that no institution can be successful which depends upon a certain group for recruiting its force. Denominational colleges find it necessary to go outside their denominations, and in the same way the Navy, if it wants first-class instruction, must, I think, be willing to go outside its ranks to recruit the staff of the Naval Academy.

The academy has a long and distinguished educational record. To put into law a proposal which, like this one, would inevitably destroy its educational prestige would be to earn the condemnation of that vast majority of the citizens of the United States who are interested in education.

Yours respectfully, FRANK AYDELOTTE.

—

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS,
Urbana, Ill., April 12, 1922.

Hon. E. E. DENISON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR MR. DENISON: In response to your request of April 11, I wish to present my views on the proposed displacement of civilian instructors with naval officers at the United States Naval Academy.

The two types of instructor at the academy, the naval officer and the civilian-trained instructors, both have important functions.

There are important reasons why such subjects as seamanship, ordnance, navigation, and marine engineering should be directed and taught almost exclusively by officers of the Navy. This arrangement not only brings in men familiar with the practice of the Navy and the latest developments of the sea, but the spirit of the Navy is brought to the academy and instilled into the embryo officer. The officer-teacher as a liaison member between the school and the Navy is a valuable part of the organization.

There are equally important reasons why the teaching of other subjects, such as physics, mathematics, English, and languages, should be done largely by the civilian instructor. Teaching is a profession. To be a good teacher in such subjects requires preliminary training, preparation, and experience. Most of the civilian instructors have been chosen by competition from men who have prepared themselves for teaching as a life work. They have come from a variety of schools and have the best of training. They are scholarly in character. If they do not prove to be good teachers after a short period of probation, they do not remain. There are distinct advantages in having civilian instructors in such branches: 1. They may be expected to bring a broader and deeper training in the subject taught and in related subjects and to have a knowledge of the viewpoints of teachers engaged in similar work in civil institutions and in civil life. They bring with them modern pedagogical ideas. 2. In the technical lines the contact that civilian instructors have had with men trained away from the Naval Academy and their knowledge of the views of technical men in civilian pursuits will give an opportunity for the instructors who are naval officers to discuss and measure the effectiveness and adequacy of the methods and views taught to midshipmen. 3. In any event, care should be taken to avoid too much inbreeding—a condition which all colleges and universities have to be upon the alert to prevent. In judging of the usefulness of the civilian instructor, it should be kept in mind that the Naval Academy is both a vocational school and an educational institution.

In the last few years there have been brought together at the Naval Academy a body of civilian instructors who are as capable, well-trained, and proficient teachers as may be found anywhere. The quality of the instruction in these branches has greatly improved and is of high grade. Without discredit or criticism of the naval officer-teacher, it is apparent that men brought in from the sea, detailed for a brief period to teaching work, may not be expected in general to give the quality of instruction in such branches that will be provided by the trained teacher.

It seems to me, then, that the proposal to replace civilian instructors with naval officers in any large number would be extremely detrimental to the best interests of the midshipmen and the Navy. I feel this is all the more strongly after seeing the gain that has come to the educational standards of the school in recent years through the development of civilian instructors. The combination of civilian instructors in general subjects and of naval officers for naval subjects is an ideal one, and any change would result in serious injury to the effectiveness of the academy instruction.

I shall be glad to give my views in more detail on any part of this matter in case it is wished.

Very truly yours, A. N. TALBOT.

—

[Quotation from Scientific Monthly, November, 1920.]

EDUCATION AND LEARNING IN AMERICA.

(By Prof. Arthur Gordon Webster, Clark University.)

Within the last few years I have personally visited both the Naval Academy at Annapolis and the Military Academy at West Point, and during the five years of my membership in that at first much overadvertised and lately too much forgotten institution, the Naval Consulting Board of the United States, I have had the opportunity of meeting many officers of both services. These officers are always extremely agreeable gentlemen, accustomed to the handling of men and thoroughly competent in the ordinary duties of their stations. They are all alike in one thing, however. They have been deprived of the opportunities of a really superior education. Army and Naval officers do not, as a rule, originate ideas, nor do they contribute to the advancement of science, even in their own professions.

During my visit to Annapolis, where I was received with the greatest hospitality by the superintendent, who personally conducted me all over the school; when we came to the physical laboratory, as I am a physicist, I asked some questions of the young instructor in order to show my interest. He regretted that he was unable to answer; excusing himself because he had but recently come. That night at dinner I could not resist asking the superintendent, who told me that he had brought these officers with him, whether he could make a physicist out of any officer. "Oh," he replied, "they had very distinguished records at sea." I had nothing to say, but it occurred to me that no amount of distinction at sea would have made a physicist of me.

In the Army and Navy the theory is that anybody can teach anything if ordered to. Of such a theory, the less said the better. They should have as professors the most distinguished scientific men that the country can afford. They need not necessarily wear chickens on their shoulders. It is high time that the feeling of self-sufficiency which impregnates officers of the regular Military Establishments should be somewhat dissipated. They may as well learn that occasionally a person not in uniform can give them some advice.

—

GREENCASTLE, IND., April 11, 1922.

Representative EVERETT SANDERS,
Washington, D. C.:

The faculty of De Pauw University protests against decreasing appropriation for the Naval Academy, and ask that enough money be appropriated to pay the salaries of all civilian instructors in full for the coming year.

THIRTY-FIVE MEMBERS DE PAUW FACULTY.

Mr. Chairman, I also wish to have read here three letters from prominent educators that were presented in the hearings before the committee in 1913, when this same subject was then under consideration.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
Cambridge, Mass., January 5, 1913.

Hon. E. W. ROBERTS,
Committee on Naval Affairs, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I hope I may win your attention for a matter which is, I think, now before the House Committee on Naval Affairs. In the pending naval appropriation bill the number of junior or $1,800 civilian instructors is reduced from 10 to 4. This is merely the first step in carrying out the stated policy of the present Secretary of the Navy "to reduce the number of civilians at the academy as fast as the number of officers available to replace them permits." (Hearings before Committee on Naval Affairs, p. 1907.) It may be shown that this policy, aside from its possible injustice to civilian instructors, would, if carried out, decidedly lower the standards and efficiency of the academy.

The present civilian instructors are trained teachers, most of them college graduates, several of them scholars and writers of distinction, men who have devoted years to the profession and made it their life work. Their places would be taken by officers who have not such special training or experience, who devote but a limited period—two or three years—to the work, and whose interests are very properly not in the classroom but in their duties as naval officers.

It is not true "that anyone can teach school," least of all in this day of steady specialization and expert training in limited fields. If this change were to take effect, the teaching in such purely academic branches as English, foreign languages, and mathematics would become what it was in years past—antiquated and bungling, below the standard of the average high school.

It is, of course, absolutely essential that midshipmen should be under military discipline, in constant contact with officers and imbued with the splendid ideals of the Navy. But all this is abundantly provided for by the conditions in which they live, their daily drills and technical instruction, and their experience in the summer cruise. There are now over 100 officers engaged in teaching, and not more than 25 civilians. Intercourse with this limited number of university-bred men, instead of doing harm, tends to prevent the narrowing and inbreeding effect of an education wholly removed from ideas other than those of the service.

In the most important naval schools of the world—England, Germany, Italy, France—both advanced and preparatory, the instruction is very largely by civilians. In England there are both "naval" and "professional" staffs, the first composed of officers for discipline and technical instruction, the second composed of Oxford and Cambridge graduates for instruction in academic subjects. The question with us involves not merely the dismissal of a few instructors; it is a question whether instruction in academic subjects is to be haphazard and perfunctory or in line with the best practice of our colleges and technical schools.

I hope it is not too late for a hearing in the matter, or at least for its consideration by the committee.

Very respectfully yours,

C. H. GRANTGENT,
Professor of Romance Languages.

—

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., January 9, 1913.

MY DEAR SIR: I understand that the naval appropriations bill now before Congress provides fewer salaries for civil instructors at the Naval Academy than formerly, in accordance with the policy advocated by the Secretary of the Navy "to reduce the number of civilians at the academy as fast as the number of officers available to replace them permits."

This policy strikes me as wasteful, and inexpedient on many other grounds; but my present concern is with its sure effect on the academy itself as the school for our naval officers. From the point of view of an educational administrator nothing could be worse than teaching English and other modern languages and the applied sciences through young naval officers who know nothing about teaching and serve as so-called teachers for very short terms in the intervals of sea service. In the technical subjects young naval officers can make pretty good instructors; and the rapid replacement of the teachers of technical subjects at the academy is not very disadvantageous, because experience at sea keeps a naval officer tolerably fresh in the technical subjects. To employ that kind of teacher for the academic subjects is highly inexpedient. Indeed, there is nothing to be said for it. To begin with, it makes it sure that the whole teaching staff of the academy will consist of graduates of the academy. West Point and Annapolis have already suffered severely from the amount of breeding in-and-in there indulged in. This present proposal would aggravate the difficulty at Annapolis very much.

One would have supposed that the Secretary of the Navy, in the present scarcity of commissioned officers, would be reluctant to detail more officers for service at the academy. To effect economies can not be the motive of the Secretary, for the salaries of the civil instructors are lower than those of lieutenants in the Navy. The academy is the worst possible place in the whole Navy administration to make inexpedient economies, for the investment of the country in the thorough education of naval officers is the best and most durable investment the country makes on behalf of the Navy.

I believe that you are a member of the House Naval Committee. May I beg you to bring this letter to the knowledge of your colleagues in that committee?

Very truly yours,

CHARLES W. ELIOT.

Hon. ERNEST W. ROBERTS.

—

GEORGE PEABODY COLLEGE FOR TEACHERS,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Nashville, Tenn., January 3, 1913.

Hon. L. M. PADGETT,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PADGETT: I have learned with a great deal of distress that there is an extraordinary and impracticable proposition coming up soon before the committee of which you are chairman. It looks toward the ultimate elimination of civilian professors at the Naval Academy.

Now, I do not wish to take up your time by arguing this matter, but as the head of a great teachers' college devoting its entire energies to the study of problems of education and with what experience I have, it is my duty, and I hasten to make it my privilege, to protest against any such unwise and hasty legislation.

It is the judgment of educators over the country (and it is they who have practical knowledge about such matters) that to limit the selection of the teaching staff of an institution to a ridiculous minority of the teaching profession would practically guarantee the decadence of efficient instruction in the Naval Academy or in any other institution. If military tactics alone are to be taught at the academy the proposition might be practicable, but it is no guaranty of inherent ability or acquired fitness as a teacher of any of the academic subjects to say of a gentleman that he has had military discipline.

It is well known among educators that the instruction given at Annapolis now is below college grade. I earnestly beg, therefore, that your committee do nothing more to lower the standard of work.

Yours sincerely,

BRUCE R. PAYNE, President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, may I have two minutes more? Then I will close, and will not ask for any more time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. You will note that the telegram from the 35 members of the faculty of Depauw University in Indiana was addressed to Congressman EVERETT SANDERS of Indiana; Congressman SANDERS being away sick, he asked me to present it to the House. You will also notice they say that in their judgment it would be very injurious to the Naval Academy to decrease the appropriation for civilian instructors. If you talk to Naval Academy boys, any of them—just pick them up on the street indiscriminately and talk with them—they will tell you that the naval officer instructors at the Academy are more or less of a joke. They do not instruct the boys. They simply assign them problems and give an order to "man the boards." That is the phrase they use, "man the boards," and the boys go to the blackboard and write down their answers to the problems or questions, whatever they may be, even if they are questions in history or in geography, or in any other subject of that kind. The officers do not ask the boys to stand and give their answers. They must go to the board, "man the board" as the expression is, and write their answers, and when the recitation hour is up the boys have to leave; then when the instructor has time he grades the work to suit himself by looking in the back of the book and finding what the answer is. In other words, when a naval officer is teaching, he simply acts as a sort of referee between the boys and the textbook. He does not explain, he does not instruct. He is hardly ever prepared to instruct. So the recitations under such instructors is nothing more than a sort of continuing examination or test, instead of teaching or instructing.

Let us keep the trained civilian teachers at the Academy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan and Mr. RAKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I desire to be recognized as chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. In opposition to the amendment?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I am in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the committee listened with a great deal of interest to Admiral Wilson, of the Naval Academy, and we were impressed with the fact that Admiral Wilson showed a disposition to cooperate with the committee to the very best of his ability in the matter of making economies where they could be effected reasonably.

There are at the academy 133 officers who are now teaching and 115 civilian instructors and specialists, making a total of 248 members of the faculty of that fine institution. The admiral thought that it would do no injury to the academy if the number of civilians were reduced by about 78 and their places filled by officers. The committee did not view that suggestion with entire favor for two reasons: First, because we felt that in the case of teachers, if such a reduction as that were to be made without the teachers having a little more notice than they would have between the time that this bill would become a law and the 1st of July, the time would be too short. Teachers must find employment at a certain season of the year or they are apt not to be employed at all, differing in that respect from mechanics and others who, when they lose a position in one place, may find it in another. So we felt that the notice of dismissal would not be adequate. Some of these teachers have contracts for five years. Many of them are married men, with homes at the academy. To cut them off on such short notice seemed rather drastic. So we made a reduction in the amount only to the extent of reducing the number of professors and instructors by about 28 instead of 78, as recommended by the head of the academy. We thought that the superintendent of the academy could probably find 28 young men instructors, probably not married, who had been there but a short time, who would be able to find positions elsewhere without much difficulty, and that there would be no great hardship in making that much of a reduction.

Now, of course, if the House does not desire to have the number of civilian instructors decreased, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] ought to prevail. Personally I do not know about it. In my younger days I was in the school business to some extent, and my inclination rather leads me to the belief that perhaps a half-and-half proposition is about right—half officers and half civilians. At the same time I realize that Admiral Wilson is a magnificent officer, that he is one of the finest men in the Navy, that he is giving great satisfaction and great service at the academy, and I was impressed by his views. Besides, he was one officer who appeared before the committee who seemed to consider the fact that it might be advisable to save a dollar to the taxpayers of the country wherever possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the gentleman from Michigan may have five minutes additional time. I want to ask him some questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman answer me some questions? Is he of the same opinion that I am, that we should graduate all these young men who are now attending the academy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; my opinion is, Mr. Chairman, that the boys who have made their plans and who have entered the academy should not be disturbed; that they should be permitted to finish their courses, no matter what classes they may be in, and those who are not needed by the Government on graduation should go into civil life. That is no hardship. It is, of course, a disappointment, but you will realize that the Government has taken these fine boys and put them into the academy, given them magnificent training without expense to themselves or their parents, and if it turns them out into civil life where they will be able to make good, the Government will not have done the boys any harm, but, on the contrary, will have bestowed great benefits.

Mr. BUTLER. No; it will have done them good. Now, my friend, we are as thoroughly in accord about this thing as we are about many other things; let us reason together a little. I am thinking of these young men who will be required to go into civil life. In view of the action of the committee, which was three or four to one, I am assuming that many of these young men will have to go into civil life. Now, is not the gentleman of the opinion that we should retain these civil instructors at this time? These classes are very large, and the teachers should not be reduced in number. In 1927, when these classes are likely to be reduced in number, it may be advisable, when all the young men who graduate from the academy will be taken into the service, to let military instructors take the place of civil instructors; but until that time it would seem to me that we should continue these civilian instructors. These young men should be taught something besides gunfire and gun pointing and navigation. They should be instructed in a way that will prepare them for the work of civil life. I do not desire, however, to oppose my friend from Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have such a great affection for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, having served under him for a number of years on the Committee on Naval Affairs, and know that his heart is always in the right place as well as his head, that if he says that this amendment ought to prevail, I will withdraw the slight opposition I have already expressed to it. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to my friend from Michigan, but I do not understand the amendment. I ask the gentleman whether it would not be a good thing to retain these civilian instructors until all the boys who are now in the Academy are graduated? Then, in 1927, when the classes are so reduced in number that all those who graduate will go into the service, the substitution may be made.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course this adds about $75,000——

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know what it will be.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan (continuing). But when we add $40,000,000 to this bill without batting an eye we can properly do this without much difficulty.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose so, but I am only appealing to my friend, because I think his views are like mine.

Mr. MANN. May I ask somebody two questions? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman may ask me one and the gentleman from Pennsylvania the other.

Mr. MANN. First, I would like to know if the naval officers are incompetent to give instruction.

Mr. BUTLER. No; but I fear that perhaps they would not give the same attention to the young men in some particular branches that the civilians would.

Mr. MANN. What have we got over 100 of them there for now; has there any complaint been made?

Mr. BUTLER. I have not heard of any.

Mr. MANN. We have a surplus of naval officers with nothing to do, and they are competent to teach, therefore we hire somebody else to do the work.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am in accord with much that has been said upon the advisability of retaining at the Naval Academy civilian professors and instructors in approximately the ratio they have been retained heretofore. Generally speaking, those who make teaching their business are better fitted to teach than are those whose business or profession is in another line entirely. Again, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has pointed out the probability that many of the students at the academy who will graduate during each of the next several years will not be commissioned in the Navy but will enter upon careers in private life. The observation that he has made that these men should have teachers at the academy who will be comparable to the teachers in colleges and universities rather than specialists in naval branches is well taken.

There is another feature of this question to which I desire to direct the attention of the House.

From 1913 to 1916 the ratio of civilian professors and instructors to officer professors was as 27 to 73—that is, 27 per cent was civilian. But with the beginning of the World War officers were called to active service and their places were largely taken by civilian professors, so that beginning with 1917 and continuing till now the civilian personnel on the faculty list has been nearly one-half. It was 48 per cent from 1917 to 1921, and is 46 per cent to-day.

To build up an adequate and able corps of civilian professors and instructors, at the beginning of the war colleges and universities throughout the country were combed of such of their faculty as would go to the academy. Naturally the question arose as to whether or not the tenure of service there would make it worth while for professors to accept academy positions. The department issued a circular which I have in my hand, in which there was this statement on page 5 pertaining to the appointment of civilians, which must be regarded as a condition of employment.

The paragraph pertaining to appointment as instructors and professors reads as follows:

3. (a) That appointment as instructor be annual; to all higher grades appointments be for five years, if service is satisfactory.

This language was included again in a letter from the superintendent of the academy dated June 21, 1920, and addressed to the Secretary of the Navy. The letter of June 21, 1920, is referred to as reference "C" in letter of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, dated July 1, 1920, and addressed to the Superintendent of the Naval Academy. This latter letter is included by reference in the notice of appointment to the several professors, associate professors, and instructors employed at the academy.

I checked up with the Navy Department to see how many of these professors and assistant or associate professors at the academy would be eliminated by the expiration of the current fiscal year, and I found that, apart from the instructors, there is not one. I have here a list of the professors, associate professors, assistant professors, and instructors, and aside from the instructors there is not one whose contract expires prior to June 30, 1924. The contracts for the others expire in 1925 and in 1926. We did not think we ought to cause the department to vitiate those contracts and wipe them out.

I do not believe that any college or university would terminate the period of service of its professors employed on the basis of such representations as I have indicated in the manner that has been urged upon our committee and suggested by Members of the Congress. I do not believe that those who have urged this course have grasped the situation, and that they have realized the injustice that would be done professors at the academy by having, what amounts to, their contracts of employment annulled.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. DENISON. For the gentleman's information I want to state that Admiral Wilson has issued an order countermanding the order which the gentleman has read and providing that any instructor may be dismissed by him or, in other words, he has wiped away all that has been done heretofore, and he now claims the right to discharge any professor on giving immediate notice.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the gentleman will find that even now it requires six months' notice. I have read the new order and have a copy of it here.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Is it not a fact that civilian instructors are more efficient than the officers, because all of the education that the officers receive is what they have received there?

Mr. FRENCH. Outside of the special naval branches my personal judgment is that the man who follows the business of teaching is better equipped, generally speaking, than those who by reason of assignment to shore duty are detailed to the academy to teach. I think, generally speaking, that is correct. They usually have training beyond that offered at the academy.

Mr. MANN. In the administration of the naval schools where there is real work, do they hire civilian teachers or take naval officers?

Mr. FRENCH. I understand they take naval officers in special branches.

Mr. MANN. They specialize in all kinds of branches, but they get the best teachers from the naval officers.

Mr. FRENCH. At the Naval War College doubtless that is correct, but at the academy for even the postgraduate work I understand they employ civilian lecturers largely.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this is one opportunity to reduce expenses and get efficiency. Two-thirds of these civilian instructors, if not all of them, ought to be released from service and naval officer instructors put in charge. That has been demonstrated by the experience of the officers and by the Naval Academy; but evidently somebody wants a job. Many of these men went in during the war, and they want to hang on. That is about all. It is to give these men a job and prevent the naval boys having the best instructors they should have, and they are the naval officers. As a matter of fact, if you would investigate you would find out that the first year these boys are in school they never see a naval officer or instructor in the classrooms. Just think of that. You are sending them there for a purpose. Outside of the naval instructors, the civilian instructors, I am advised by those who have been there, give them their lessons and then put the result on the board, and the boys leave the room, and then the civilian instructor goes and marks the boys' standing from what appears on the board; and those are the instructions that the civilian instructors are giving. I was advised by one of the high officers yesterday on this question. He has been there and he knows what he is talking about. The entire result here shows that these civilian instructors are not needed; that we ought to have naval officer instructors. These men must have been in high school or have had a collegiate education or must pass a certain examination before they can go to the Navy. They then spend four years there. Then from 2 to 4 or 6 or 8 or 10 years are spent in actual service of the Navy, in all its instructions and practical work. They come back ripe and experienced men for the purpose of educating young men to become officers, to become proficient in the very things for which the Navy is established. Go down here to the school that they have been maintaining at Fortress Monroe, one of the best educational institutions in the world to-day, and they are all naval officers. That is what we ought to have here at the Naval Academy.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman from California think, for instance, that a man who has had only four years in the Naval Academy would be regarded as a great authority on mathematics, we will say; and is not mathematics the very heart of the basis of all navigation?

Mr. RAKER. I would not give the snap of my finger for the best mathematician on earth if you had him in the Navy and he did not know how to put the cartridge into the gun and use it when it was necessary, or how to sail the ship, and so forth. That tests whether or not he is a mathematician, and that is the reason they give them those instructions after they get their schooling. They send them out on these various cruises. They become not only educated men in all that relates to the Navy mathematics, but they become experienced men in handling ships and doing things; and what you want of these officers and these men is that they may be able to handle the ships and the men and all that pertains to a fighting Navy. I shall insert what Admiral Wilson said before the committee (hearings, pp. 610 to 615). This is in accord with what I have said. Admiral Wilson's statement and the questions and answers on this subject of civilian instructors are as follows:

REDUCTION OF INSTRUCTORS.

Admiral WILSON. You asked me a short while ago about the ability to change this appropriation, and I feel it could be cut to a very large extent without interfering with the interests of the Naval Academy. I would not advocate all officer instructors at the Naval Academy any more than I would advocate all civilian instructors. We need some of both to balance the work, but the proportion at the present time, about equal in number, does not, in my opinion, combine efficiency and economy. For this reason, and also because of the probable reduction in the number of appointments to the Naval Academy, I suggest, in accordance with your question to me, that the sum for "Pay of professors and others, Naval Academy," etc., be reduced at least one-half of the estimate. This would be a step toward bringing the proportion of officer instructors to civilian instructors back to what obtained before the war, and I believe such a step would not be hurtful to Naval Academy interests.

USE OF NAVAL INSTRUCTORS IN PLACE OF CIVILIAN.

There is much to be said in favor of using naval officers as instructors at the Naval Academy. In many ways the Navy is an excellent normal school. The routine duties required of naval officers involve a good deal of teaching. Success in the naval profession depends in a considerable degree upon the development of capacity to teach. The advance of naval science, with its attendant processes of change and improvement, demands mental alertness both to grasp new ideas and to instruct subordinates in them. We have a shifting enlisted personnel, and there are always recruits to be taught new duties and to be instructed in the operation of complicated machinery.

Officers themselves frequently do not appreciate the extent to which their naval experience fits them to become instructors at the Naval Academy. It has not been uncommon for a young lieutenant, on his first tour of shore duty at Annapolis, to be assigned to teach a subject from a new textbook quite different from any he had studied when a midshipman. An officer so placed alongside professors who have devoted years to specializing in the subject is at first inclined to deprecate his ability to teach. He is indeed confronted with obstacles, but, in accordance with his naval training, he bends his energy to overcome them. Then he usually discovers that the difficulties had been somewhat exaggerated in his own mind, and that he had not appreciated the extent to which experience afloat had fitted him to become an instructor of midshipmen.

An important advantage that a naval officer has over a civilian in teaching is that, by virtue of rank and experience, he is in a more favorable position to present incentives for midshipmen to learn well the subject matter set before them. Even in nontechnical subjects the value of an essential point can often be illustrated by some apt allusion to service life. Whether the subject is physics, history, or naval science, midshipmen feel that illustrations and explanations of officers are backed by experience with ships and men. As I see it, success in teaching hinges to a great extent on ability to inspire midshipmen with ambition to learn, and I believe that officer instructors have a knack for doing this.

The mission of the Naval Academy is not to produce intellectuals or scholars but intelligent naval officers, with healthy minds in healthy bodies. Moral, mental, and physical training go hand in hand. The intellectual side is not neglected, but character building is given particular stress. Discipline and drill are so interwoven with the academic work as to be part and parcel of it. Here again the experienced officer has the advantage over the civilian instructor. The officer knows the service, realizes that the midshipmen of to-day will be his brother officers of to-morrow, and therefore contributes to Naval Academy work an understanding, cooperative effort which can be paralleled by few civilian instructors.

The criticism has been made that "it is a pathetic sight afforded by the officer instructor who burns the midnight oil to keep one day ahead of the lesson which his class is to recite." The inference to be drawn from this is not quite fair. Granted that, for his first year at least, the officer instructor does have to study his lessons with diligence, does it necessarily follow that his teaching is of inferior quality? The textbook lessons assigned are plenty long enough and contain all that the average midshipman can be expected to absorb with thoroughness. I have heard it said that the officer who has to study along with his class is likely to concentrate on the lesson assigned and make full use of his experience and judgment to drive into the heads of the midshipmen the essential points in the lesson, whereas the professional teacher, being much more familiar with the subject, is likely to underestimate the difficulties with which the student has to contend and, instead of clearing them up, may easily be led to elaboration, introducing complexities which leave the student impressed with the superior knowledge of his teacher, but more confused than ever as to what the lesson is about. It is not unnatural that enthusiasm in a subject should sometimes lead a teacher to go over the heads of his pupils. I do not wish to undervalue the stimulation afforded by learned exposition from a scholar, but I wish to make the point that this is not always an unmixed good, and that the less exhaustive knowledge of his officer instructor is not always an unmixed evil.

It has also been said that we are old-fashioned in our methods at the Naval Academy. In some respects this is frankly admitted. It does not mean, however, that our minds are closed to new ideas. We are constantly on the lookout for new ideas, and adopt them when we are convinced that they are good. But we believe that the country is proud of the high standing the Naval Academy has attained as an educational institution, and we do not propose to kick down prematurely the ladder by which the academy has mounted to this enviable position. For example, the method of teaching called the "direct method" aims to supply knowledge in a sort of predigested form, which can be assimilated by the pupil without effort. We do not use this method to any great extent at the Naval Academy. I believe in the old-fashioned way—"We learn by doing"—and our embryo officers will continue to fit themselves for future tasks by doing a lot of "hard digging" during their four years at Annapolis. We try to give the incentive, point the way, and help them over the hard spots, but conscientious work on their part is required to reach the goal.

NUMBER OF INSTRUCTORS—CIVILIAN AND NAVAL.

Mr. KELLEY. How many professors and instructors have you altogether at the academy?

Admiral WILSON. We have 118 civilian instructors and about the same number of officer instructors.

Mr. KELLEY. What do you think should be the right proportion?

Admiral WILSON. Before the war we had about three officer instructors to one civilian instructor. I think that if this appropriation were cut to about $150,000 or $140,000 from the amount it is to-day, we at the Naval Academy could have the best of what we have now and have ample civilian instructors to keep the balance; that the Naval Academy would not suffer in the least, and that the total number of officer instructors and civilian instructors would be reduced.

Mr. KELLEY. That would mean you would have to let about 50 civilian instructors go at the end of the year?

Admiral WILSON. No, sir; I think we would have to let about 78 go.

Mr. KELLEY. I was just thinking of the possible moral obligation involved in letting so many go at once.

ADVISABILITY OF REDUCING NUMBER OF CIVILIAN INSTRUCTORS.

Admiral WILSON. The civil instructors came into the Naval Academy during the war when officers were doing other work and could not be obtained, and I think, as we are after economy combined with efficiency, that we could save a quarter of a million dollars right there. I do not think it would hurt the efficiency.

Mr. KELLEY. And you do not think it would be an injustice at all? You think there is plenty of time left so that these people could get positions elsewhere? I was just thinking whether or not there would be ample notice of the change in policy.

Admiral WILSON. Of course, my personal feelings would be entirely with the professors and instructors at the Naval Academy. I would not want to see any of them lose their jobs, because they are all good men; but I was speaking strictly as the Superintendent of the Naval Academy in coming before you, who are appropriating money for the Naval Establishment. It is my thought that a quarter of a million dollars could be saved.

Mr. KELLEY. By using about the same number of officers in place of these 78 civilian instructors?

Admiral WILSON. Yes, sir. It is very probable that we would require less officers to take the places of the professors who go out.

Mr. FRENCH. That would be caused by the diminution in enrollment?

Admiral WILSON. No, sir; it would be because the officers at the Naval Academy can be utilized to more advantage than the professors; they can teach more than one subject if necessary, and they can be utilized in the drills.

Mr. FRENCH. What period of contract have the professors there now? Are they employed from year to year?

Admiral WILSON. Some time ago they were given appointments that stated that they were appointed for a certain length of time, but I understand that is governed entirely by the appropriation of Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. You think you would have no trouble in getting officers who would make good instructors?

Admiral WILSON. No, sir. Just now, when we are thinking about keeping our officer personnel until we know there is going to be no more trouble, it would be a very profitable way to use their services.

Mr. BYRNES. I think so, too, if you have no doubt about securing competent men; but a good officer may not be a good instructor.

Admiral WILSON. Mr. Byrnes, we have very little choice about who shall come to the Naval Academy as instructors. If he is an officer in the Navy and his services are available, he is sent to us, and I have not first pick of the men in the Navy who come to the Naval Academy as instructors.

Mr. BYRNES. Who does select them?

Admiral WILSON. When the Bureau of Navigation finds officers becoming available on account of detachment from sea duty they send their names to me. I pass on them, and I pick any one, unless he has something in his make-up which I know personally would not fit him to be associated with the midshipmen.

Mr. BYRNES. You will no doubt agree that it is not every man who has received an education that possesses the gift of imparting knowledge to others.

Admiral WILSON. Yes, sir; at the Naval Academy we have to agree to that to a large extent—that any man who is a commissioned officer and who has gone through the Naval Academy is good material to bring back to teach the midshipmen. Although he may not be the best teacher compared with some civilian instructor, in the end he delivers as much education to the midshipmen as one who is just trained in scholastic work, because there are more things than teaching him his lesson that the officer has to teach a midshipman.

Mr. KELLEY. It has been my understanding that these civilian instructors were employed through an oral contract, or some sort of understanding, that they should remain five years if they were satisfactory.

Admiral WILSON. Well, sir, I do not look upon that as a contract in any way. I look upon it like this, that you say to him if he behaves himself and delivers the proper efficiency there will be no reason to disturb him for a certain length of time. Of course, I realize that their tenure of office is in accordance with the appropriations by Congress.

Mr. FRENCH. What would be the decrease on the basis of the less number of midshipmen you will probably have next year?

Admiral WILSON. I do not think there will be any marked decrease in the number of midshipmen, because probably the same number will come in; but I think there will be a moderate decrease due to the fact that we must be less kind-hearted in carrying those who are not entirely efficient. In the past we have been asked by numerous persons to give this man another show and give that man another show, but now that it is the wish of Congress to cut us down at the Naval Academy, I do not think we will have as many requests along that line.

Mr. KELLEY. About how many of these civilian professors would probably leave, anyhow?

Admiral WILSON. I doubt if any would leave, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. It is your opinion, Admiral, that the academy would not suffer at all if the percentage of officer instructors was increased, and the only element that enters into that at all would be whether or not a little more notice might not properly be given to the civilian instructors to get out of the positions?

Admiral WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Secretary, I should like to have your opinion as to the recommendation of Admiral Wilson to reduce the number of civilian instructors by from 33⅓ per cent to 50 per cent and to replace them with officers at the academy for the coming year?

Secretary DENBY. I would approve that suggestion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FRENCH. In the event of the reduction of the number of cadets in the academy, what ratio would the reduction of the members of the faculty bear to the reduction of the students; that is, would it bear the same ratio or some other ratio?

Secretary DENBY. I understood there would not be any reduction.

Mr. FRENCH. I do not know. I am simply asking that question, putting it in a hypothetical way, so in the event there should be.

Admiral WILSON. Yes, sir; it would be about the same, except that it would be gradual, due to the fact that the entering class has one line of subjects to learn and that the older classes have more technical subjects which require officers entirely to teach.

Mr. FRENCH. And probably in the more advanced lines one officer or teacher would not have as many pupils?

Admiral WILSON. No, sir. I think the number of pupils to each instructor would be about the same. It averages anywhere from 12 to 14, according to the number of instructors.

* * * * * * *

AMOUNT SAVED BY REDUCING NUMBER OF CIVILIAN INSTRUCTORS.

Mr. KELLEY. Do you know, Admiral, how many of the civilian professors at the academy are married men?

Admiral WILSON. I think the majority of them.

Mr. KELLEY. You do not know offhand, I suppose, whether they own homes in Annapolis?

Admiral WILSON. I think most of those to be retained would be those who have families and homes. That is, those who at the academy contribute to the academy other than their teaching. We have instructors who help in athletics, who help in the entertainments, who help in our Naval Academy work. They give themselves to other work besides their regular required routine work, and naturally those men would be the ones that the academy would want to keep, and also the academy would give attention to the length of service.

Mr. KELLEY. You could administer this in such a way that those who have homes there, if they were to be let go, would have a little longer time to get ready for the change?

Admiral WILSON. Yes, sir. It is the desire of mine not to hurt anybody.

Mr. KELLEY. If you carry out this policy you can reduce the amount from $385,000 to what?

Admiral WILSON. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars, I said.

Mr. KELLEY. Instead of $385,000?

Admiral WILSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, in view of the fact that it is now nearly 3 o'clock and that we have read but two pages of the bill to-day and are not through with them, and that there are 15 pages remaining to be read, is it still the idea of the gentleman from Michigan that we have to stay here and have a roll call vote to-night?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. A number of gentlemen seem to want to speak on this proposition. I am trying to bring it to a head as quickly as possible. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois is timely, if we expect to finish the bill to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a few words about this question of civilian instruction. I notice in the testimony of Admiral Wilson in the hearings before the committee that he said:

> We have 118 civilian instructors and about the same number of officer instructors.

The figures given by the gentleman from Michigan, as usual, differ from those given by the naval officers. The gentleman from Michigan said they had 103 officers and 115 civilians. The difference in this case is not very great. When the reduction in the appropriation was proposed the gentleman from Michigan asked Admiral Wilson the following question:

> That would mean that you would have to let about 50 civilian instructors go at the end of the war?

Admiral Wilson replied that it would mean that they would have to let about 78 go.

The question later came up as to the qualifications of the officers who would act as substitutes for these civilian teachers, and I quote now from the hearings:

> Mr. BYRNES. You think you would have no trouble in getting officers who would make good instructors?
>
> Admiral WILSON. No, sir. Just now, when we are thinking about keeping our officer personnel until we know there is going to be no more trouble, it would be a very profitable way to use their services.
>
> Mr. BYRNES. I think so, too, if you have no doubt about securing competent men; but a good officer may not be a good instructor.
>
> Admiral WILSON. Mr. BYRNES, we have very little choice about who shall come to the Naval Academy as instructors. If he is an officer in the Navy and his services are available, he is sent to us, and I have not first pick of the men in the Navy who come to the Naval Academy as instructors.
>
> Mr. BYRNES. Who does select them?
>
> Admiral WILSON. When the Bureau of Navigation finds officers becoming available on account of detachment from sea duty, they send their names to me. I pass on them and I pick any one, unless he has something in his make-up which I know personally would not fit him to be associated with the midshipmen.

Mr. Chairman, it may be that there are to be found among the naval officers men who have a knack for teaching, but certainly if it is necessary to train men for the profession of a naval officer it is also necessary to train men for the profession of a teacher. [Applause.] The question was asked a little while ago whether the civilian instruction would be superior to the officer instruction, whether the officers would be competent to teach. You may as well ask whether the civilian command of a warship would be as competent as the command of the officers who were trained for that purpose. [Applause.] Either there is nothing in training at all or the men trained for a profession are superior to the men who have not that training.

As to the statement made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] with regard to the methods of civilian instruction, he has completely reversed the facts—not that he intended to do so.

The fact is that it is the officer's teaching that he is describing——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman has made his statement, let me make mine. The officer issues orders to man the blackboard; the men are put to work at the blackboard, and when they have finished they stand at attention until they are dismissed. If there is a blunder the instructor takes it into consideration in grading the pupil, but frequently calls no attention to it and does not correct it nor make it an opportunity for instruction.

I do not mean to say that this is the uniform method pursued by naval officers who are on the teaching force at Annapolis, but my attention has been called to it more than once or twice by midshipmen who are deprived in this fashion of the effective instruction they are entitled to at the Naval Academy. We must have teachers, not merely men in authority, who will command their pupils to learn.

I am interested in this question of teaching. [Applause.] We ought to give the men in the Naval Academy the best education we can give them. [Applause.] Officers are needed for the instruction of the men in technical subjects in the academy, and the civilian instructors are needed to teach certain other courses—modern languages, mathematics, history, international law, and subjects they have specialized in not only as students of those subjects but also in the art of training men and communicating to them knowledge of the subjects in which the instructors have specialized.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does the gentleman recall a few years ago that Dr. Charles W. Eliott criticized the pedagogic practice at West Point for the same reason that it was a sort of psychological inbreeding of——

Mr. TEMPLE. West Point has always lacked the civilian training element, but they turn out good men, provided they have had the proper foundation before they go there. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, last year I was on the Board of Visitors at Annapolis, but I did not see any civilian instructors there. I have not seen any since. None of them has asked me to interfere on behalf of the civilian instructors, but on the Board of Visitors at that time were Dr. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, of California; Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale; Dr. Kenneth Sills, of Bowdoin College, Maine; Doctor Talbert, of Illinois; and Doctor Riddick, of North Carolina. I talked to them about it. They said that the weak point of Annapolis was instruction in the classroom. I had naturally a great deal of respect for their opinion. They were men eminent in their profession. When this matter came up I took occasion to write to them, and I am going to ask consent to print their letters in the RECORD. I wrote to Doctor Alderman, of the University of Virginia, for a number of years on the Board of Visitors, and they all agree that it was a very great mistake to reduce the number of civilian instructors at this academy. Personally I think it would be of very great advantage if we would reduce the number of naval officers there who are there as instructors. We send a boy there at great expense to the Government and with a great expense of time to him. If he does not have competent and efficient instruction during the session—the first year, the second year, the third year, or the fourth year—he fails in his examinations. Many boys fail after being there two or three years, fail when they would not have failed if they had had the instruction of efficient, trained, competent, educated civilian instructors. For that reason it occurs to me it would be a most unwise thing to embark upon this policy at the suggestion of Admiral Wilson.

He is a very capable man in his line, but that is not his line. I am advised that it is his opinion and the opinion of others high in authority in the Navy that they should get rid of all civilian instructors, because, as a very distinguished naval man said, he did not want any civilian instructors "snooping" around Annapolis. So, in my opinion, it would be advantageous to the boys, and I personally think it would be very advantageous, if the head master at that school were a civilian; I think it would be a very good object lesson to the boys to have daily occular demonstrations of the fact while they are there that the civil in this good country is above the military. [Applause.] I feel it would be a good thing for him to have a thorough education during the four years of his training before he goes into the Navy, and I do not agree with the statement of Admiral Wilson in the hearings, that what we want at Annapolis is to train men to be officers and not scholars. If that be true, there is no occasion to waste money at Annapolis, but simply certify the boys in from the high schools, certify them onto ships without wasting time at Annapolis in their education. They can there get the technical training that the officers can give, and which alone they can give.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the letters referred to:

BOWDOIN COLLEGE,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Brunswick, Me., April 3, 1922.

Hon. B. G. HUMPHREYS,
House of Representatives, Washington.

MY DEAR MR. HUMPHREYS: I received last Saturday afternoon your telegram asking me my opinion of the proposition to replace civilian instructors at Annapolis with naval officers. As it happens, I expect to be in Washington on Thursday and Friday of this week—April 6 and 7—and shall endeavor to see you then and talk the whole matter over. In the meantime, however, I am perfectly willing to go on record to this extent:

For five years, from 1917 to 1921, inclusive, I was a member of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy. The board, or that part of it that was composed of college men, was unanimous, I think, in believing that the weakest thing in the academy was the teaching in the classroom. If the naval authorities intend to confer the degree of B. S. on the graduates of the Naval Academy hereafter, it is vitally important that the course there should be the equivalent of that given by our best civilian engineering schools, and I do not see how this can be done unless in certain departments expert civilian instructors are employed. Furthermore, I believe that in assigning the naval officers to the academy for instructional purposes the department should be much more careful than it has been in the past about assigning men who have some qualifications as teachers. Undoubtedly there are in the Navy a certain number of officers who have the gift of teaching and who would do very well in classroom; but only such men should be assigned for that important duty.

In the emergency now before the Navy Department, under which it may be necessary to train a number of men who will never become naval officers, it seems to me all the more necessary to see to it that the teaching is equal to that of the best institutions of collegiate or university rank in the country. Of course, the academy exists primarily to train naval officers, but the morale is so good there that discipline will not break down if civilian instructors are employed much more generally in the classroom. No fair-minded man can visit the academy without being aware that the methods in many of the departments are antiquated and not nearly so effective as they ought to be. Personally, I hope very much that Congress will increase the number of civilian instructors there rather than eliminate them.

Very truly yours,

KENNETH C. M. SILLS, President.

—

NORTH CAROLINA STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE AND ENGINEERING,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
West Raleigh, April 11, 1922.

Hon. B. G. HUMPHREYS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HUMPHREYS: I have received your letter of April 7, and must confess that I am somewhat surprised at the turn matters seem to be taking at the Naval Academy. I was, as you perhaps know, on the Board of Visitors for two years, and I think the unanimous opinion of the members was that the employment of civilian instructors should be encouraged to an even greater extent perhaps than at present.

Personally, I believe that in those departments which are not purely technical there should be a large percentage of civilian instructors, whose profession is teaching and who are interested in this work and who will stay at the academy long enough to acquire the experience necessary to make them really proficient. I firmly believe that if these civilian instructors are dispensed with, and the entire teaching force of the academy should consist of men detailed from the Navy for a few years whose principal interest is not teaching, that the standards of the academy would be very much lowered and that as an educational institution it would not be on a par with the other colleges of our country. I should hate very much to see the policy suggested in your letter adopted.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

W. C. RIDDICK, President.

—

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Charlottesville, April 10, 1922.

Hon. BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HUMPHREYS: I am glad to have your letter of the 7th instant. My own judgment is entirely against the proposed policy to reduce and finally replace civilian instructors at Annapolis with officers from the Navy assigned to the academy as instructors. In the fields of English, history, and the modern languages, at least, this policy would be destructive of good teaching and of real scholarship, and would, I think, tend to lower the whole educational status of those subjects in the scheme of instruction at the Naval Academy. I understand that the Naval Academy is a very technical institution, existing not to make scholars but technical men known as naval officers, but they have great responsibilities. They need some knowledge of the language and history and literature of their own and other countries to enable them to represent this country with propriety and power and to do their duty in the largest possible way. Doubtless money could be saved by the process, because it is a penny-wise and pound foolish policy, in my judgment. I served for four years, I think, upon the Board of Visitors of the Naval Academy as its chairman. I do not pretend to have knowledge of the technicalized subjects there taught, and do not doubt that they are taught splendidly—certainly with devotion and skill—by officers of the Navy. The best teaching I saw, however, was that done by the civilian instructors, and it would be a sad day, I believe, for the institution, which all of us honor and respect, if the teaching power and scholarly spirit of the civilian instructors should be removed from its life.

Faithfully yours,

EDWIN A. ALDERMAN,
President.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment permitting the retention of the present force of civilian instructors. One year ago it was my privilege to serve upon the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy. We spent some three or four days there. I have always been a great admirer of the school at Annapolis, and my admiration in the school was greatly increased by reason of my service on the board. It is truly a great school and I do not believe it has its equal anywhere. The success of the school is due in part to the excellent naval officers who are detailed for duty there and in part to the very fine work performed by the civilian instructors. There are something like 248 instructors of all kinds, of which about 132 are naval officers and 116 are civilians. The course of study is four years. A considerable portion of the work during the first two years is of the kind that one would receive in the better colleges in the country. This instruction is largely under the charge of civilians. They are skilled teachers and professors who instruct in history, languages, mathematics, literature, international law, and other subjects in keeping with a cultural or academic course in college. The appropriation provided for would necessitate a reduction in the staff of civilian instructors. They would be replaced by naval officers. In other words, naval officers would be placed there to instruct in these cultural subjects.

Mr. Chairman, this would be a mistake, and a great mistake. The hearings disclose that the Superintendent of the Academy, Admiral Wilson, recommended dropping 78 of these civilian instructors, which is over 50 per cent of the number engaged. It seems to be pretty fairly understood that the reason for this is not to cut down expenses but to do away eventually with civilian instruction and have all of this done by naval officers. I think this would be a mistake. The committee thought it would be a mistake, for it turned down this request of the superintendent. It has been suggested by the proponents of the bill that we will need fewer instructors this next year. However, there is no legislation as yet cutting down the number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy. Certainly, then, with an enrollment of from 2,250 to 2,400 midshipmen for the next year, we ought not seriously to consider cutting down the teaching force.

If it be maintained that these civilian instructors would be replaced by naval officers, I want to say that I do not believe that it is possible to get naval officers competent enough to fill the position of civilian instructor. A man may be a most excellent naval officer and yet make a very poor teacher. The hearings of the committee disclose the difficulties that the Superintendent of the Academy has had heretofore in getting competent naval officers to teach these academic and cultural subjects.

The whole proposition to me seems to arise out of a desire upon the part of some one in the Navy Department to eventually get rid of civilian educators.

I do not know whether it is true or not, but it is said the request was made this year that the Board of Visitors, instead of having five civilian educators from different universities, should have five business men; that the Superintendent of the Academy did not care to have skilled educators on the Board of Visitors. I am wondering if the gentleman from Michigan can bear out that statement? Possibly the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] can.

Mr. DENISON. I can bear it out. There was not a single educator placed on the Board of Visitors this year.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It seems to me that that is just simply evidence of what a lot of us have been feeling here, that instead of the Superintendent of the Academy doing this on the ground of economy, he is taking advantage of the desire of the committee to economize to put forth a policy that is wholly at variance with the former policy of Congress.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to my good friend from Minnesota that I think the desire of the Superintendent of the Academy was to utilize men on the Government pay roll when they were competent and all right for this purpose. I would be very far from criticizing any officer of the Government who pursues that course.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The Superintendent of the Academy said he had but little free choice; that they gave him men eligible for shore duty and he had to take what was given him; that he had a limited selection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, is there any time remaining of the time originally fixed? I think the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] did not use all of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have been very generous, and we want to finish this afternoon. Of course, I would be glad to accommodate my friend from Maryland——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman wait until the next paragraph is read?

Mr. LINTHICUM. If the gentleman wants to object——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not object; but I think I ought to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to take up any time of the committee this afternoon on the amendment, but I feel that, being from the State of Maryland and living within 25 miles of the Naval Academy, I am not imposing upon the House by saying a few words. I have known the academy all my life. It is located in the county of which I am a native, and I feel very deeply interested in it. I feel that if we remove these civilian instructors it is bound to be a very severe blow to the Naval Academy. Certainly we do not want to take any chances with the education at the Naval Academy when we have limited the Navy under the disarmament conference.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We have not limited it——

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know the press said that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] was a little peeved because we increased the personnel the other day. We have limited to 18 battleships, and if the gentleman is talking about the increase of the number of the personnel to 86,000 men, then I can only say many of us deem it essential if we want to keep up the 5-5-3 ratio.

As for the Naval Academy, these men are trained instructors and have been performing this service for some time. No naval officer can become an instructor until he has seen 12 years of sea duty, or other duty away from the academy. Certainly the gentleman from Michigan, the chairman of the subcommittee, who was a school-teacher, as he intimated this morning, knows that when you take a man away from his studies 12 years and put him back to teach, he can not do it. He has forgotten a considerable part of the work in that time. I happen to have taught, myself, at one time, and I know well that it requires constant study and work to teach a lot of men who are highly proficient, like these academy boys are.

I sincerely hope this committee will not refuse to continue these civilian instructors. The amount is not large, and the question is a very important one, and not only is the present amendment important, but, I think, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] intimated a while ago, it is equally as important to follow this up with another amendment, so that they can not be dismissed, because this amendment in itself will not keep them from being dismissed if the Superintendent of the Academy wishes to do so. And I shall also favor the amendment which prohibits dismissal of teachers from the academy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 50, line 14, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as professor or instructor at the United States Naval Academy to perform the duties which were performed by civilian professors or instructors on January 1, 1922."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment. The hearings before the committee show that before the war the ratio of civilian instructors to naval officers instructing at the academy was one civilian instructor to three naval officers. The reason why the naval-officer personnel was reduced was because of their need in active service. I wish to call the attention of the membership of the House to a comparison of the instructors at the Military Academy to that at the Naval Academy if this amendment is adopted. At the Military Academy all the instructors except four are officers of the Army, and the civilian instructors give instruction solely in languages. The argument advanced here to-day is that the character of instruction given to our military officers in the past has not been as efficient as it might have been under civilian instructors. But again we find the old, old rule that when once a civilian gets connected with the Government teat it is very hard to separate him. He will certainly find advocates on the floor who will advance arguments that the policy that has been in force in the instructing of Army cadets and naval midshipmen from the foundation of these institutions has been wrong, and that in order to give employment to civilians the new policy should be continued.

I am not in favor of this amendment that has just been proposed, that will keep out of the academy naval officers who may be usefully employed there. You have appropriated a sufficient amount of money to engage civilian instructors, and I think it should be left to the superintendent of the academy, who is the responsible accounting head for the efficient administration of that institution and the character of the instruction that is to be given, to determine whether the men to be employed there shall be officers or civilian instructors. I think it is going pretty far when we as a legislative body seek to set up our judgment against the judgment of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy as to who shall be the instructing force while he is in charge of the academy. I hope this amendment will be rejected.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is right about this. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] undertakes through his amendment to direct the Secretary of the Navy and the superintendent of the academy not to employ a naval officer, even though there should be a vacancy in the force of civilian instructors. I am quite sure that the House will not be justified in going that far.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Under the amendment that we have just passed is there any guaranty against the dismissal of the civilian professors and instructors?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I presume there is no guaranty, but I am satisfied that the Secretary of the Navy and the Superintendent of the Naval Academy will realize from what has taken place here that it is the intention of Congress that the civilian and officer teaching personnel shall be about evenly balanced, and I do not believe there will be any abuse along that line. It might be very important that an officer be designated for service where there is now a civilian instructor, and I think legislation to prevent that would not be wise. I do not think we ought to adopt this amendment.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Who has the selection of these civilian teachers provided the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is adopted?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The head of the Bureau of Navigation has complete control of all the officer personnel, and he assigns them to ships, to stations, or wherever in his judgment they can be most useful. Now, of course, it has been said that he does not always select wisely in sending officers as teachers to the Naval Academy; but the superintendent of the academy is a very brilliant and able administrator, and he will be very quick to discover any officer who is a misfit. I think we can leave the matter very properly with the Secretary of the Navy and the superintendent of the academy.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman is willing to trust the naval expert who is now at the head of the academy and the Secretary of the Navy? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am willing to trust the Secretary of the Navy in all matters when we are in accord. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the amendment which we have just adopted will not accomplish the purpose desired unless we follow it with this amendment. This whole question came before Congress in 1913, and the Congress at that time—including, I think, my friend from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]—supported the idea and put it into the bill. Every year after that we put this same provision in the bill in order to carry out the will of Congress. It is not a direction. It is a limitation; that is all. No doubt we did it with the approval of my friend from Michigan. In 1914 we adopted the same language, and in 1915 and 1916 and 1917, and it would have been there to-day if it had not been for the fact that when we got into war in 1917 there was no need to put it in, because there were no surplus naval officers to send there. That was the reason why it was left out of the appropriation bills of 1917 and subsequent years. Now, gentlemen, I think I know what I am talking about. If you want to accomplish the purpose we are trying to accomplish, we must put this provision in the bill. I know what the superintendent of the academy intends to do. He intends to carry out that policy of getting rid of all civilian instructors if he can, and it is for Congress to say whether he shall do it or not.

We may as well face the issue squarely and settle it again as we settled it in 1913. Shall we maintain the Naval Academy as an educational institution of merit and high standing, or shall we allow it to be made into a mere naval training station? If the superintendent is allowed to displace the civilian professors and instructors with naval officers, we should let the country know it, and then when we appoint young men to the academy we should tell them and their parents that we are not sending the boys to a school for higher education but to a mere naval training school. Let us adopt this amendment and save the Naval Academy.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman permit me to read the language inserted in the act of 1913?

Mr. DENISON. I will be glad to have the gentleman do it.

Mr. LAZARO (reading):

That no part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as an instructor at the United States Naval Academy to perform duties which were performed by civilian instructors on January 1, 1913.

Mr. DENISON. That is the same language carried every year for five years from 1913, and is the language carried in the amendment I have proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were 85 ayes and 53 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant librarian, $2,500; cataloguer, $1,800; two shelf assistants, at $1,400 each; secretary of the Naval Academy, $3,000; clerks—2 at $2,100 each, 2 at $1,900 each, 2 at $1,800 each, 9 at $1,600 each, 4 at $1,400 each, 23 at $1,300 each, 7 at $1,200 each; repair man or seamstress, $1,000; surveyor, $1,700; services of choirmaster and organist at chapel, $1,700; captain of the watch, $1,600; second captain of the watch, $1,500; 30 watchmen, at $1,400 each; 5 telephone switchboard operators, at $840 each; mail messenger, $1,200; in all, $134,900.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In my mail this morning I received a letter from an old and dear friend of mine in New Orleans, and it contained a passage which I want to read to the committee. The letter was in no sense propagandist, such as had been so savagely reprobated by the gentleman from Michigan on yesterday and previously. The letter is entirely personal and covered a great many subjects besides this particular matter. But I thought it would be well to bring the matter to the attention of the committee at this time, so apt is it. I may say that the writer of the letter is a trained lawyer, an honored judge, and is in no sense a jingo. I have of course deleted names, but probably some Members may understand whom he refers to. I notice the gentleman from Michigan smiles. Probably he recognizes himself. [Laughter.] This is what this gentleman writes to me:

I see by to-day's dispatches that the Navy wreckers were defeated in the House. Such exhibitions as * * * have been given make me at times despair of popular government and despair of the Republic. The late war showed that a Navy must be first or nowhere. An inferior Navy must go into port or go to the bottom.

Unless we are willing to tax ourselves and have a Navy that can keep the seas, not be sent to the bottom and not be driven into port, we should be logical enough to abolish the Navy and save the millions which would be worse than foolishly spent on a second-class Navy.

If you need a pole 40 feet long to knock down the persimmon, you should buy yourself a 40-foot pole or none at all. The money spent on a 30-foot pole is worse than wasted.

For one I shall be very glad to wait the long roll call with which the gentleman from Michigan has been menacing us so long, and I shall be very glad to register my views on the subject which my constituent has better expressed than I could. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] has spoken. It appears that people have widely different views as to what the Conference on the Limitation of Armament was for. People who live up at Squantum, near the historic city of Boston, where they built destroyers during the war, think that the purpose of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament was to continue the building of destroyers in Squantum, although we have 200 destroyers now more than are necessary.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Not yet. I will come to the gentleman in a minute. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUPRÉ. I will be right here. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then we come along down the line to Charleston, W. Va., where there is a great armor-plate factory. They have an idea that the Conference on the Limitation of Armament was for the purpose of continuing the manufacture of armor plate, although the vessels on which that armor plate was to be used are not to be built.

Then we come to the Washington Navy Yard, and people in Washington apparently have the idea that the purpose of the conference—unless it was for the purpose of giving them an opportunity to raise rents in the city—was for the purpose of allowing the men down in the Washington Gun Factory to complete the guns that were to be placed on these great monsters of the deep, the 16-inch guns that are never to fire a shot. They have the idea that the purpose of the Conference for the Limitation of Armament was to complete the manufacture of these guns, whether we ever needed to use them on a battleship or not.

Then we go on down the coast and we come to the city of Charleston, S. C., where they have a navy yard there up in the country somewhere. [Laughter.] Somebody has said that every naval vessel that goes up the river to the navy yard at Charleston, S. C., must be preceded by a dredge. Whether that is true or not I do not know, but the gentleman from South Carolina the other day insisted with all his might and main that his idea of the Conference for the Limitation of Armament was at least to keep the navy yard there in operation and the dredge working full blast.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the gentleman have an opportunity to visit Ohio? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman from Ohio held out valiantly against the League of Nations, but has fallen an easy victim to the league of navy yards. [Laughter.]

Now, let me go on. I am really very much indebted to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ], who has given me this opportunity to lay this situation calmly before the House. We have come now to the great historic State of Louisiana. Down at New Orleans they had a navy yard once, but it is now closed up, and apparently the idea of our distinguished friend from New Orleans as to the purpose of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament is to open up defunct navy yards and to breathe a new breath of life into deceased war plants. Then we cross the mountains over to the Pacific coast and we start with Los Angeles. Over there their idea of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament seems to be to make two navy yards grow where only one grew before. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that there is not a navy yard within 500 miles of Los Angeles.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; and as long as I have anything to do about it there will not be, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. If the prestige of the gentleman continues to shrink in naval matters during the next year as it has in the last week, I am afraid that he will not have anything to say about it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, let me have five minutes more in which to finish the picture.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he have five minutes additional time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I did stir up Los Angeles, did I not? [Laughter.]

Mr. OSBORNE. I want to ask the gentleman if he ever heard of a navy yard being proposed at Los Angeles? I never did.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My friend is only juggling with terms. They have been demanding a submarine base at Los Angeles ever since I have known anything about things here. The naval officers have recommended a submarine base there.

Mr. OSBORNE. But the gentleman spoke of a navy yard.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, ho! Have navy yards become so obnoxious that gentlemen now seek to call them by some other name? [Laughter.]

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman yield for another observation?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Surely; though I would prefer not to be interrupted until I have finished the picture.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman from Michigan let me ask him a question? I do not interrupt very often.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. OSBORNE. When the gentleman makes a palpable misstatement in regard to a matter in which I am interested, I think he ought to give me an opportunity of showing where he is wrong.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If I have spoken lightly of Los Angeles, it is not because I do not greatly admire its able Representatives on this floor.

Mr. OSBORNE. But the gentleman got five minutes just now, and he knows very well that this submarine base is not in any sense a navy yard.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It has the same intentions, so far as the Treasury goes. [Laughter.]

Mr. OSBORNE. It has not the uses of a navy yard.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course, a submarine base is only a navy yard for the repair of submarines.

Mr. OSBORNE. And, further, the gentleman tries now to make it appear that there is some matter of selfishness involved in this.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, perish the thought! [Laughter.] It is nothing but pure, unadulterated love of country—nothing else! [Laughter.]

Mr. OSBORNE. The gentleman knows that I have not as good a voice as he has nor an eloquence equal to his.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, give us the facts. That might help some.

Mr. OSBORNE. The gentleman knows that the city of Los Angeles has offered the United States Government a tract of land there worth $4,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. She had better keep it.

Mr. OSBORNE. Is not that so?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not know how much it is worth to Los Angeles. I know it is not worth a copper to the Government of the United States for a naval base.

Mr. OSBORNE. That is where the gentleman and I differ, and I have got just as much right to my opinion as he has to his.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I can not yield to the gentleman any more.

Mr. OSBORNE. The gentleman has yielded enough. That is all I wanted to say.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I thank the gentleman. I am glad to have him permit me to go on. Down at San Diego they have a magnificent harbor, a harbor large enough to hold all the ships of the United States Navy, a magnificent location, and yet they want another base for the submarines at Los Angeles. They can not repair them down at San Diego, and they want another one up at Los Angeles, 80 miles away, and the war experts have said, and have put it in the hearings, that if we ever do build a submarine base at Los Angeles, it will be good only in time of peace; that we would have to get away from there in the event of war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman advise us as to where the President of the United States wants a navy yard?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to my friend that the President of the United States is abundantly able to take care of himself; but the President of the United States——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. May I have five minutes more to run along up the coast a little farther?

Mr. DUPRÉ. And then will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I give notice now that after the gentleman has had five minutes I shall object to any more extensions.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Sure, the gentleman will object. I know he is not enjoying himself.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the galleries have been amply entertained for one afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I now want to pass by Los Angeles to San Francisco, the great city of the Golden Gate.

Ah, they have been trying to get a navy yard at San Francisco, lo, these many months, and they have——

Mr. LINEBERGER. San Francisco or Mare Island?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just a moment. They are asking for an appropriation for a new navy yard at San Francisco to cost the Government $80,000,000, and that is San Francisco's idea of the meaning of a Conference on the Limitation of Armament. [Applause.] And that in spite of the fact that we have a great naval station at which some of our greatest battleships have been built at Mare Island, only 28 miles away, and upon which we have spent $40,000,000.

Now, I yield to my friend from Louisiana——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the gentleman going on up the coast to our friend MCARTHUR?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I suppose I should.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to say——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. My friend MCARTHUR comes from the great State of Oregon, and up there at the mouth of the Columbia River——

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is this an omnibus bill of indictment?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They are getting ready up there on the Columbia River for another naval station. They have the land already bought, have they not, Mr. BUTLER? And of what use is a conference on the limitation of armament unless it hatches out a navy yard or two in Oregon? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. They have got something up there. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And so it turns out that we were after all wholly mistaken as to the objects of the conference. It never was intended to lift the burdens of armament from the backs of humanity but to keep all our navy yards going on the Atlantic, resurrect defunct navy yards on the Gulf, and build new navy yards on the Pacific. [Laughter and continued applause.]

Mr. DUPRÉ. I understood the gentleman to yield to me. I want to say to the gentleman who has yet so kindly failed to yield to me that I had no idea the effect of my friend calling him a naval wrecker would make him writhe so much, but that is what he is doing, and he is the man my friend wrote about. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of buildings and grounds: One messenger to superintendent, $1,001.60; necessary building attendants, $145,436.40; in all, $146,438.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McARTHUR. Has the gentleman navy yards in Colorado?

Mr. VAILE. Well, not right in Colorado, but there are a lot of navy yards that belong to Colorado, and that is what I want to talk about.

Mr. Chairman, we have had so many compliments paid just a minute ago to all of the navy yards that I want to get my town into this league. I come from a city and a congressional district which is 1 mile above the level of the sea and fifteen hundred miles away from the sea. Our navy yards, if you please, are scattered on both coasts of the country, from Massachusetts to California [applause], wherever ships have been built from the days of the Revolution to the days of the World War, for the protection of the trust handed down to us by our ancestors. We are told that the country is safe because it is protected by the sea. So it is; just so long as we have an adequate Navy upon the sea and no longer. My inland State of Colorado is just as safe from invasion as Massachusetts or California, and no safer. Now, those navy yards belong to us of Colorado, because they belong to the whole country, just as Paul Jones and Decatur and Farragut and Dewey belong to the whole country. We of the mountains are proud of our ships—our ships, I say—and of our men who make them and of our towns where they are made and of our men who stand behind the guns. Colorado can supply only its share of the latter, but it does supply those. We do not build ships in my town; we do not make the armor plate that covers them. We do build a lot of the men who sail them and who on their decks have defended the whole of this country, that belongs to all of us.

Now, I have risen to protest most solemnly against the imputation which has been running through this debate for the last week that the majority of my colleagues are actuated by selfish, local, sectional motives. [Applause.] Is it possible that 177 men in the House of Representatives, representing, as the advocates of a second-class navy would make it appear, 177 navy yards—is it possible that all of these 177 men are actuated by a spirit of narrow, local sectionalism? Are the only Simon-pure patriots in this House—the only men inspired by an ideal of national duty—the 130 who on Saturday followed the lead of the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill? No; Mr. Chairman, all the advocates of adequate national defense, all the advocates of a navy as large as is provided by the treaty for the limitation of armament, do not live in navy-yard districts, but as to my colleagues who do live in the splendid cities which have built the ships for our defense, I refuse to believe that they are less patriotic on that account.

We are asked by the advocates of a small navy to undo the magnificient work of a Republican President and a Republican Secretary of State by disregarding their advice and repudiating their leadership, by fixing our Navy personnel at a figure which the President tells us would put the United States far below the ratio of 5-5-3 provided by that treaty, the outstanding achievement of the age.

And the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] has the assurance to ask how we men of the Middle West and the Mountain States will justify our action to our constituents. Let me say to the gentleman that my constituents do not take the narrow, sectional view which he so generously imputes to all who disagree with him. The action of the Members with whom I stand is its own ample and abundant justification.

There will be no criticism in my district of a vote to keep the Navy of the United States as large as the navy of Japan. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, during this debate I certainly have not reflected in any way upon the motives of gentlemen who advocate 86,000 instead of 67,000 men. I know that, just like the gentleman who has preceded me, they may be absolutely sincere in their advocacy of the larger figure, for the reason that they have been informed that this bill provides a Navy equal to Japan's and smaller than Great Britain's. But this is not true, and when he returns to the Middle West I want the people there to be under no misunderstanding of the facts in this case. The facts are that the bill provides for the ships the Navy wishes to keep in commission, the same number of men that the experts of the Navy had on those ships on January 1 of this year.

The facts are that with 67,000 men they can keep in commission sufficient ships to maintain our ratio under the treaty, and I have heretofore demonstrated that we will have more men than Japan will.

Now, as to Great Britain, I have on my desk there the official record of the debates in the House of Commons upon the naval estimates, and the statement of the Secretary of the Admiralty accompanying the naval estimates which have been adopted and are now the law of Great Britain. They show that Great Britain, without waiting for our action, has made reductions that will make them have in commission a fleet smaller than ours. I read from the official statement of the Secretary of the Admiralty that among the proposed economies are:

(a) The scrapping of 12 capital ships, in addition to the 8 recently sold for breaking up, and the maintenance of only 15 in full commission (as compared with 38 in March, 1914).

My friend from Colorado doubtless reached his conclusion, as did the President, from information furnished by the department that Great Britain is maintaining 18 capital ships. But the official record shows they are to keep in full commission only 15, while this peace-loving Nation will under this bill or the proposed amendment keep in commission 18.

Now, as to submarines, the Secretary of the Admiralty informed the Commons:

The number of submarines in full commission will also be reduced from 46 to 40, 6 submarines on the China station being kept in reserve.

With the 67,000 men provided in this bill we propose to keep in commission 84 submarines, just 44 more than Great Britain will have.

Now, as to destroyers; let me read:

One of the destroyer flotillas belonging to the Atlantic Fleet was, for financial reasons, reduced to two-fifths complement last year. In view of the urgent need of economy, another flotilla will now be similarly reduced.

The total number of destroyers in full complement with the Atlantic Fleet is thus brought down to 40, the smallest number which can provide for the vital part played by destroyers in all modern fleet exercises and for the training of officers and men.

Twenty-three destroyers of the local defense flotillas, now on a reduced complement, will also be reduced to reserve.

So that with the Atlantic Fleet Great Britain will keep in commission only 40 destroyers. With the Mediterranean Fleet, only half the size of the Atlantic Fleet, certainly they will not keep in commission much more than 20, and the United States under this bill will keep in commission 103. [Applause.]

You have been told that having reduced the number of ships it is essential they should be fully manned in order to equal Great Britain, because Great Britain will maintain war complements, or at least the complements they have had the last few years. Listen to this official statement:

The Admiralty have come to the conclusion that the improved international situation now makes it possible to reduce in peace the complements of the ships of the Atlantic Fleet below the establishment laid down as the result of war experience. The average reduction effected, in the case of capital ships, will be 15.7 per cent.

All of which goes to show that the English are a serious people. They have taken seriously the armament conference and the four-power pact and believe that faith could be placed in the good intentions of the signers, and especially in America.

While to-day we have 96,000 men in the Navy alone, Great Britain, according to the official Record of the Commons, has directed a reduction of the personnel to 98,000 men, including marines and officers, naval officers, and officers and men of the coast guard. The Admiralty states that if the men in these various services in the United States are added to the total suggested by the committee of 67,000, it will make the personnel of the two nations approximately equal. They are correct. If you add to our 67,000 the 19,500 marines and 1,000 marine officers and the approximately 6,600 naval officers and approximately 4,000 officers and men of the Coast Guard, you have 31,100, making the total for the United States 98,100. I am satisfied that we should add our 2,500 midshipmen, because

I think they are included in the English figures; but I include only those items as to which there can be no dispute. If we increase to 86,000 we are going to have in the service, comparable to Great Britain, just 20,000 more men than they have.

Gentlemen may say that information as to the Navy of Great Britain should come from the experts of our Navy Department, but it takes no naval expert to read the law of Great Britain, and the figures I give are taken from the English naval estimates, which have been adopted and are now the law, and there is no higher evidence.

Now, let me say something to those who believe in the limitation of armament. The President says he felt compelled to accept the conclusion of the naval experts. The naval experts want disarmament just as much as you want this House abolished. If we never limit armament until they of their own accord agree to it, it will never be limited.

Now, as to the result of this conference. On December 1 last the Secretary of the Treasury submitted an estimate of naval expenditures for the fiscal year 1923 based upon the appropriations recommended and the unexpended balances available, and he said they would total $432,000,000.

That was before the conference. On April 14 he wrote Senator McCUMBER the letter made public this morning, in which he states that after consultation with the departments he submits revised estimates, and he estimates the naval expenditures for the next year at $400,000,000 or only $32,000,000 less than he estimated before the conference.

Since he wrote that letter the House, in Committee of the Whole, has added 19,000 men to the bill. If it remains, it will add about forty millions to the bill, and it will mean that instead of there being any decrease there will be an actual increase in the naval expenditures during the next year, and I want the people to know that that is the result of the armament conference for which the people prayed and which your party promised would result in decreased naval expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to follow the thought a little further that was suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and indicate what is going on at this time in the British House of Commons. If you will read the papers from London you will find the same kind of debate is going on there that is going on here, and the same kind of arguments are being advanced.

One group is urging a large navy for Great Britain; another group is urging that while the 5–5–3 ratio shall be maintained, Great Britain shall keep well within the boundaries that would be possible under the treaty. This group is urging a striking reduction of the enlisted personnel of the British Navy and a striking reduction of the appropriations for next year.

I told you a week ago to-day that the head of the British Admiralty, Lord Lee, had recently made a supplemental report touching the navy for next year, scaling down the personnel of the British Navy 20,000 men and the appropriation by £21,000,000. I find in the London Times of March 17 last the report of the discussion in the House of Commons, that was participated in by a number of members, and among the number Mr. Amery, the financial secretary to the Admiralty.

In this discussion Mr. Amery said that the policy of the country since the armistice had been one of drastic reduction of naval armament. And further on in referring to the particular program for Great Britain he declared that—the naval staff had agreed on a reduction of the peace complements of the capital ships by nearly 16 per cent.

This statement confirms the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]; 16 per cent is practically one-sixth. In other words, the Naval Staff of Great Britain is recommending that 15 and not 18 capital ships be kept in full commission, or else that the personnel upon the ships be scaled down 16 per cent.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will yield later, if I have the time.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that in the shaping of this bill the Congress should follow such a policy as will make it easy for other nations to reduce their naval appropriations to the minimum. Under the Limitation of Armament Conference agreement there is no limitation as to the number of submarines we may build. Yet does anyone doubt that if we were to engage in the wholesale building of submarines, Great Britain and Japan would follow suit and justify their course by pointing to the activities of the United States? And what I have said as to submarines may be said as to other craft, not specifically limited in the terms of the agreement.

In this same paper, the London Times, for March 17 last, I find the report of the speech of Col. A. Burgoyne, a member from Kensington, in the House of Commons. The name "Burgoyne" is reminiscent of Revolutionary history. Colonel Burgoyne believes that great good must result from the armaments conference. In his speech he declared that the value of what had been done at Washington could not be summed up merely in pounds, shillings, and pence—it was the most remarkable episode in our naval history, * * * wiping away any possibility of competitive building in the future.

Further on Colonel Burgoyne said:

The submarine was the most offensive weapon for the purpose of murder and the least effective for attacking warcraft.

And then he declared that there is need for additional agreements to prevent recrudescence of competitive preparations for sea warfare, and he urged the Government, with that end in view, to try to persuade other powers to come into another conference on similar lines to that held at Washington.

Gentlemen, I again repeat, the greatest value of the armaments conference is not limited to money, but is found in the directing of the thought of the people of the participating nations and of the world along lines of peace. I do not believe that an enlisted personnel of 86,000 men vitiates the limitation of armaments agreement, but, on the other hand, I do believe that every man you add in addition to 67,000 provided for by the committee is an unnecessary addition, and to that extent makes more difficult the activities of members of the British Parliament and the Japanese Diet in urging moderation in the maintenance of their naval strength.

WHAT WILL THE ADDED 19,000 PERSONNEL COST?

Now, let me refer by way of review to what the additional 19,000 men you propose to add to the Navy will cost. Numerous Members have asked me that question during the debate upon this bill. I told you Saturday that in my judgment the 19,000 men would add an additional cost of from $57,000,000 to $75,000,000. Already by your amendments you have added approximately $19,000,000, but I want to tell you frankly that the amount you have added will not meet the situation, and you must not delude yourselves into thinking that it will. The $19,000,000 added will provide for pay and for provisions for the most part, but this amount will not take care of the appropriation that will be necessary as additional pay; it will not take care of transportation and enlistment; it will not take care of added hospital expense; it will not take care of additional fuel and additional repair work made necessary by the additional ships upon which these men will be placed.

You will soon vote upon the amendment adding to the bill 19,000 men. If that amendment shall prevail, then either you must add more money or the Senate will add the money, and the bill will be brought back here and you will be told that you made it necessary for the Senate to add the money because you added men. You can not hug the sweet delusion that you can increase the personnel of the Navy and not increase the cost; you can not dodge the issue by refusing to vote the money here if you add the men.

When the committee reported this bill to the House it carried, in round numbers, $233,000,000; that figure is approximately $190,000,000 under what was appropriated last year. If you add this amendment to the bill, you will raise thereby, in my judgment, the Navy bill to approximately $300,000,000. Do you want to do it? Are you willing to assume this responsibility?

If gentlemen would maintain an efficient Navy, they must provide officers and they must provide men, but if they would cut down the expense they must economize where it will count the most and hurt the least. The division of pay cost of enlisted men on our ships with the pay cost of officers is as 77 to 23. That is, of the pay cost 77 per cent is for the enlisted men. I am not a prophet, but I know the demand for the strictest economy, and if you insist on pushing through the program of piling up men on your battle craft the people of this country will be disappointed in the cost of their Navy. Do not be surprised if public sentiment will demand sweeping reductions—reductions even further than your committee has proposed, and that will not be satisfied until the number of men shall be cut down and the number of officers as well. Gentlemen, that would be a most serious mistake. Let me urge you not to invite it.

I want to say just one word in conclusion. In 1916 the cost of our Navy in round figures was $147,000,000. To-day we have a larger and a better Navy and expenses are higher generally. But granted all this, in the face of the results of the Limitation of Armament Conference, in the face of world conditions by which the United States is vastly stronger than in 1916, in view of the further fact that the lesser number of men with the lesser appropriations called for, as submitted by your committee, will maintain the part of the United States in the 5–5–3 agreement, I submit that the bill that your committee has brought in should be sustained.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in this debate. The arguments made on both sides of the issue have been ably presented. There has been a line of criticism against the officers of the Navy, however, in which I do not concur. There have been times in the past when the American people thrilled at the mention of the American Navy and of American naval officers.

It was not many years ago when people throughout this country were speculating as to the strength of a certain flotilla on the high seas after we had declared war against Spain. Along the coast, on the Pacific and on the Atlantic, men were wondering what might happen if that Spanish flotilla should happen to enter some one of our harbors and start a bombardment. And then you will recall that after a time our Navy searched out the Spanish fleet—located it down in Santiago Harbor. You will also recall that on that occasion a young man went to his superior officer, the officer in command, and said that he knew how they could bottle up the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Santiago. The superior officer said to the young man, "How?"

"Why," he said, "seven men could sail an old boat into the neck of the entrance to the harbor, sink it, and in that way lock up the fleet." The officer replied, "It would be murder to ask seven men to take that boat into the channel under the direct fire of the Spanish guns." The young man said, "If you call for volunteers it will not be murder." So one evening without any band playing, when the boys were far from home, the order was sent out to the 11 American battleships to lower their small boats and bring seven volunteers to the flagship New York, to take the old boat, the Merrimac, into the channel and sink it. How many men do you think responded to that call to lay down their lives for their country? Not seven men, but 970 of America's best boys crowded into the small boats and rowed over to the flagship New York.

Whence came that fine spirit? It was inspired by the high order of leadership in the Navy. The people of this country were thrilled at this manifestation of American spirit, inspired in no small degree by the splendid leadership of the officers in the Navy. Again, the American people were stirred to a high pitch of enthusiasm when they learned that our American fleet had rounded Cape Horn, breaking the world's record for speed and arriving at Manila Harbor long before the enemy had reason to suspect its presence. On this occasion it was not only the men who manned the ships above deck but the firemen working far below the water line, stripped to the waist, heaving in tons of coal, hour after hour, that made this record possible.

I believe that every man in the American Navy, from the officer on the bridge to the man below the water line, has the respect and admiration of the American people. I believe it is time that criticism of the officers of our Navy should cease. [Applause.] We did not criticize them during the war. The officers of the Navy and the personnel of the ships made a record of achievement and heroism during the World War which does not warrant the unrestrained criticism we have heard on the floor of this House during this debate. It may be well for us to recall that our Navy kept the path across the ocean so free from enemy warcraft that only one transport carrying our soldiers was sunk. The officers and men of our Navy are responsible for this splendid record, in which we all share a common pride. We did not question the accuracy of their statements then with reference to the needs of the Navy, which they maintained at the highest point of efficiency, and I believe that we can trust them now.

There has been frequent reference made during this debate to the Limitation of Armament Conference recently held in this city, at which Secretary Charles E. Hughes acted as spokesman for the United States. I want to say to you men that you may not be quite so well acquainted with Secretary Charles E. Hughes as we are up in New York State. We know that when he goes before a court he goes prepared with all the facts. I believe that when President Harding, Secretary of State Hughes, Secretary of the Navy Denby, and Assistant Secretary Theodore Roosevelt appeared before the experts of the world at the Limitation of Armament Conference they were quite as well prepared with reference to the facts in this case as any group of men in this House. [Applause.] And I for one propose to follow the leadership of President Harding, Secretary Hughes, Secretary Denby, and Secretary Roosevelt with respect to the required personnel necessary to maintain the treaty ratio, rather than follow the leadership of the subcommittee, in so far as the facts in this case are concerned. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FUEL, MARINE CORPS.

For heat, light, and commutation thereof for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men, and other buildings and grounds pertaining to the Marine Corps; fuel, electricity, and oil for cooking, power, and other purposes; and sales to officers; $850,000.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, in the face of the eloquence of the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan], I did not say all I should have said when I was on the floor before. I dislike to say anything unpleasant of or to the distinguished chairman of the committee. He is of such an amiable character that I would not say a word that would hurt his feelings, or that would in any way impinge upon him, unless it was absolutely necessary to do so in order to keep within the bounds of truth. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, reference was made at that time to what the city of Los Angeles has done or has not done, and as to the reasons, as to whether they were selfish or otherwise. I want to say that on page 323 of the hearings before the committee will be found what testimony was taken before the committee on this subject. The distinguished chairman [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan] stated that this port would have to be abandoned in time of war, this proposed submarine base. I have looked over the hearings, where Admiral Coontz and other distinguished naval officers testified, and the distinguished chairman is the only one who made any such reference. The others refuted that statement, as you will find by looking over the hearings. The fact is that the city of Los Angeles, prior to the war, had completed a magnificent wharf in the harbor there, at a cost of a million dollars or more, and that wharf was turned over to the Government for a submarine base, and it has been used by the Government without cost from that date until this.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Certainly.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Did not the city of Los Angeles pay for that wharf herself?

Mr. OSBORNE. To be sure.

Mr. LAYTON. Has not the Pacific coast the right to be defended the same as the Atlantic coast?

Mr. OSBORNE. I think the question carries its own answer. It surely should.

Now I read from what Admiral Coontz says here in reply to Mr. KELLEY. He says one particular reason is that when you get outside of San Pedro you can dive in deep water inside of 20 or 30 minutes, whereas at the other ports it would be two or three hours before they would get on proper grounds.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing pages 323 and 324 of the hearing, and I will take no further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extract from the hearing referred to is as follows:

SAN PEDRO SUBMARINE BASE.

Mr. KELLEY. We have no submarine base at San Pedro, have we?
Captain DAY. Yes, sir.
Mr. KELLEY. But it is one we do not own?
Captain DAY. Yes.
Admiral COONTZ. It is a free base.
Secretary DENBY. Did we do much building there?
Captain DAY. No; it is an adaptation of what was there on the pier; they had a great big freight shed and a big two-story building on the end of the pier.
Secretary DENBY. And it did not cost very much to convert it?
Captain DAY. Not much.
Secretary DENBY. But we do not own it?
Captain DAY. No, sir.
Mr. KELLEY. How much have you spent at San Pedro, Mr. Reed?
Mr. REED. $190,000 for improvements.
Mr. KELLEY. How did we get in there?
Admiral COONTZ. We got in there unquestionably during the war.
Mr. KELLEY. It is your intention to keep that up this coming year?
Admiral COONTZ. Yes, sir.
Mr. KELLEY. Why do you not go down to the other place where you have shops?
Admiral COONTZ. The one particular reason is that when you get outside of San Pedro you can dive into deep water inside of 20 or 30 minutes, while at San Diego you know the number of miles you have to go to get out to deep water, so that San Pedro means a great saving in time and everything else. It has been gone into by a number of boards and was gone into by the House and Senate committees a year ago, and they unanimously reported in favor of keeping San Pedro.
Mr. KELLEY. Have you an option on the land?
Admiral COONTZ. We either have an option on the land or they are offering a large amount of land for $1.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it a steep and rocky shore there?

Admiral COONTZ. A part of it is on the beach level and the rest is probably as high as this room, and then there is a level place.

Mr. KELLEY. You will have to grade it?

Admiral COONTZ. No, sir; we will not have to do any grading that I know of.

Mr. KELLEY. There is no harbor there?

Admiral COONTZ. You are inside of the breakwater.

Mr. KELLEY. But it is an artificial harbor?

Admiral COONTZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. I remember somebody's report to the effect that in case of war we would have to move away from there.

Admiral COONTZ. That might be said of New York City—the same thing.

Mr. KELLEY. Well, New York City is pretty well fortified, is it not?

Admiral COONTZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. Do you intend to fortify this place?

Admiral COONTZ. I imagine the War Department does in time.

Mr. KELLEY. You are right out in the open there, and there is no protection for these little boats at all.

Captain DAY. We would not want anything better than to have somebody come in there and try to shoot us up.

Mr. KELLEY. I am only quoting what I remember of a naval officer's report.

Admiral COONTZ. It was considered a satisfactory naval station by the committees of the Senate and the House who went there last year.

Mr. KELLEY. Who was at the head of the board that made that first report?

Admiral COONTZ. The first report was the report of Admiral Helm.

Mr. KELLEY. The Helm report says that you can not stay there in time of war; that you would have to move out and go down to the other place.

Admiral COONTZ. I would not dispute that without looking at the book.

Secretary DENBY. Do you recall it, Commander Hill?

Commander HILL. I do recall it, because I was with Admiral Helm at the time, and the Helm report on San Pedro mentions it as being the best available site for a submarine base.

Mr. KELLEY. In peace time?

Commander HILL. No; at any time.

Mr. KELLEY. It specifically states in just as plain English as can be written that in time of war you would have to move away from San Pedro and go to the other place.

Secretary DENBY. That might refer to the outer harbor.

Commander HILL. Only two battleships can lie behind the breakwater, but the submarine base is at the extreme inner end of the artificial harbor, and I do not know of any place that will ever be smoother in time of storm than that place.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the maintenance of Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, $8,993,577; and the money herein specifically appropriated for the maintenance of the Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with the existing law as maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps; and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Total, Marine Corps, exclusive of public works, $24,983,522.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not take any time during the general debate on this naval appropriation bill, and I shall be very brief now. I wish to say that I have no sympathy with this continued attack on those Members of this House who do not agree with the views of the subcommittee. Nor can I enthuse at all with this entire battle that has raged here the past week, which I think has been largely in the nature of a manufactured battle. I look upon it as a sham.

I suppose that in every Congress since we have had a Navy there has been a struggle over the building program. All Members who have been here any number of years know that the big fight on the naval bill every time has been over the number of battleships and cruisers—a four-ship program as against a two-ship program, or two new ships against no new ships. But this year, thanks to the results of the great disarmament conference, there was no necessity for a fight over the building program. Hence we have staged here for the benefit of certain persons and the gallery, apparently, and for the confusion of the country generally, a great fight about a difference of twenty thousand and odd men in the Navy.

Mr. VARE. Nineteen thousand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; 19,000 are the subject of all this fight, whereas our fights in previous years used to be over the construction of great ships, such as the U. S. S. Tennessee, which cost, I believe, $42,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the occasion for it all?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is it. What is the occasion? I have never been for a paper Army. I am not for a paper Navy. I am glad we went into the disarmament conference and limited the number of our ships; but I do hope that whatever ships we have will not be tin-can ships with not enough men on them. [Applause.]

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

The Secretary of the Navy may use interchangeably the unexpended balances on the date of the approval of this act under appropriations heretofore made on account of "Increase of the Navy," including any balance then remaining under the appropriation "Increase of the Navy, torpedo boat destroyers," for the prosecution of work on vessels under construction on such date the construction of which may be proceeded with under the terms of the treaty providing for the limitation of naval armament, concluded on February 6, 1922, published in Senate Document No. 126 of the present session; for the conversion into aircraft carriers, including their complete equipment of aircraft and aircraft accessories, in accordance with the terms of such treaty, 2 of the battle cruisers the construction of which had been heretofore commenced, when the conversion of such battle cruisers shall have been authorized; for the settlement of contracts on account of vessels already delivered to the Navy Department; for the completion of torpedoes under manufacture on April 8, 1922, not to exceed 400; and for the installation of fire-control instruments on the U. S. S. Maryland and on 12 destroyers heretofore constructed, and such balances shall not be available for any other purposes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 62, strike out the paragraph and insert:

"For the prosecution of work on vessels under construction on the date of the approval of this act the construction of which may be proceeded with under the terms of the treaty providing for the limitation of naval armament, concluded on February 6, 1922, published in Senate Document No. 126 of the present session; for the conversion into aircraft carriers, including their complete equipment of aircraft and aircraft accessories, in accordance with the terms of such treaty, 2 of the battle cruisers the construction of which had been heretofore commenced, when the conversion of such battle cruisers shall have been authorized; for the settlement of contracts on account of vessels already delivered to the Navy Department; for the completion of torpedoes under manufacture on April 8, 1922, not to exceed 400; and for the installation of fire-control instruments on the U. S. S. Maryland and on 12 destroyers heretofore constructed; in all, $46,250,000: Provided, That any unexpended balances on June 30, 1922, under appropriations heretofore made on account of 'Increase of the Navy,' including any balance then remaining under the appropriation 'Increase of the Navy, torpedo boat destroyers,' shall be covered into the Treasury."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. It seems to me it is legislation. We would like to have a little left for the Naval Affairs Committee if possible.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think I can satisfy the gentleman——

Mr. BUTLER. We would like to have a spoonful left. That is a part of the bill that I have just reported.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am in accord with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. But leave a little for us.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am simply seeking to have this bill make an appropriation instead of legislating to authorize appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman desire to appropriate in advance of legislation? There is no authority yet to convert these ships.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This paragraph in the bill makes available for the increase of the Navy $46,250,000. The Navy Department, through Admiral Taylor and Admiral McVay, Chief of Ordnance, advise us that under increase of the Navy they have unexpended balances amounting to $70,000,000 as of the date of the hearing; that of that amount they expected to spend such a sum as will reduce it by July 1 to $46,250,000. Now, this amendment contains the exact language of the section of the bill with the exception that instead of providing that unexpended balances shall be available for the increase of ships, the amount which the Navy Department says will be available, $46,250,000, is appropriated and the unexpended balances are covered into the Treasury.

Mr. McARTHUR. Is the gentleman willing to take the recommendation of the Navy Department in this matter?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am not willing to take it if it is desired to provide that the unexpended balances shall be available. I am opposed to that.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman take the recommendation of the Navy Department on anything?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; when I think they are right. But the Navy Department has not recommended this authorization. This is the work of the committee. Instead of legislating to provide that the unexpended balances shall be available for the next fiscal year, I am asking that we appropriate the amount that they say will be available, so that that amount of $46,250,000, and that amount alone, shall be available to be expended, and not an indefinite and uncertain amount represented by the unexpended balances.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is that the amount that the Navy Department estimates will be needed for the purposes included in this section?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; and the amount they say will be available. Now, I know that with that statement my friend from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] will accept it, because it is their statement that $46,250,000 will be available and will be the proper amount, and if I am willing to accept the recommendation of the department on this item surely the gentleman from Oregon is not going to oppose it.

Mr. McARTHUR. If the gentleman is willing to accept the figure recommended by the department, I will certainly accept it also.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. On what date will the unexpended balance be covered into the Treasury?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. July 1 of this year by my amendment. They say that on July 1 the sum of $46,250,000 will be available. Therefore why not appropriate that amount, $46,250,000, instead of providing that the unexpended balance shall be made available?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Might there not be outstanding accounts which have been drawn against the unexpended balance which could not be paid if you cover the unexpended balance into the Treasury?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. To pay any obligations the $46,250,000 would be available. This is only one-third of the amount to be finally spent under this item. They can contract for additional sums and pay out of subsequent appropriations. I am satisfied the Navy Department will be entirely willing to have direct appropriations made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the proposed amendment go further than the authorization carried in the bill, in this, that the gentleman provides for building two aircraft cruisers?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My amendment is taken from the printed bill—the exact language.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the bill there is an authorization to use this fund when the building of the cruisers has been authorized, and as I heard the gentleman's amendment there was an authorization for the building.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My amendment is taken from the printed bill. I took the bill as printed and simply provide the appropriation instead of the authority to use unexpended balances.

Mr. BUTLER. It is taken from the legislative bill on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman's amendment and the provision in the bill both accomplish the same thing in a different way?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It does.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides for using the balances, and the gentleman's amendment states the amount and makes the appropriation of those balances.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The same thing is accomplished. The only thing is, I believe, we ought to put this in the bill, so that when we get through the people can know what we have appropriated without asking the Secretary of the Treasury as to the total of the unexpended balances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman from South Carolina have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman—it is not his purpose to make the amount of the appropriation bill larger than it is now, but does not the gentleman think it is going to be big enough, anyhow?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want the bill to show exactly what the committee appropriates. I want the bill to speak the truth and let the people know what is appropriated. There is no man in this House who will not say that that is correct. The Secretary of the Treasury at the beginning of the session urged Congress to stop legislation appropriating unexpended balances because it makes it more difficult to keep accounts in the Treasury.

It is only to accomplish the same purpose by making plain the amount appropriated by the bill, so that any man can take up the bill and tell you how much is appropriated, instead of having to communicate with the Secretary of the Treasury to find out what the unexpended balance is. Reading the bill, no man can tell what is appropriated. By my amendment he will know what is appropriated.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My attention was diverted for the moment and I did not clearly catch the reading of the gentleman's amendment. If I understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman, he proposes to deal candidly with the American people and tell them what is appropriated.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I had no other purpose. The $46,250,000 is made available, and I see no objection to saying so and letting the people know that appropriation is in the bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Is not the unexpended balance available for contracts between now and June 30?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; but of the $70,000,000 their contracts are such that they will not use more than twenty or twenty-five millions. That is the statement of the department.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. They might go on and obligate all that and then use this.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania reserved a point of order against this amendment, and I think we ought to have it disposed of first. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama calls for the regular order. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania make the point of order?

Mr. BUTLER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. In this amendment it is provided for the construction of vessels, and under the law of the House as found in the rules that belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The gentleman's amendment is taken bodily from the bill now on the calendar reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I have not anything further to say. It is for the conversion into aircraft carriers, including the complete equipment of aircraft carriers, and that can not be appropriated for in this bill. It may not be subject to a point of order; I do not know.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am opposed to the proposition, but I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is subject to a point of order. The only change between the amendment and the original provision of the bill lies in the fact that the original provision of the bill makes the appropriation of an indefinite unexpended balance in the Treasury, and the amendment makes the appropriation specific in amount. The Chair thinks that the objection is not well taken, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is the last paragraph of any importance in the bill. If it would not be imposing on the House in any way I would like to have 10 or 15 minutes to explain this particular section and to make a few general observations before the committee rises.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan have 15 minutes.

Mr. McARTHUR. Reserving the right to object, which I shall not do, I want to inquire if the gentleman is going to explain the paragraph or make a political speech?

Mr. KING. What is the difference?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am sure the gentleman does not ask me that seriously.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, how much of the 15 minutes is the gentleman going to devote to the paragraph and how much to general observation?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the bulk of it will be on the paragraph. Of course, I have not actually allocated the time to each of the two purposes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman going to launch into a tirade and further impugn all those who opposed him in the bill?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If I have been oversevere with the gentleman, I beg the gentleman's pardon. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, after the Conference on the Limitation of Armament had concluded its labors, it became necessary to cancel contracts and stop work on a large number of ships that were under construction, and also to discontinue the manufacture of guns and other equipment which were intended to go on those ships. We had the department come before the committee and we ascertained that there was a balance as of March 1, 1922, in the construction funds of about $71,000,000 out of the appropriations that have heretofore been made on behalf of the program inaugurated in 1916. It was estimated that for the balance of the year, upon the ships of the Navy that were not to be discontinued but were to be finished, they would expend all of that except about $46,000,000, so that upon the 1st of July next there would be a balance available to go forward with the ships that are to be finished of about $46,000,000. The major part of that money was in the Bureau of Ordnance, being a surplus resulting from stopping work on the 16-inch guns which are not to be built. Therefore we put a provision in the bill making available for the coming year those funds for new construction, for continuing the work upon ships that are to be finished. Of course, that money under the law is a continuing appropriation. It does not need to be reappropriated because it has already been appropriated for any ships authorized in the 1916 building program, the language in the bill making it available for building for the coming year, not only for ordnance but for the building of the ships.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This fact occurred to me as I listened to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], that if we appropriate specifically the sum of $46,000,000, it may well be taken by the Navy Department as an expression of congressional opinion that we think that much ought to be expended, whereas if we carry the provision that is in the bill they probably will save some of it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman has more faith—yes; that is possible. What I am getting at is this: There is no difference, in fact, between the two propositions, but the amendment presented by Mr. BYRNES is unnecessary and if adopted might lead to the mischief suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The proposition presented by the committee provides for the use of the unexpended balance on the date of the approval of the act.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. It provides that no part of this shall be used for any other purpose.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. The proposition in the amendment is to make an appropriation which would be available July 1, and between the date of the approval of the act and July 1 any part of this money might be expended in addition to the $46,000,000 that is appropriated.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is true, and so it is highly desirable, unless we feel extremely prosperous this afternoon, that the amount of money for next year's building program be confined to the unexpended balances. That leaves the situation like this: All charges for cancellation of these contracts with shipbuilding interests, manufacturers of steel and armor plate, and so forth, will have to be settled under a separate bill, which will follow along in due course because of the cancellation of these contracts. In order to draw the line straight across and prevent a general mix-up of cancellation charges and new construction for the coming year we found it advisable to stop all payments at a certain date upon the canceled ships or upon the matériel which was to go upon those canceled ships, and if any payments are made out of the balance of $71,000,000 which is here put down when the cancellation matter goes through they will be reimbursed out of the cancellation fund, and then the chairman of the committee, Mr. MADDEN, will be able to present to the Congress exactly what the cancellation of contracts really has cost us. This keeps the new construction perfectly straight for the coming year. There is therefore no occasion for adopting the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. If I understand it, this is to provide that these balances that remain unexpended may be used?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Shall be.

Mr. BUTLER. May be used hereafter for such purposes as Congress may direct?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No. The balances are to be used for the construction of those ships which under the treaty may be completed, and any other ships which Congress may authorize to be completed. I know what the gentleman has in mind. The gentleman undoubtedly has in mind these provisions with reference to the airplane carriers.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No part of this money can be expended for the conversion of those two cruisers into airplane carriers until the gentleman's committee reports to the House a bill authorizing the conversion and Congress passes the law.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I read it upside down. I am taking the gentleman's statement.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This bill makes no authorization respecting the carriers but makes certain balances avoidable after authorization.

Mr. BUTLER. In other words, this is preparation in advance of what the Congress may do?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It simply makes available a sum which, if legislation is provided to support it, will be available for that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. I think this House ought to understand perhaps this money will never be used for that purpose; it may be.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. A great many people have lost sight of the fact that we are not through with this building program. A large number of ships are to be finished under the treaty. Many people seem to think that the entire 1916 building program is to be discontinued.

Mr. BUTLER. No; that is true.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If these two cruisers are converted into airplane carriers, and probably they should be, it will cost to complete the ships that are permissible under the treaty and the two cruisers converted into airplane carriers $150,133,000, just to build the ships which the conference has not touched at all. Now, if there is included in this bill a balance of $46,000,000, or such matter, to take care of new construction for next year that will leave to be appropriated hereafter, next year probably, to finish the 10 cruisers and these airplane carriers and other craft a supplemental sum of $104,000,000. That must be added to the naval bill next year, not as a conversion of funds which have been heretofore appropriated, but we must make a new appropriation out of the Treasury next year of $104,000,000 to complete the program.

Mr. BUTLER. Look here, my friend——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Wait a minute, let me finish this up.

Mr. BUTLER. But the gentleman is putting things into my head.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will my friend let me get this straightened out? Now, then, that brings us up to this very interesting proposition. We have had a Conference on the Limitation of Armament, and where do we stand financially as a result? I have received this afternoon a letter from the Secretary of the Navy—my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] is not the only person who is entitled to get mail—a letter which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, in answer to a letter which I wrote to him yesterday. The letter which I wrote is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1922.

Hon. EDWIN DENBY,
Secretary of the Navy.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On Saturday, the 15th instant, the House in Committee of the Whole accepted an amendment to the pending Navy Department and naval service appropriation bill providing for an enlisted force of 80,000 men and 6,000 apprentice seamen, instead of 65,000 enlisted men and 2,000 apprentice seamen, as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. To-day the bill was further amended to provide subsistence funds for the increased personnel.

Will you kindly supply me with information as to other increases in the bill to correspond with the enlisted force of 86,000 men? Kindly advise me particularly what additions will be needed to the pending bill under appropriations "Engineering," "Construction and repair of vessels," "Ordnance and ordnance stores," "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," and "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," and also under "Transportation and recruiting, Bureau of Navigation," and "Fuel and transportation."

I shall greatly appreciate it if this information can be supplied to me by the opening of Congress to-morrow, Wednesday, the 18th instant.

With kindest regards and best wishes, I am,

Very respectfully yours, P. H. KELLEY.

From the Secretary's letter it appears that in addition——

Mr. MCARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MCARTHUR. I think we would all like to hear the letter.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will read it after making this statement. That in addition to the amount added yesterday, as stated to the House by my good friend from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR], as amounting to $22,000,000 for food, pay, and clothing——

Mr. MCARTHUR. That is the information given for food, clothing, and wages.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Twenty-two million dollars. The gentleman has not later information as to any other sum? [Laughter.] I understood that there was some error. Has the gentleman some correction to make?

Mr. McARTHUR. I have nothing later.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In addition to that, other items have been increased to make the sum total of the increase due to the addition of the 19,000 men as follows: Pay and subsistence, which the gentleman from Oregon included yesterday, $22,000,000. Now, from the Secretary's letter, transportation and recruiting——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five additional minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think I had better have 10.

Mr. MADDEN. Ten minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Because this is information which I know that the House desires.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. These increases are for the navy yards, and I am sure gentlemen will want to hear how much the expedition is likely to net. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has been extended for 10 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Transportation and recruiting, increase of $1,850,000; engineering, $4,781,000; construction and repair, $4,241,000; ordnance and ordnance stores, $1,200,000; maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $600,000; fuel and transportation, $3,894,662; maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks, $1,250,000; or a total of $39,816,662, as estimated by the Navy Department as the additions made necessary by the increased personnel of 19,000 men.

Mr. McARTHUR. Is it not true that in the food, clothing, and wages of the men there is an unexpended balance of $4,000,000 that will not be taken out of the appropriation?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, no.

Mr. HICKS. Is it not a fact that my friend made a statement a few days ago that this represented an increase of $70,000,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not think I put it as high as that, but I would not be at all surprised if the gentleman's figures were nearer correct. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I made the statement that it would run to $60,000,000, and I stand by my statement.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] if he has had any figures from the Secretary of the Navy as to any of these items?

Mr. ROGERS. I have seen some figures.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Have you had any yourself?

Mr. ROGERS. I have seen the figures.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Are they more or less than these?

Mr. ROGERS. They are very much less. Is the gentleman going to read the letter from Secretary Denby to the House?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Indeed, I am.

Mr. ROGERS. Instead of starting in with figures that mislead the House, I suggest the gentleman read the Denby letter in full.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But the gentleman from Massachusetts can not get away from my question so easily. He has been in consultation with the Navy Department, lo, these many days.

Mr. ROGERS. Is that a disgrace?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; indeed. I do not find any fault with it. I am only looking for light on account of it.

Mr. ROGERS. Very well. The gentleman has mentioned it several times.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I understand in a roundabout way—I do not vouch for the truth of it—that figures have been supplied to the gentleman indicating how much these increases are to be, and I ask my friend now how much were the sums given him?

Mr. ROGERS. I have repeatedly had those figures furnished me at my request by department officials. Every one of them is in the Denby letter, I suspect, and I ask the gentleman to read that letter.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman refuse to put into my hands a statement of the figures furnished him by the Navy Department as to these various items?

Mr. ROGERS. I am perfectly willing to tell the gentleman and the House the facts about this thing. I have seen a copy of the letter that the Secretary of the Navy sent to Mr. KELLEY, and I ask that the gentleman read the letter. [Applause.]

[Cries of "Read it!"]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I know how to read it. Let us come down to brass tacks. The gentleman from Massachusetts has undoubtedly in his possession figures furnished him before to-day for these supplemental appropriations, and I ask him now to present them before these are read. Will the gentleman do it in my time?

Mr. ROGERS. How many times must I say to the gentleman that the figures I have from the Navy Department are in the Denby letter?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Let us see. I do not wish to be put in the attitude, of course, of questioning the word of my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think he does.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But I do still say that if the gentleman from Massachusetts has had prepared for him before to-day, before last night, before the receipt of my letter by the Secretary of the Navy—if he has any figures before the receipt of that letter as to what these items ought to be, I think in justice he ought to present those figures to the House. [Applause.] I ask the gentleman now again, in all kindness, has he in his possession any figures prepared by the Navy Department prior to last night as to what these supplemental estimates should be?

Mr. ROGERS. I have some figures that were prepared and are incorporated in that letter. Why this mystery?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Now, then, I will read the letter. But I call the attention of the House——

Mr. LONGWORTH. The time of the gentleman is running.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I know if I have not time enough to finish what I have to say the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] will ask to have my time extended.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Provided you read the letter within a reasonable time. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUPRÉ. Get the Clerk to read it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Now, then, it says:

Replying to your letter received about 10.30 yesterday evening—

So you see it was pretty late in the evening, later perhaps than the gentleman from Massachusetts had any communication. It is important to read it, because it discloses not an increase of $22,000,000 but $40,000,000, and no one can say whether those estimates will meet the situation or not. I assume that the figures have not been overstated at this stage of the proceedings. [Laughter.] [Cries of "Read it!"]

Gentlemen, this has come to be a great center of correspondence. [Laughter.] I read:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, April 19, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. KELLEY: Replying to your letter received about 10.30 yesterday evening, in which you state that the House, in Committee of the Whole, accepted an amendment to the pending Navy Department and naval service appropriation bill providing for an enlisted force of 80,000 men and 6,000 apprentice seamen, and on Tuesday accepted a further amendment providing subsistence funds for the increased personnel, and requesting that I supply you with information as to other increases in the bill to correspond with an enlisted force of 86,000 men, particularly what additions will be needed to the pending bill under appropriations "Engineering," "Construction and repair of vessels," "Ordnance and ordnance stores," "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," "Transportation and recruiting," "Fuel and transportation," the following is submitted:

The amendments already accepted by the House provide for the pay and subsistence of the personnel. The other expenses connected with personnel are clothing furnished upon first enlistment and recruiting and transportation. As there is a surplus of clothing now in stock in the Navy, no increase in the appropriation bill will be required for clothing. Under transportation and recruiting it is believed that the appropriation should be increased to the $6,000,000 submitted in the Budget.

While the above-referred-to increases in appropriations are the only ones involving personnel, the department is of the opinion that the appropriations recommended by the Committee on Appropriations for the maintenance of the matériel of the Navy are wholly inadequate to maintain its efficiency and to permit it to carry on its duties. This is true whether or not the ships in commission are those covered by the Appropriations Committee's distribution for 67,000 men or the department's proposed distribution for 86,000 men, as shown on page 5551 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday, April 14, 1922, there being practically no difference between the two lists.

It is believed that the additions under the subheads mentioned in your letter should be as follows for the maintenance of the efficiency of the matériel:

Bureau of Engineering, page 25, line 2, from $12,100,000 to $16,881,000, an increase of $4,781,000.

Bureau of Construction and Repair, page 27, line 20, from $14,200,000 to $18,441,000, an increase of $4,241,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed until he concludes the reading of the Denby letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed until he has concluded the reading of the letter.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I object to that, and ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have five minutes' additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is made that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection to that request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I read further:

Bureau of Ordnance, ordnance and ordnance stores, page 29, line 18, from $9,500,000 to $10,700,000, an increase of $1,200,000.
Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, maintenance, page 38, line 23, from $7,069,260 to $7,669,260, an increase of $600,000.
Fuel and transportation, page 39, line 24, from $16,000,000 to $19,894,662, an increase of $3,894,662.
Bureau of Yards and Docks, maintenance, page 44, line 17, from $5,500,000 to $6,750,000, an increase of $1,250,000.

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN DENBY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. PATRICK H. KELLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington.

He did not foot up the amount, but I have done so. Taking the figures furnished by the department and used by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] yesterday, and not included in the letter signed by the Secretary as $22,000,000, together with these increases as I have given them, it makes $39,816,862 as the estimated increase due to the increase of the enlisted personnel from 67,000 to 86,000 men.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No!

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Who said "no"?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman anticipate that these will be the only estimates that will be offered on the bill?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, the gentleman has been here in Congress longer than I. I wish I could advise him that there would be no other or different estimates submitted.

Mr. MONDELL. I am rather pleased in a way with these estimates. My estimate was $40,000,000. This estimate is almost within $100,000 of my estimate.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is almost clairvoyancy. [Applause.]

Mr. MCARTHUR. Or a conspiracy. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan that I was one of those who said "No."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I shall be very much gratified to know why my very able friend from New York said "No."

Mr. MILLS. I said "No" because the Secretary of the Navy in his letter states very clearly that while the first part of his letter refers to expenditures connected with the increase of personnel, the estimates aggregating $19,000,000, more or less referred to in the latter part of his letter, have nothing whatsoever to do with the increase in the personnel.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then will the gentleman advise me why any increases were made at all?

Mr. MILLS. Well, they are for the maintenance of the matériel of the Navy. He says:

While the above-referred-to increases in appropriations are the only ones involving personnel, the department is of the opinion that the appropriations recommended by the Committee on Appropriations for the maintenance of the matériel of the Navy are wholly inadequate to maintain its efficiency and to permit it to carry on its duties. This is true whether or not the ships in commission are those covered by the Appropriations Committee's distribution for 67,000 men or the department's proposed distribution for 86,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, the gentleman from New York——

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman permit me to complete my statement?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My time is running. I have one or two things more that I want to say.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand from this letter that these statements are facts?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just a minute, gentlemen, including the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I thank the gentleman very much. The gentleman from New York says these increases are not due to the increased personnel, that the amounts stated in the letter are needed for the treaty Navy. When the department came before the committee did they ask for these amounts for the treaty Navy? Not at all; these sums are modest in comparison. Why, they asked $25,000,000 for fuel. We gave them $16,000,000, and now they want $19,000,000. What did they want the extra $6,000,000 for? If $19,000,000 is sufficient, why did they ask for $25,000,000? The same way all down the line.

I will tell you how we made these items. We took the appropriations for the current year and deducted the expenses incident to repairs and incident to fuel because of the ships that they said they did not need to keep in commission, based upon the actual expenses of repairs and fuel for the first three months of this quarter, simply taking out of the current appropriation the expenses of maintaining the ships which they themselves declared they did not need to keep in commission, and the balance is the amount carried in the bill. Gentlemen will say that the additional amounts are not intended for additional vessels to be kept in commission. That is the heart of this controversy and I do not intend to discuss that any further. This is what I want to call attention to in closing, and if I may have a couple of minutes to state it, then I will conclude and thank the Members of the House. While this has been a most heated debate, I thank you indeed for the kindly and courteous consideration which I have had, and when we get through with this, whatever way it goes, it will be all right. [Applause.]

If you put into this bill the $40,000,000 extra because of the 19,000 additional men, and if it turns out that we will have to pay $75,000,000 for canceling contracts, we will have spent on account of the Navy for the coming year $426,000,000, or $12,000,000 more than it is costing us the current year. Furthermore, if we keep the Navy up to 86,000 men and that same number is continued for 1924 and we go ahead and appropriate the money necessary to finish the ships that are on the ways and are to be completed under the treaty, it will cost us in 1924, $401,000,000, or nearly as much as for 1922. I ask what has become of the conference claims that burdens of armament were to be lifted? Gentlemen, the work of the conference is at stake. We are on the point of turning it into an empty, meaningless performance. Let us not dash the cup from the lips of the world just as it is about to be sipped. [Applause, Members rising.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriation made for the naval service shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, including personal services, except as herein expressly authorized.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope the members of the committee will bear with me just a few minutes. This is the first time I have attempted to talk on the amendment which I offered to the House. I first offered the amendment to increase the personnel of the Navy in the Committee on Appropriations a week ago Saturday, proposing the increase from 67,000 men to 86,000 men.

The naval appropriation bill has been under consideration for 10 days, and during that time we have listened to practically the same arguments which were used in the Appropriations Committee when the bill was there considered.

From the standpoint of expert naval information we have in favor of a small and inefficient Navy the chairman of the appropriations subcommittee [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan] with his expert knowledge, the members of his subcommittee, and the distinguished leader of the House, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], whose knowledge of naval matters is not expert.

On the other hand, we have in favor of an adequate Navy, to meet our treaty obligations, the expert testimony of the former chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], as well as many members of the Appropriations and Naval Affairs Committees.

In addition, the amendment providing for a personnel of 86,000 men, which was adopted last Saturday by the Committee of the Whole House by a vote of 177 to 130, has the support of the board of naval experts, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, Secretary of the Navy Denby, Secretary of State Hughes, and President Harding himself.

I do not claim to have any expert knowledge of the Navy. Therefore, with the preponderance of testimony in favor of the larger Navy, I am unwilling to take the responsibility of interfering with the administrative officers of the Government carrying on the great work of the Navy in accordance with our treaty obligations.

It might be well for Members of the House to consider that while every great nation of the world is recognizing the power of this Goverment through President Harding, Members of Congress, of his own party, are taking issue with him, thereby attempting to undermine his policies.

I have heard criticism of the President for his strong and unqualified stand for an adequate Navy. The Nation would feel much better toward our party if the President would take a similar stand on other issues and if we would listen to his advice by adopting such measures as he suggests and urges.

Members of Congress who do not feel they should follow the President are only destroying their own congressional usefulness; for, mark you, the President is much stronger in the eyes of the people than is Congress. Congress would do well to keep up with the President. In this I could say much about congressional leadership.

It was interesting yesterday, during debate, to notice the chagrin and disappointment of the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan], as well as that of the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL], because of the failure of the "conference Navy" Members of the House to offer a series of amendments which would have increased the amount of money carried in the bill. They would have condemned us if such amendments had been introduced, and they condemned us because they were not. In other words, Members who failed to carry out the frenzied desires of the gentleman from Wyoming would have been damned if they did, and were damned when they did not.

It is to be regretted that the distinguished Republican leader would so forget his high and exalted position that he would use it for the purpose of ridiculing and belittling the naval officers of the country. I had hoped that having been fairly beaten last Saturday he would have shown bigness of mind and cooperated with Members of the House in completing the bill in accordance with the expressed wish of the Committee of the Whole, when out of 307 Members present a majority of 47 declared for an adequate Navy. I had hoped that the Republican leader would have shown broader vision and have upheld the dignity of his leadership.

I appeal to Members of the House to stand by the vote of the Committee of the Whole fixing the personnel at 86,000, upholding the President and thereby maintaining our foremost position among the nations of the world.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report of a meeting of the shop trades committee of the navy yard at New York.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is the one I had yesterday.

Mr. HOGAN. Yes; but I would like to have it inserted in the RECORD in full.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

NAVY YARD,
New York, April 5, 1922.

At a meeting of the shop trades committee at 11 a. m. this date with the commandant the discussion ensued as follows:

I. PRELIMINARY REMARKS BY THE COMMANDANT.

(a) Attention was called to the apparent falling off in the attendance of committeemen and supervisors at the regular monthly meetings. The mutual advantage accruing from this monthly "get together" are considered to be of great value, and it is urged that every effort be made by all concerned to be present at future monthly meetings.

(b) Announcement was made of the recent death of Mr. John Jongberg, member of the yard executive committee, and expressions of sympathy and condolence were voiced.

(c) Where vacancies exist in the regularly constituted shop trade committees steps should be taken toward the election or appointment of new members.

(d) The commandant is pleased to inform the employees that on the occasion of his recent visit to the Navy Department he noticed a marked improvement in the attitude of the department with reference to the navy yard, New York. There is an open recognition of the good work we are doing and the results that we are obtaining, and the several bureaus seem anxious to cooperate with us to the fullest possible extent in the matter of procurement of additional work for the yard.

(e) All yards have recently been called upon by the Navy Department to submit actual costs for the performance of certain specific items of work. In comparing costs submitted by this yard with those submitted by other yards for identical work it would appear that our labor charges are running too high. In other words, that our man-hours on a job are too long. This is something that can be corrected by the individual worker by increasing his output. It is not influenced by overhead or material costs.

(f) We are in receipt of a circular letter written by the department to all navy yards and stations, setting forth the financial status and accomplishments of the several yards. It is a pleasure to report that the standing of this yard is extremely satisfactory, and that in this instance we have nothing to explain or account for. A brief of the letter in question will shortly be published for the information of all employees.

(g) While we have in the past been subject to unfavorable criticism for our high overhead rates, conditions have now resolved themselves so that we are, comparatively speaking, on "easy street," and if your past cooperation in this matter is continued we have nothing to fear for the remainder of this fiscal year. Everything indicates that the navy yards at Boston, Norfolk, and Philadelphia are confronted with the necessity of applying at once a very high overhead rate in an attempt to square their books.

(h) The commandant desires to reaffirm his interest and cooperation in the splendid work that is being done by the yard committees in the matter of arousing public interest not only in the amount of work to be assigned to this yard but also in the maintenance of an adequate and efficient Navy as a whole. To this end invitations have been extended and accepted by the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce to visit the yard in order to familiarize themselves with existing conditions; moving pictures are to be taken, and the general campaign and increased publicity are gaining headway each day.

(i) An appropriation by Congress of $250,000,000 for the Navy will not suffice; at least $350,000,000 are required if the Navy is to be maintained in a high state of efficiency and readiness for service; the fight will be staged on the floor of Congress and the result thereof will determine in a positive manner whether the Navy as a whole is to be maintained. We must not rest content or cease our efforts on any less substantial assurance that the yard is to be kept open than that which will be embodied in an adequate appropriation for the entire Navy by Congress.

II. REMARKS BY THE MANAGER.

(a) It is a pleasure to announce that increased allotments from all bureaus for the month of April will permit of recalling to active service a large number of men now out on leave without pay status. The public works officer has reported that he has considerable work for laborers, wharfbuilders, masons, hod carriers, and painters, and that the responses to call are not sufficient to fill up numbers required. It is urged that if any employee knows men of these ratings now out of work that they bring this opportunity of securing employment to their attention.

(b) The chairman of the executive committee of the yard employees reported a balance of approximately $300 from contributions recently received for publicity purposes. It was suggested that the accounts, receipts, and expenses be audited and that a statement be prepared for publication so that all who have contributed may know where the money already has been spent.

(c) After an examination of existing civil-service regulations, it has been possible to issue instructions to all divisions, with a view to securing uniformity of procedure, to the effect that hereafter the conduct mark for all men on last call, i. e., discharged for missing six musters, would be 59 per cent. This is the highest mark that can be given in view of the civil-service requirements that such employees shall be regarded as ineligible for reemployment for a period of one year.

(d) Attention was called to the apparent epidemic of "spring fever" now prevalent in the yard, and an appeal was made to resist the inclination to sit down and rest or to congregate on street corners for purposes of discussion. Inactivity of this sort increases our labor costs, handicaps us in comparison with other yards, creates a bad impression, and in extreme cases leaves no alternative but disciplinary action. The manager disclaimed any intent or purpose of inaugurating a driving campaign and desired to leave the matter in the hands of the individual employees, feeling sure that they would respond to an appeal for an honest effort upon their part. In matters of this kind we must all work together.

(e) Announcement was made of the procurement of additional outside work from the Customs Service—the hauling out and repair of five of their motor boats; also the possibility of obtaining an award from the War Department for the construction of an oil and water barge. An effort will be made to obtain authority to submit bids for the reconditioning of the Agamemnon and the Mount Vernon. Negotiations are under way to have the manufacture and procurement of all Government paints, used by the several departments in this neighborhood, assigned to the navy yard, New York.

(f) Information at hand indicates that the city of Boston has staged a monster demonstration, parade, and mass meeting, to be held on the 8th instant, with a view to arousing public sentiment favorable to the local yard and the Navy. It is highly desirable that similar interest be created in this locality. It is necessary to immediately arouse local interest here in both Brooklyn and New York. Briefly, the proposition resolves itself into the question whether the Navy as a whole is to be maintained in accordance with the 5–5–3 ratio. Information at hand leads us to believe this matter will be fought out on the floor of the lower House within the next few weeks if Congress provides an appropriation equal to the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Navy, there need be no worry on our part with reference to the continued operation of the New York yard. If, on the other hand, the annual appropriation is cut below the estimates of the Navy Department, then it must follow that several of the navy yards will have to be closed. They may be left technically open, but the amount of work that they will be called upon to do will be performed by a skeletonized organization.

III. GENERAL DISCUSSION.

A general discussion followed, touching upon the several details of the publicity campaign that is now being waged in behalf of the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Strong speeches were made by William T. Probert, Sam Wright, John Flemming, Joseph McDonough, and others.

The necessity for an aroused active interest and participation in this campaign upon the part of every employee was strongly emphasized; and it was urged that every man having the interest of the yard at heart seek opportunity to inform his friends in civil life of the conditions actually existing to-day and the threatening conditions that confront us in the immediate future.

In June of 1921 there were 10,000 men employed in the yard; at the present time the number approximates 3,500. With a small appropriation for the next fiscal year it is inevitable that there be a further reduction in the yard force on July 1, 1922.

We must not be discouraged in the seeming indifference of those in civil life. They have their own problems and worries, but it is possible to arouse their interest, and there is every reason to believe that once this interest is aroused and the voice of the people is heard in Washington, an adequate appropriation will be provided.

Assuredly we are not content to let this matter go by default. The people in Boston, Philadelphia, and Norfolk are awakening to the conditions, and the people of Greater New York will be no less responsive once the matter is forcibly brought to their attention.

Appeal is made for a united, a continuing, and an enthusiastic campaign upon the part of every individual attached to or in any way identified with the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

C. T. VOGELGESANG,
Captain United States Navy.
Commandant Navy Yard, New York.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. KELLEY of Michigan was then agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11228, making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I ask for a separate vote on the two amendments relating to the personnel, and if there is no objection, inasmuch as they go together, it might be well to vote on the two amendments together.

Mr. MCARTHUR. There are three amendments, the Vare amendment, the Swing amendment, and my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. One in relation to the 86,000, one to the sum of money involved because of the change, and the other as to provisions.

The SPEAKER. If there is no other demand for a separate vote, the Chair will put the other amendments in gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all three amendments be voted on together.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the three amendments specified be voted on together. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I do not recall that we ever voted on more than one amendment at a time. As I understand, these amendments all stand or fall together. Would it not be satisfactory to have a vote on one amendment and the others abide by it?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In this way we can do it with one roll call, and in the other way it will take three roll calls.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. You can do it in this way with one.

Mr. ROGERS. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to combining the two personnel amendments, the McArthur amendment and the Vare amendment, but I think the provision amendment should be separated.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request and ask that the two personnel amendments be voted on together, and that they be voted on first.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the two personnel amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MCARTHUR: Page 32, line 10, strike out the figures "$3,772,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$5,981,900."

Page 32, line 15, strike out the figures "$51,832,351" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$62,108,534."

Page 32, line 16, strike out the figures "$520,520" and insert in lieu thereof "$858,000"; page 32, line 19, strike out the figures "$422,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,207,200"; page 32, line 20, strike out the figures "$366,720" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$447,580"; page 32, line 25, strike out the figures "$93,814,016" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$107,503,239."

Amendment by Mr. VARE: Page 34, line 7, strike out the figures "2,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "6,000," and on page 34, line 8, strike out the figures "67,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "86,000," making the paragraph read as follows:

"Immediately upon the approval of this act the Secretary of the Navy shall begin to reduce the enlisted strength of the Navy by furlough without pay (and no refunds shall be required of men so furloughed), discharge, or otherwise, under such regulations as he may prescribe, without regard to the provisions of existing law governing discharges, so that the average number of enlisted men, including 6,000 apprentice seamen, shall not exceed 86,000 during the fiscal year 1923."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 222, nays 149, answered "present" 2, not voting 56, as follows:

YEAS—222.

Ackerman	Appleby	Barbour	Bixler
Andrew, Mass.	Aswell	Beedy	Blakeney
Ansorge	Bacharach	Benham	Bland, Ind.
Bland, Va.	Freeman	Logan	Ricketts
Bond	Frothingham	Longworth	Riordan
Bowers	Fuller	Luce	Robertson
Brennan	Gallivan	Luhring	Rodenberg
Briggs	Gernerd	McArthur	Rogers
Brooks, Pa.	Gilbert	McCormick	Rose
Bulwinkle	Glynn	McDuffie	Rossdale
Burdick	Goldsborough	McKenzie	Sanders, N. Y.
Burke	Goodykoontz	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sandlin
Burroughs	Graham, Ill.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Scott, Mich.
Butler	Greene, Mass.	McPherson	Scott, Tenn.
Cable	Greene, Vt.	Magee	Shreve
Campbell, Pa.	Griest	Martin	Sinnott
Carew	Griffin	Mead	Smith, Mich.
Chalmers	Hadley	Miller	Smithwick
Chandler, N. Y.	Harrison	Mills	Snell
Chindblom	Hawes	Montague	Stephens
Clarke, N. Y.	Hawley	Montoya	Stiness
Classon	Hayden	Moore, Ill.	Strong, Pa.
Codd	Hays	Moore, Ohio	Sullivan
Cole, Ohio	Hickey	Moores, Ind.	Summers, Wash.
Colton	Hicks	Morgan	Swing
Connell	Hill	Morin	Tague
Connolly, Pa.	Himes	Mott	Taylor, N. J.
Cooper, Ohio	Hogan	Mudd	Temple
Coughlin	Hooker	Nelson, Me.	Ten Eyck
Crago	Hukriede	Newton, Minn.	Thomas
Crisp	Humphreys	Newton, Mo.	Thompson
Crowther	Husted	Nolan	Tilson
Cullen	Hutchinson	Norton	Tinkham
Curry	Johnson, Ky.	O'Connor	Treadway
Dallinger	Johnson, Wash.	Olpp	Underhill
Darrow	Jones, Pa.	Osborne	Vaile
Deal	Kahn	Overstreet	Vare
Drane	Kearns	Padgett	Vestal
Dunn	Kendall	Paige	Vinson
Dupré	Kennedy	Park, Ga.	Volk
Dyer	Kiess	Parker, N. J.	Walsh
Edmonds	Kindred	Parker, N. Y.	Ward, N. Y.
Elliott	Kirkpatrick	Patterson, Mo.	Wason
Ellis	Kissel	Patterson, N. J.	Watson
Fairfield	Kline, N. Y.	Perkins	Weaver
Faust	Kline, Pa.	Perlman	Webster
Favrot	Knutson	Petersen	Wheeler
Fenn	Kreider	Porter	White, Me.
Fess	Langley	Pringey	Wilson
Fish	Lankford	Purnell	Winslow
Fisher	Layton	Radcliffe	Wurzbach
Fitzgerald	Lazaro	Raker	Wyant
Focht	Lea, Calif.	Ransley	Yates
Fordney	Lee, N. Y.	Reavis	Zihlman
Foster	Lineberger	Reber
Free	Linthicum	Reed, N. Y.

NAYS—149.

Almon	Dickinson	Larsen, Ga.	Rosenbloom
Anderson	Dominick	Larson, Minn.	Rouse
Andrews, Nebr.	Dowell	Lawrence	Rucker
Anthony	Echols	Leatherwood	Sanders, Tex.
Arentz	Evans	Lee, Ga.	Shaw
Atkeson	Frear	Little	Sinclair
Bankhead	French	London	Sisson
Barkley	Fulmer	Lowrey	Slemp
Beck	Funk	Lyon	Speaks
Begg	Gahn	McClintic	Sproul
Bell	Garner	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stafford
Bird	Garrett, Tenn.	McSwain	Steagall
Black	Garrett, Tex.	MacGregor	Stedman
Boies	Gensman	Madden	Steenerson
Bowling	Green, Iowa	Mann	Stoll
Box	Hardy, Colo.	Mansfield	Strong, Kans.
Brooks, Ill.	Hardy, Tex.	Mapes	Sumners, Tex.
Browne, Wis.	Haugen	Michener	Swank
Burtness	Herrick	Millspaugh	Taylor, Ark.
Burton	Hersey	Mondell	Tillman
Byrnes, S. C.	Hoch	Moore, Va.	Timberlake
Byrns, Tenn.	Huddleston	Murphy	Tincher.
Campbell, Kans.	Hull	Nelson, A. P.	Towner
Cannon	Jacoway	Nelson, J. M.	Tucker
Carter	James	Ogden	Upshaw
Christopherson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oldfield	Voigt
Clague	Jones, Tex.	Oliver	Volstead
Clouse	Keller	Parks, Ark.	White, Kans.
Cockran	Kelley, Mich.	Quin	Williamson
Cole, Iowa	Ketcham	Ramseyer	Wingo
Collier	Kincheloe	Rankin	Wise
Collins	King	Rayburn	Wood, Ind.
Connally, Tex.	Kinkaid	Reece	Woodruff
Cooper, Wis.	Kleczka	Reed, W. Va.	Woods, Va.
Cramton	Knight	Rhodes	Wright
Davis, Minn.	Kopp	Riddick
Davis, Tenn.	Kraus	Roach
Denison	Lanham	Robsion

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Jeffers, Ala.	Stevenson

NOT VOTING—56.

Blanton	Dunbar	Lampert	Sears
Brand	Fairchild	Lehlbach	Shelton
Britten	Fields	McFadden	Siegel
Brown, Tenn.	Gorman	Maloney	Smith, Idaho
Buchanan	Gould	Merritt	Snyder
Cantrill	Graham, Pa.	Michaelson	Sweet
Chandler, Okla.	Hammer	O'Brien	Taylor, Colo.
Clark, Fla.	Hudspeth	Pou	Taylor, Tenn.
Copley	Ireland	Rainey, Ala.	Tyson
Dale	Jefferis, Nebr.	Rainey, Ill.	Walters
Dempsey	Johnson, Miss.	Ryan	Ward, N. C.
Doughton	Kelly, Pa.	Sabath	Williams
Drewry	Kitchin	Sanders, Ind.	Woodyard
Driver	Kunz	Schall	Young

So the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:
Until further notice:
Mr. McFadden (for) with Mr. Stevenson (against).
Mr. Fairchild (for) with Mr. Smith of Idaho (against).
Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. Brand (against).
Mr. Lehlbach (for) with Mr. Jeffers of Alabama (against).
Mr. Sanders of Indiana (for) with Mr. Driver (against).
Mr. O'Brien (for) with Mr. Lampert (against).
Mr. Dempsey (for) with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi (against).
Mr. Drewry (for) with Mr. Taylor of Tennessee (against).
Mr. Gorman (for) with Mr. Rainey of Alabama (against).
Mr. Merritt (for) with Mr. Sabath (against).
Mr. Sears (for) with Mr. Young (against).
Mr. Snyder (for) with Mr. Kitchin (against).
Mr. Maloney (for) with Mr. Michaelson (against).
Mr. Dunbar (for) with Mr. Hammer (against).
Mr. Brown of Tennessee (for) with Mr. Ward of North Carolina (against).
Mr. Walters (for) with Mr. Doughton (against).
Mr. Gould (for) with Mr. Hudspeth (against).
Mr. Siegel (for) with Mr. Blanton (against).
Mr. Ireland (for) with Mr. Tyson (against).
General pairs:
Mr. Chandler of Oklahoma with Mr. Buchanan.
Mr. Woodyard with Mr. Fields.
Mr. Jefferis of Nebraska with Mr. Kunz.
Mr. Ryan with Mr. Rainey of Illinois.
Mr. Williams with Mr. Clark of Florida.
Mr. Shelton with Mr. Pou.
Mr. Britten with Mr. Cantrill.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] was not here, and I promised to pair with him in case he was not here, and as he would have voted "aye," I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and ask to be recorded as "present."

The name of Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama was called, and he answered "present."

The result was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the other amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 15, strike out the figures "$15,586,862" and insert in lieu thereof "$19,724,928."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. A sufficient number have arisen and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 279, nays 78, answered "present" 3, not voting 69, as follows:

[Roll No. 112.]

YEAS—279.

Ackerman	Chindblom	Fisher	Hoch
Anderson	Christopherson	Fitzgerald	Hogan
Andrew, Mass.	Clarke, N. Y.	Focht	Hooker
Ansorge	Classon	Fordney	Hukriede
Appleby	Codd	Foster	Hull
Aswell	Cole, Ohio	Frear	Humphreys
Atkeson	Collier	Free	Husted
Bacharach	Colton	Freeman	Hutchinson
Barbour	Connally, Tex.	Frothingham	Johnson, Ky.
Beedy	Connell	Fuller	Johnson, S. Dak.
Benham	Connolly, Pa.	Funk	Johnson, Wash.
Bixler	Cooper, Ohio	Gallivan	Jones, Pa.
Black	Coughlin	Gensman	Kahn
Blakeney	Crago	Gernerd	Kearns
Bland, Ind.	Crisp	Gilbert	Kelley, Mich.
Bland, Va.	Crowther	Glynn	Kendall
Boies	Cullen	Goldsborough	Kennedy
Bond	Curry	Goodykoontz	Ketcham
Bowers	Dallinger	Graham, Ill.	Kiess
Brennan	Darrow	Green, Iowa	Kindred
Briggs	Deal	Greene, Mass.	King
Brooks, Ill.	Denison	Greene, Vt.	Kinkaid
Brooks, Pa.	Dickinson	Griest	Kirkpatrick
Bulwinkle.	Dowell	Griffin	Kissel
Burdick	Drane	Hadley	Kleczka
Burke	Dunn	Hardy, Colo.	Kline, N. Y.
Burroughs	Dyer	Harrison	Kline, Pa.
Burtness	Echols	Haugen	Knutson
Butler	Edmonds	Hawes	Kreider
Byrns, Tenn.	Elliott	Hawley	Langley
Cable	Ellis	Hayden	Lankford
Campbell, Kans.	Fairfield	Hays	Larson, Minn.
Campbell, Pa.	Faust	Hersey	Lawrence
Cannon	Favrot	Hickey	Layton
Carew	Fenn	Hicks	Lazaro
Chalmers	Fess	Hill	Lea, Calif.
Chandler, N. Y.	Fish	Himes	Leatherwood
Lee, Ga.	Newton, Minn.	Riordan	Temple
Lee, N. Y.	Newton, Mo.	Roach	Ten Eyck
Lineberger	Nolan	Robertson	Thomas
Linthicum	Norton	Robsion	Thompson
Logan	O'Connor	Rodenberg	Tilson
Longworth	Ogden	Rogers	Timberlake
Luce	Olpp	Rose	Tincher
McArthur	Osborne	Rosenbloom	Tinkham
McCormick	Overstreet	Rossdale	Towner
McDuffie	Padgett	Sanders, N. Y.	Treadway
McKenzie	Paige	Sandlin	Underhill
McLaughlin, Nebr.	Park, Ga.	Scott, Mich.	Upshaw
McLaughlin, Pa.	Parker, N. J.	Scott, Tenn.	Vaile
McPherson	Parker, N. Y.	Shaw	Vare
Madden	Patterson, Mo.	Shreve	Vestal
Magee	Patterson, N. J.	Sinnott	Vinson
Martin	Perkins	Slemp	Volk
Mead	Perlman	Smith, Idaho	Walsh
Michener	Petersen	Smith, Mich.	Ward, N. Y.
Miller	Porter	Smithwick	Wason
Mills	Pringey	Snell	Watson
Mondell	Purnell	Speaks	Weaver
Montague	Radcliffe	Sproul	Webster
Montoya	Raker	Stephens	Wheeler
Moore, Ill.	Ramseyer	Stiness	White, Kans.
Moore, Ohio	Ransley	Stoll	White, Me.
Moores, Ind.	Reber	Strong, Pa.	Wilson
Morgan	Reece	Sullivan	Winslow
Morin	Reed, N. Y.	Summers, Wash.	Wurzbach
Mott	Reed, W. Va.	Swing	Wyant
Mudd	Rhodes	Tague	Yates
Murphy	Ricketts	Taylor, Ark.	Zihlman
Nelson, Me.	Riddick	Taylor, N. J.

NAYS—78.

Almon	Evans	Lowrey	Sisson
Andrews, Nebr.	French	Lyon	Stafford
Bankhead	Fulmer	McClintic	Steagall
Barkley	Gahn	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stedman
Beck	Garrett, Tenn.	McSwain	Stevenson
Begg	Garrett, Tex.	MacGregor	Sumners, Tex.
Bell	Herrick	Mapes	Swank
Bird	Huddleston	Moore, Va.	Tillman
Bowling	Jacoway	Nelson, A. P.	Tucker
Box	James	Nelson, J. M.	Tyson
Browne, Wis.	Jones, Tex.	Oldfield	Voigt
Byrnes, S. C.	Keller	Oliver	Volstead
Carter	Kincheloe	Parks, Ark.	Wingo
Clague	Knight	Quin	Wise
Collins	Kopp	Rankin	Wood, Ind.
Cooper, Wis.	Kraus	Rayburn	Woodruff
Cramton	Lanham	Rouse	Woods, Va.
Davis, Minn.	Larsen, Ga.	Rucker	Wright
Davis, Tenn.	Little	Sanders, Tex.
Dominick	London	Sinclair

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Cockran	Jeffers, Ala.	Steenerson

NOT VOTING—69.

Anthony	Driver	Lampert	Schall
Arentz	Dunbar	Lehlbach	Sears
Blanton	Dupré	Luhring	Shelton
Brand	Fairchild	McFadden	Siegel
Britten	Fields	Maloney	Snyder
Brown, Tenn.	Garner	Mann	Strong, Kans.
Buchanan	Gorman	Mansfield	Sweet
Burton	Gould	Merritt	Taylor, Colo.
Cantrill	Graham, Pa.	Michaelson	Taylor, Tenn.
Chandler, Okla.	Hammer	Millspaugh	Walters
Clark, Fla.	Hardy, Tex.	O'Brien	Ward, N. C.
Clouse	Hudspeth	Pou	Williams
Cole, Iowa	Ireland	Rainey, Ala.	Williamson
Copley	Jefferis, Nebr.	Rainey, Ill.	Woodyard
Dale	Johnson, Miss.	Reavis	Young
Dempsey	Kelly, Pa.	Ryan
Doughton	Kitchin	Sabath
Drewry	Kunz	Sanders, Ind.

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:
Until further notice:
Mr. Maloney with Mr. Dupré.
Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania with Mr. Brand.
Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Jeffers of Alabama.
Mr. Sanders of Indiana with Mr. Driver.
Mr. Lampert with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi.
Mr. Taylor of Tennessee with Mr. Drewry.
Mr. Gorman with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.
Mr. Merritt with Mr. Sabath.
Mr. Young with Mr. Sears.
Mr. Snyder with Mr. Kitchin.
Mr. Dunbar with Mr. Hammer.
Mr. Brown of Tennessee with Mr. Ward of North Carolina.
Mr. Walters with Mr. Doughton.
Mr. Gould with Mr. Hudspeth.
Mr. Siegel with Mr. Blanton.
Mr. Ireland with Mr. Buchanan.
Mr. Woodyard with Mr. Fields.
Mr. Jefferis of Nebraska with Mr. Kunz.
Mr. Ryan with Mr. Rainey of Illinois.
Mr. Williams with Mr. Clark of Florida.
Mr. Shelton with Mr. Pou.
Mr. McFadden with Mr. Cantrill.
Mr. Millspaugh with Mr. Garner.

Mr. Chandler of Oklahoma with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.
Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Cockran.
Mr. Steenerson with Mr. Mansfield.
Mr. Luhring with Mr. Hardy of Texas.
Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote.
The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?
Mr. BUCHANAN. I was not.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
On motion of Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken on the bill may have the privilege of extending their remarks for five days.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:
Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend remarks in the RECORD, I wish to say that over and over again in this debate the gentleman from Michigan has declared that the sole reason for increasing the enlisted personnel is to put into full commission 200 extra destroyers with 100 men on each—a total of 20,000 men. I deny this. I assert that not a single responsible man, in the Navy or out of it, has said that this ought to be done or would be done with 19,000 additional men over the 67,000 carried in the bill.
Mr. KELLEY of Michigan first intimated this, I think, on Tuesday of last week, during the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] (pp. 5338 and 5339). He has mentioned it several times since, most recently yesterday (p. 5681).
His fullest treatment of it was last Saturday. In closing the debate on that day he said (p. 5603):

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] let the cat out of the bag a while ago * * *

For some reason the charge that one has let the cat out of the bag carries with it some odium. I do not know why. The act ought to be regarded as humane and commendable. But for some reason it is not so regarded. So I listened, with outward calm, but inward apprehension, to learn what cat I had let out of what bag.
Mr. KELLEY of Michigan continued:

* * * when he condemned as unwise the policy of not keeping all our fighting ships in full commission.

I deny that I said this or anything remotely resembling it. I challenge him to give you his authority for the quotation.
After apparently suggesting that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] had let another cat out of another bag, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan went on:

At last we have the reason why the 20,000 extra men are demanded. It proves out with almost mathematical precision. We have 200 surplus destroyers and it takes 100 men for each destroyer. So that if we keep them all in commission it will require exactly 20,000 men to man them.

He then referred to the effect on our people if they were told—that the American Congress has just appropriated $54,000,000 to keep in full commission and ready for instant war 200 ships of war in addition to those permitted under the treaty. * * * Why have our naval officers taken this position? Why do they desire all these surplus warcraft to be kept in commission?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan closed the debate on the personnel amendments. No one had an opportunity to answer him.
His speech was intended to convey, and did convey, to the Members of the House:
(1) That I advocated the increase of 19,000 in personnel so as to enable us to keep in full commission 200 extra destroyers in addition to the 103 already provided.
(2) That this was also the viewpoint of naval officers generally.
(3) That the pending amendments carried an increase of $54,000,000.
All three statements were absolutely in error. I will not characterize them more harshly. Perhaps within parliamentary limits I could not.
(1) I do not advocate commissioning more than 103 destroyers, and I never said I did.
(2) Neither does the Navy Department. Evidently Mr. KELLEY of Michigan forgot on Saturday what Mr. KELLEY of Michigan had said on Monday. In opening the debate he said (p. 5235):

We allow in this bill all (the destroyers) that the Navy Department asked for to be kept in full commission—103.

(3) The pending amendments—the only ones before the House Saturday—carried something less than $14,000,000 increase. Mr. KELLEY of Michigan was out of the way only $40,000,000. The only amendment since offered as a corollary to the personnel amendment was for food, and amounted to less than $4,000,000.
Happily the House was not, and will not be, misled by the Kelley bugaboo, unfounded and unfair as it undoubtedly was.
Another point about these destroyers. The department asked for 96,000 men. With this force they announced that they would keep in full commission 103 destroyers and no more. Then the President suggested a compromise of 86,000. The Navy Department was asked how it would use this force. It replied through Secretary Denby that it could still keep in full commission the same 103 destroyers. I put in the RECORD of Friday—page 5551—the official statement to this effect, and it was before Mr. KELLEY of Michigan when he made his speech on Saturday from which I have quoted. That same table shows the dream navy of Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, which I had incorporated for convenience. This shows how Mr. KELLEY of Michigan would use 67,000 men and is a little idea of his own and of no other responsible person. Lo and behold! Mr. KELLEY of Michigan would also keep in commission the same 103 destroyers.
Where, on Mr. KELLEY's own showing, is there evidence of inflation in the Navy Department? Mr. KELLEY's mirage Navy would itself have the 103 destroyers. Where, I repeat, does he get this talk of commissioning 200 more destroyers? I can not learn. They seem to be figments of the imagination. Gentlemen of the committee, this is the reddest red herring I have ever seen in this body. Did some one in some foreign embassy start the story? There seems to be no other parent.
I have referred to Mr. KELLEY's statement as to the cost of the personnel amendments of Saturday. He gave it as $54,000,000. Chairman MADDEN, speaking just before him, said (p. 5598):

Do you know, gentlemen, that if your amendment is adopted it will add $60,000,000 to the recommendations of the committee?

Not that it may cost, or ought to cost, but that it "will" cost $60,000,000 extra. Then he went on to say that other bills that might come before the House later would bring the total increase to $170,000,000 or thereabouts. Of course, this last had nothing to do with the question at issue. It was just atmosphere to scare the Members. When Mr. MADDEN said "this amendment will add $60,000,000," he missed the fact by about $46,000,000. Even with the food amendment added he missed the fact by $42,000,000. How can we safely build on such information as all this?
Just a word about the number of fleet vessels which would be in commission under the several plans. While the comparison is not of value, perhaps, it is interesting to note that the Navy Department's use of 86,000 men would keep in full commission fewer vessels by five or six than the Kelley hypothetical Navy. The true comparison is between what the department would do with 67,000 men and with 86,000. The table on page 5551, to which I have referred, shows this clearly, and I commend its careful study to every Member. Eighty-six thousand men mean only about 15 extra vessels in the fleet over those in the fleet with 67,000 men. The figures are 321 and 306, respectively. Surely the Navy shows no evidence of a desire to expand its fleet unwisely or improperly. The principal difference is that 86,000 allows us to maintain our treaty Navy of 18 battleships in full commission. Sixty-seven thousand leaves 5 of the 18 as naval relics "in ordinary" and 73 other vessels in reserve.
In conclusion, I am tired of the incessant attacks on the ability and even the common honesty of the officers of the American Navy. They are not infallible. They may occasionally be in error in judgment or on a question of fact. But I trust their integrity and their patriotism. I believe their purpose to be disinterested. I prefer their judgment, buttressed by Harding, Hughes, Denby, and Roosevelt, to that of the men who attack them. I am proud of the American Navy, its officers, and men. I want to keep them nationally sound and efficient. Eighty-six thousand is the minimum of safety. I appeal to every Member, when he votes in the House, to stand by the American Navy, its traditions, and its ideals.
Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill and as a part of my remarks to publish an interview with Frank R. Reed, recently nominated in the eleventh Illinois district, given out in the New York World. It is but a short paragraph.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?
Mr. WALSH. I do not think we ought to put interviews into the RECORD. I object.

SPECIAL CANCELING STAMPS.

Mr. STEENERSON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, presented a conference report on the bill H. R. 10740, authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices, which was ordered printed under the rule.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent Mr. COLE of Ohio, Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska, Mr. RIDDICK, Mr. A. P. NELSON, and Mr. SHAW were granted permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, for the third time in the history of America the Republican Party has been called upon to act as a wrecking crew for a national Democratic "smashup."

In 1861 the Republican Party, under Lincoln, came into national authority to find industry prostrate, finances disorganized, and the very perpetuity of the Nation imperiled. Upon Lincoln and his associates fell, as Lincoln said, a task greater than that which devolved even upon Washington. History records the result. The Union preserved, slavery destroyed, the greatest war of all history up to that time financed, the national credit maintained, and the parity of all our currency at last restored until the American dollar was the trade-mark of stability and solidity throughout the world.

REPUBLICAN POLICIES BROUGHT PROSPERITY.

Under the Republican policy of protection to American industries the United States became in the succeeding half century the world's greatest financial power. Let it be remembered that every step taken in the development of the policies which gave to America first place among the nations of the earth in wealth, economic power, and in commercial independence was resisted by Democratic leadership. At the beginning of the Civil War the United States was an agricultural dependency of Europe; after a half century of almost uninterrupted Republican control this Nation was in so strong an economic position that we might at any time close our gates to exports and imports and still exist without serious inconvenience. Such a condition means military and naval as well as economic power. And so it was when the European war began, America was the one nation of the world which was in least fear of isolation. It was the weight of our wealth and industrial and agricultural power that brought the World War to an end and made America, as illustrated in the recent Washington conference, the world's great arbitrating power.

WILSON TARIFF LAW BROUGHT DISTRESS.

Only once during the half century following the inauguration of Lincoln did the Republican Party lose control of the Presidency, the House, and the Senate at one time. This was in 1892 when the party of opposition under Grover Cleveland, denouncing the newly enacted McKinley tariff law as an "infamous" and "damnable" measure designed to oppress the people, gained complete control of Government. The Wilson tariff law was enacted. The very menace of the measure brought panic and prostration to the country while the foundations of protection were being torn out by demagogues and doctrinaires. So came the panic of 1894, with thousands of factories silent, millions of wage earners jobless, with armies of tramps moving over the country, with farm prices so depressed that corn was burned for fuel, with banks, stores, and industries failing, and farms sold by the tens of thousands under the sheriff's hammer.

CONDITIONS CORRECTED UNDER M'KINLEY.

Under such conditions the Republican Party was restored to power under McKinley in 1896. The result, following the enactment of a protective tariff law, was the complete resumption of industry and a period of prosperity the like of which was never before experienced by any nation in history. Again the Republican Party had cleared away the wreckage produced by Democratic mismanagement, and once more had set the feet of the Nation on the highway of prosperity and progress.

WILSONISM AND WASTE.

And now the Republican Party is again charged with the work of national reconstruction. The task allotted is the most difficult in all our national history, for the wreck left by the Democratic Party was more complete than had ever been known before.

When the World War began, in midsummer of 1914, under the operations of the existing Democratic tariff law, there were 3,000,000 men out of work in the industrial centers of the United States. The repeal of the Republican tariff laws and the enactment of the Underwood-Simmons bill resulted exactly as the passage of the Wilson tariff law had 20 years before. In the winter of 1913–14 there were soup kitchens and bread lines in the great cities. Yet the promised reduction in high cost of living had not come. Only the beginning of the European war with its embargo on imports and its great demand for exports saved the country from still greater disaster, and the Democratic Party from overwhelming defeat at the polls in 1914 and 1916.

WILL REQUIRE YEARS TO REPAIR DAMAGE TO NATION.

The Republican Party in its national platform of 1920 did not promise the people a quick return to normal conditions as the result of Republican return to power. There was a too serious realization of the magnitude of the problems to be solved to permit the making of such a pledge.

Never in all history did a political party come to such a heritage of difficulty as that which confronted the Harding administration upon its inauguration.

The interest alone upon the vast national debt, in part a monument to Democratic extravagance and inefficiency, was of itself equal to the entire national expenditures under the last year of Republican national control under Taft. Other fixed charges growing out of the war were as much more. With extravagance running riot, incapacity enthroned in the civil service of the Nation, and with the whole governmenal establishment permeated with the spirit of reckless waste, the job of cleaning up the Augean stable was one demanding the strength and persistence of a Hercules.

OPPOSITION PARTY HINDERS EFFORTS FOR RECONSTRUCTION.

While the Republican Party has been steadily engaged in the work of clearing up the débris of this Democratic wreck, the politicians of the opposition have stood along the side lines jeering the workers, and wherever possible have resisted the progress of the work the party in power was trying to accomplish. Despite these obstacles remarkable progress has been made in the tremendous task of reconstruction.

Congress and the Executive have done their full part. No one will claim that the work has been completed. No reasonable person will expect or demand that it should be completed in so short a time. It will take a quarter of a century to repair some of the damage done to the Nation during the past few years. The critics who believe that the Nation can be made as good as new in a few months are unreasonable in their demands.

PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS WORKING TOGETHER.

Definite and constructive steps are being taken in an orderly manner by President Harding and the Republican majority in Congress toward working out a comprehensive national program that will put an end to the ruinous waste, extravagance, and inefficiency in the conduct of public affairs that characterized the Wilson administration and restore conditions of justice, equal opportunity, and prosperity to the American people.

Either in ignorance or maliciously critics have repeatedly said this is a "do-nothing Congress," and that the President and the Congress are not working in harmony to a common purpose. Nothing is further from the truth. As a matter of fact, no Congress in all our history has done more good constructive work in the same length of time, as the following exhibit will clearly demonstrate.

The best test as to whether the Congress has enacted legislation asked by the President and promised by the Republican Party is the record. In the following parallel columns are set forth:

(1) The specific requests for legislation which President Harding made of the Congress in his message opening the special session, April 12, 1921, and in his annual message to the Congress at the opening of its regular session December 6, 1921.

(2) What action Congress took regarding these presidential recommendations; also what other legislation it enacted.

PRESIDENT HARDING'S RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE SPECIAL SESSION OF CONGRESS APRIL 12, 1921.	ACTION OF CONGRESS ON THE PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATIONS.
Let me most heartily commend the enactment of legislation providing for the national Budget system.	Bill to provide Budget system and creating Budget Bureau passed both Houses of the Congress and became a law June 10, 1921.
To establish the state of technical peace (with the Central Powers of Europe) without further delay I should approve declaratory resolution by Congress to that effect.	Joint resolution declaring an end to the state of war between the United States and Germany and Austria-Hungary passed both Houses and was signed by the President July 2, 1921.
The urgency for an instant tariff enactment, emergency in character and understood by our people that it is for emergency only, can not be too much emphasized. * * * The maturer revision of our tariff laws should be based on the policy of protection.	Emergency tariff especially designed to protect agricultural interests passed both Houses and became a law May 27, 1921.
I invited the services of a voluntary committee to inquire into the administration of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Federal Board for Vocational Educa-	Fordney tariff bill passed the House of Representatives July 7, 1921.
	Sweet bill, providing for the consolidation and coordination of all Federal agencies dealing with ex-service men under one head, known as the Veterans' Bureau, tion, and other agencies of the Government in caring for the ex-soldiers, sailors, and marines of the World War. * * * This committee has recommended, and I convey the recommendations to you with cordial approval, that all Government agencies looking to the welfare of the ex-service men should be placed under one directing head. It may be well to make such an official the director general of service to war veterans and place under his direction all hospitalization, vocational training, war insurance, rehabilitation, and all pensions.

PRESIDENT HARDING'S RECOMMENDATIONS, ETC.—Continued.

It is proper to invite your attention to the importance of the question of radio communication and cables. * * * Active encouragement should be given to the extension of American owned and operated cable and radio services * * * but this should be so far as practicable direct and free from foreign intermediation. * * * Government-owned facilities, wherever possible, without unduly interfering with private enterprise or Government needs, should be made available for general use.

The laws giving Federal aid (to State highway construction) should be amended and strengthened. Congress ought to prescribe conditions to Federal appropriations which will necessitate a consistent program of uniformity which will justify Federal outlay.

I know of no more pressing problem at home than to restrict our national expenditures within the limits of our national income and at the same time measurably lift the burdens of war taxation from the shoulders of the American people. * * * A prompt and thoroughgoing revision of the internal tax laws, made with due regard to the protection of the revenues, is, in my judgment, a requisite to the revival of business activity in this country.

I assume the maternity bill, already strongly approved, will be enacted promptly, thus adding to our manifestation of human interest.

Congress ought to wipe the stain of barbaric lynching from the banners of the free and orderly representative democracy.

We shall hasten the solution and aid effectively in lifting the tax burdens if we strike resolutely at expenditures * * *. Our current expenditures are running at the rate of approximately $5,000,000,000 a year, and the burden is unbearable. There are two agencies to be employed in correction; one is rigid resistance in appropriation, the other is utmost economy in administration. Let us have both.

In addition to the above specific recommendations for particular legislation, President Harding recommended the establishment of a bureau of aeronautics in connection with the Navy Department, and also the creation of a public welfare department.

ACTION OF CONGRESS ON THE PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATIONS—Con.

passed both Houses and became a law August 9, 1921.

Bill to give Federal authorities absolute control over all cable landings in the United States passed both Houses and became a law May 27, 1921. A bill to open for public use all radio stations which are now under supervision of the Navy Department passed the House June 22, 1921; passed the Senate February 20, 1922. Bill now in conference committee.

Bill to provide Federal aid for public highways in appropriating $75,000,000 for same passed both Houses and became a law November 9, 1921.

Bill to reduce and equalize public taxes passed both Houses and became a law November 23, 1921. This law lifts $800,000,000 of taxes from the shoulders of the American people during the present year; repeals all taxes on transportation of freight, express, and parcel post; repeals practically all "nuisance" taxes; increases by $500 exemptions of income on all incomes of $5,000 and under, which directly affects 3,000,000 heads of families, who comprise the bulk of the average householders; repeals all excess-profits taxes and decreases surtaxes.

Bill to provide public protection of maternity and infancy and extending Federal aid to States which cooperate with the Federal Government passed both Houses and became a law November 23, 1921. This is known as the "maternity bill."

Dyer antilynching bill, making lynching an offense against the Federal statutes, passed the House of Representatives January 26, 1922.

The Congress followed the advice of the President, offered "rigid resistance in appropriations," and struck resolutely at expenditures, as is evidenced by its reducing over $300,000,000 the amounts requested by various Federal departments, boards, bureaus, and commissions. This saving of a third of a billion dollars in appropriation bills by the Congress was in addition to savings made by the executive departments.

The Congress has taken no action in regard to these two recommendations because it is awaiting the report and recommendations of a commission which is working out a program of reorganization of the various active agencies of the Government. This program, before it is submitted to the Congress, must meet with the approval of President Harding. A major portion of this program has been submitted to the President and his Cabinet for their study, amendment, and final approval.

In addition to the above-enumerated laws, the Congress in special session, which consumed less than six months' actual time, passed a number of other very important laws, among them the agricultural credits act, which amended the War Finance Corporation so that it might make loans to agricultural and live-stock interests, and providing $1,000,000,000 revolving fund for the purpose of making these loans; the farm loan bank act was amended increasing funds available for farm loans in the sum of $25,000,000; a law to regulate grain exchanges and dealing in all "futures" in the grain trade; the packers and stockyards act; the immigration restriction law; amended the Edge Act to facilitate the organization of corporations wishing to engage in foreign trade; the "antibeer" act, which strengthened the enforcement of the Federal amendment providing prohibition; reorganized the Indian Bureau; legislation providing for the reorganization of the Philippine Islands' financial system and providing for an extension of Philippine credit in order to save the islands from bankruptcy as a result of the eight years of government of the islands under the Wilson administration.

PRESIDENT HARDING'S RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE CONGRESS IN HIS ANNUAL MESSAGE, DECEMBER 6, 1921.

There is pending a granting of authority to the administrative branch of the Government for the funding and settlement of our vast foreign loans growing out of our grant of war credits * * *. It will be helpful to ourselves and will improve conditions among our debtors if funding and the settlement of defaulted interest may be negotiated.

Every proper encouragement should be given to the cooperative marketing program.

In addition to the above-specified recommendations, President Harding in his annual message December 6 urged the prompt enactment of a protective tariff; the consideration of an amendment to the Federal Constitution to prevent further issue of nontaxable security; the regulation by law of organized labor and the creation of an industrial tribunal as a medium for the prevention of strikes, lockouts, and boycotts; * * * At this time President Harding informed Congress that at some future time he would lay before it in detail a program for the maintenance of a merchant marine. He also informed the Congress that later on he would make additional recommendations regarding further reductions in taxes.

President Harding in his message to Congress December 6 also recommended an extension and speeding up of reclamation work to reclaim and put under cultivation arid, swamp, and cut-over lands.

ACTION OF THE CONGRESS ON THE PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATIONS.

Bill to create a refunding commission to handle foreign debts passed both Houses and became a law February 9, 1922.

Bill authorizing producers of agricultural products to form associations for the purpose of cooperative marketing passed both Houses and became a law February 18, 1922.

The tariff bill has passed the House and has been favorably reported to the Senate by the Senate Finance Committee. A resolution has been introduced for the proposing of an amendment to the United States Constitution to prevent further issue of nontaxable securities. Hearings are being held before a House committee upon this resolution. The President, in conformity with his promise in his annual message, delivered to the Congress a special message upon the subject of the American merchant marine. This message was delivered February 28, 1922. Hearings are already in progress.

The Committee on Irrigation of both the Senate and the House have held hearings on a comprehensive irrigation measure, known as the Smith-McNary bill, which will provide means to carry on this constructive reclamation work. The House committee has favorably reported the bill for passage, and it is now on the calendar.

OUTLINE OF NEW IRRIGATION BILL.

Mr. Speaker, because this measure means so much to the States of the West and because I have had an active part in its consideration and am anxious that every Member of the House may understand it, may I briefly outline its provisions? The Smith-McNary bill provides for agricultural reclamation by contracts executed between the Secretary of the Interior and districts to be organized under State laws for that purpose. Such districts must have authority to issue bonds, which shall be a general charge against all lands in the district and to contract under this act.

The Secretary is authorized to investigate the feasibility of reclaiming lands in such a district, one-half the cost of investigation to be paid in advance by the district, the other half by the United States. The Secretary may contract to construct reclamation works and operate the same as long as necessary to safeguard the interests of the Government, the total cost of construction and operation to be paid by the district. The total cost, including interest and overhead, shall be determined by the Secretary after one season's successful operation, which, with expense of maintenance, shall be paid in not exceeding 40 years, with interest not exceeding 5 per cent.

Before construction commences the size of farms shall be established by the Secretary, not to exceed 160 acres each, of reclaimed land.

Deeded and homesteaded and unentered or unpatented arid and semiarid lands of the United States may be included in the district.

The United States may acquire deeded lands for construction, but not for agricultural purposes. The Secretary may accept and dispose of deeded lands in the district upon terms to be agreed upon with the grantor.

Bonds of a district equal to the proposed expenditure shall be issued and delivered to the United States preceding any expenditure by the Government. The Secretary may require additional issue of bonds if first issue is insufficient or may curtail work. Bonds of district in excess of the cost finally established shall be canceled.

Bonds are to be deposited with Federal Farm Loan Board and sold at public or private sale for not less than par when the Farm Loan Board determines the value of the property of the district subject to the payment of such bonds is twice their par value.

Proceeds of sale of district bonds by the Government shall be applied in satisfaction of the obligations of the district.

So far as practical the services of veterans shall be utilized. They shall have an exclusive right of entry for 60 days.

APPROPRIATIONS.

A national revolving reclamation fund is established.

DEMOCRATIC CHAIRMAN VISITS MONTANA.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of this splendid record being made by this Congress and this administration, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Mr. Cordell Hull, recently came up into my State from his home in the South and made a speech in one of the big cities there, in which he complained bitterly that the Republicans had not been able to correct in a single year the damage they had done in eight years. He complained about the disarmament treaty; said the four-power treaty for peace in the Pacific was unwise; and declared that the old Democratic "tariff-for-revenue formula," which has always brought about a depression of prices for farm products and nation-wide hard times, was what the country needed.

WOULD SCRAP THE PRIMARY LAW.

The Montana Democratic leaders who arranged the meeting showed their lack of confidence in the people by presenting a resolution they had prepared for the occasion to do away with the primaries, on the ground that they were "too expensive."

The Democratic national committeeman for Montana, Mr. J. Bruce Kremer, of Butte, Mont., declared that the economic and financial policies of the Wilson administration had brought prosperity to the people. If he meant by "the people" the favorites of the Wilson administration, whose profiteering increased the number of millionaires in the Nation by several thousand during the eight years of the Wilson administration, his statement was correct. They certainly did prosper. But that statement will not be taken seriously by the thousands of farmers of my State and of other Western States who have been brought to the verge of financial ruin by those same economic and financial policies, which restricted their profits and increased the costs of everything they had to purchase, and then denied them credit and deflated the prices of all their products, causing losses among the farmers and live-stock men of the West, which many will never be able to recover from during the rest of their lives.

NO NATIONAL PROSPERITY UNLESS THE FARMER PROSPERS.

President Harding and the Republican Congress have realized that there can be no general prosperity the country over until the farmers of the Nation have a just measure of prosperity. Therefore there has been an unusual amount of legislation recommended and passed in the interest of the farmer. This is not class legislation. It is legislation to benefit the whole country; and the beneficial results are already beginning to be felt the whole country over. Prices for wheat and corn, cattle and hogs, sheep and wool have all been steadily advancing, and prospects are good for the future. On the other hand, freight rates and prices for farm machinery and general living costs are being gradually reduced and approaching normal levels.

TIMES ARE GETTING BETTER.

As the farmers receive better prices they are able to begin making purchases of farm machinery, and lumber, and cement, and clothing, and other merchandise of all kinds, business picks up, the wheels of industry begin to turn, labor is employed more and more extensively, and in turn laborers are able to purchase farm produce and merchandise of all kinds, and thus will we replace the vicious circle of high costs of living and decreasing business, short credits, and hard times with a happy circle of better prices for our farm products, better business, easier credits, more employment, and in the end a full and complete return to prosperity and opportunity for all. That is what the people of the country want, and that is what the Harding administration is bringing to pass. Things do not just happen. They are brought about. These bettering conditions which we all appreciate are the direct result of the adopting and putting into effect sound economic policies. As the weeks and the months go by conditions promise to continue to become better and better.

PRESIDENT HARDING INVITED TO VISIT MONTANA.

The accomplishments of President Harding and his administration have proven a godsend to Montana. The President is very popular there. The people approve his disarmament conference, his personal interest in their welfare and financial condition, his study and understanding of their agriculture and irrigation needs. In July of this year the editors of America will hold a National Editorial Association meeting at the city of Missoula, in the western part of Montana. Side trips will be made to many of our principal cities and to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. In behalf of all the people of Montana, I have written the following letter to President Harding, who is a member of that association, urging him to attend that meeting, and in my letter I have stated some pertinent facts about the great State of Montana which are of more than passing interest:

Hon. WARREN G. HARDING,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: All the people of Montana hope for your attendance at the annual outing of the National Editorial Association to be held in that State in July.

Montana, as you know, was first named for its mountains, but more lately has properly come to be known as the treasure State. A frontiersman once said: "When God made Montana He had so much land and scenery He just piled it up in heaps." No other State has the wealth of scenery, the great diversity of soil and climate, the wide variety of resources that Montana possesses, nor the rich romance of early pioneer life. The explorers and fur traders, the missionaries and Indian fighters, the gold mining camps and the cattle ranches, and even our modern mining feats and electrification of our railroads, and our bonanza farming operations are distinctively of Montana.

Our mountains and lakes outrival Switzerland in grandeur and beauty. Our national parks are the largest and most wonderful in the world. Our river scenes are the most marvelous and enticing in all of outdoors. Our forests are as primeval and unsullied by the hand of civilization as on the day when Columbus set sail in a Spanish galleon in search of a short route to the East. Bears, mountain lions, elk, and deer haunt the dark recesses of these unexplored woods, and game fish in abundance are found in all the numerous lakes and mountain streams.

Your great State of Ohio contains a total of 26,000,000 acres of land. In Montana we have 30,000,000 acres of mountains and forests alone, and 30,000,000 acres of grazing land, and 30,000,000 acres of the finest farming land in America. On this grazing land to-day roam thousands of half wild cattle, bearing their owners' brands, and the cowboy, the chuck wagon, and the picturesque log buildings and corrals of the home ranch of story and moving picture are every-day realities here.

It was formerly believed that Montana was an arid country, unfit for farming, but homeseekers from every State have in recent years migrated there, lured by the prospect of a free Government homestead, and have proven the land to be rich in agricultural possibilities. In some sections of the State these homesteaders have raised wheat, oats, flax, and hay that have excelled in quality and in yield per acre the crops produced on the highest-priced farm land in the East and the Middle West. The wealth of farm crops promises soon to exceed the treasure of mineral and lumber, cattle and sheep, for which the State has long been renowned.

The story of Montana outrivals a modern moving-picture scenario for action, color, variety, scenery, and intensity of interest. For scenery we have our shining mountains, perpetually covered with snow, age-old glaciers, fertile valleys, and rolling plains, all with their distinctive wild animal and plant life. There are the mirror lakes, fringed with evergreens, boiling rivers, and cascades dashing through precipitous banks rising over a thousand feet in height, in close proximity to the modern life of our prosperous cities. Our cast will include the murderous Sioux and the friendly Crow Indians, missionaries, soldiers, and scouts; Plummer and Ives, the outlaws, and the vigilantes; gold miners, dance-hall girls, cowboys, and tenderfeet; and the later generation of sturdy and dependable farmers and progressive and prosperous business and professional men of this modern age. For action the wiping out of General Custer's troops and the avenging of the massacre by the frontier American soldiers outrivals any picture ever imagined. All the human passions at their worst and at their best appear through the early period of development of the State, from the turbulent life in the early mining camps, with the hurdy-gurdy dance halls and gambling, shootings, and hangings, hunting the buffalo and breaking wild horses, to the latter-day struggles of the pioneer farmers and pioneer women, real heroines, facing privations, hard labor, and isolation with a cheerful optimism, until we come to the modern towns and cities, with happy homes and all kinds of business activity, and the development of a prosperous farming country.

Montana is rich in Indian lore. As you will pass through the city of Three Forks, Mr. President, where the Missouri, Madison, and Jefferson Rivers converge, you will see from the windows of the train a hotel called the Sacajawea. Sacajawea was a captive Indian girl, called the Bird Woman, for her soft voice. When Lewis and Clark were exploring Montana in the spring of 1806 they employed Sacajawea's husband for a guide, and the Indian bride induced her husband to take her on the journey. Arrived at the three forks of the rivers, the Indian girl recognized the place of her capture years before and was able to lead the exploring party on westward to her native tribe and to make peace with them for the explorers.

Five miles east of Birdtail Rock, in Lewis and Clark County, will be found stone monuments placed at equal distances in the shape of a great V, inclosing several miles of prairie. According to legend, in early days before the Indians learned to use horses they used this as a buffalo trap. It is said they would hide behind the rocks while the buffalo grazed into the trap. Then starting a stampede from behind the Indians would spring forth and add to the terror of the frightened herd and cause it to dash madly toward the apex of the trap, where many of the animals in the front ranks would be pushed over perpendicular cliffs onto great rocks 80 feet below. This slaughter provided hides and meat in abundance. Bones and other remnants of the success of the trap are still in evidence there.

Miles City is to-day the greatest horse market in the world. Its early settlement was greatly hampered by Sitting Bull and his murderous Sioux, who lived in that part of the country.

At Fort Benton are the crumbling remains of the first adobe building to be erected in Montana. This was a fort to protect the fur traders, who established the oldest town in the State at the head of navigation on the Missouri River. The fort was dedicated on Christmas Day, 1850, with music, dancing, and holiday festivities.

The Indians frequented the numerous hot and medicinal springs in the early days, as their "white brothers" now do, for the relief of rheumatism and other troubles. Those most noted in the State are White Sulphur Springs and the Helena Hot Springs, now famous health resorts.

There are six Indian reservations in the State, all interesting and all worthy a visit.

Bannack, Virginia City, and Hell's Hole were the haunts of Plummer and Ives and other of the gentlemanly bandits, who carried on organized robbery and murder until the early miners, in the absence of courts or peace officers, organized the Vigilantes, and brought these outlaws into miners' courts held in the outdoors, where the evidence was submitted, the verdict rendered, and the guilty desperado hanged, all in an afternoon's time.

The city of Helena, the capital of the State, was first called "Last Chance Gulch." The narrow main street, now lined with modern buildings, follows the winding path the miners made in the early days when they built their cabins on either side of the gulch. Millions of dollars of wealth have been taken from the earth in this locality, and even to-day the excavations for buildings are found to be rich in virgin gold. Helena overlooks the Prickly Pear Valley, which has in recent years been changed by irrigation from a sage-brush flat to an oasis of alfalfa ranches. The capital city of the State is very properly called "The Queen of the Mountains."

Missoula, the headquarters for the association meeting, is located in the Bitter Root Valley. This is the garden spot of the State and is noted for the salubrity of its climate and the productivity of its orchards and farms. Flathead Lake, the largest fresh-water lake in the country, aside from the Great Lakes, is located near by. The surrounding mountains and forests are picturesque beyond description. The State University is located at Missoula. One of my acquaintances, a young man attending school there, recently went out in the near-by woods during a two-hour recess between classes and brought in a fine deer.

Lewistown, in the Judith Basin, is located in the geographical center of the State and is also the center of the great wheat-raising section of Montana. Here powerful tractors draw machinery to plow and plant 40 acres a day. During the harvest time combines, pulled by tractors, cut and thresh in one operation literally hundreds of acres of wheat in a day. Billings, the Empire City of the Yellowstone Valley, is the busy business center of the Huntley project territory. This is the most practical and successful of all the many Government irrigation projects. Many believe Great Falls is destined to be our largest city. Here are located power plants and smelters of such tremendous magnitude that they startle the imagination. Within the city limits of Butte are mountains of copper ore. This is one of the largest, most active, and picturesque mining camps in operation in the world to-day.

During recent years Montana has held first place among all the States in the Union in production of gold. Montana has also held first place for silver production and for copper production and also for the number and value of sapphires and precious stones produced. Montana has also during recent years ranked first of all the States in the production of beef cattle, and has stood first in the quantity and value of its wool. For a 10-year period, ending in 1918, Montana holds the highest record of all the States in the largest yield per acre of wheat, oats, rye, potatoes, and hay, according to official records published by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Yellowstone, our largest national park, is marvelous and indescribable. Here are mountains of glass, petrified forests, boiling hot water pouring from the earth, geysers spouting skyward, bubbling, boiling bogs of colored paint, bears, buffalo, lodges, trails, forests, camps, fishing, motoring over perfect mountain roads, and, in fact, everything to entice the lover of the outdoors. The official entrance to the park is at Gardiner, Mont., marked by an arch dedicated by President Roosevelt in 1903.

Glacier Park is 400 miles distant. In Glacier National Park are more than 15,000 square miles of America's greatest outdoor playground. Nowhere else in the world can one get so close to Nature or find such a varied and exhilarating assortment of Nature's wonders. Gazing over McDonalds Lake, within Glacier Park, an unlettered native exclaimed, from the eloquence of his soul, "Here is where God sat when he made America." For awe-inspiring, soul-stirring scenery the glaciers, the mountains, and the forests of Glacier Park have no equal. From one giant mountain within this park the water drains into three oceans.

Connecting these two parks is a 400-mile automobile driveway along the base of the "backbone of the continent," along which one may have a bird's-eye, ever-changing panoramic view of the old Montana and the new. Here are primeval forests, snow-capped mountain heights, and cool and shady mountain passes. Along the route are old-time cattle ranches and rich and modern farms. One will see relics of Indian days, old placer mines, where gold was sluiced, and fallen trees for the present-day sawmills. Here modern man has harnessed the streams for irrigation and power. The bull team of yesterday and the high-powered motor car of to-day, the blanket Indian of the reservation and the hum of modern life in the towns and cities en route all add the peculiar romance and interest that are a part of this park-to-park trip.

As you visit our State, Mr. President, we invite your particular attention to our schools. Of these we are justly proud, for the Russell Sage Foundation, after a recent survey of the schools in all the States, pronounced ours the best in America.

Our people will all welcome you cordially, Mr. President, and you will find them the most hospitable folks on earth. No doubt you remember that when Marshal Foch was making his tour across the continent he exclaimed when he reached Montana, "Here I have found the heart of the American people."

And, of course, you will want to meet our soldier boys. As their fathers and mothers went "over the top" so splendidly in every drive for Liberty bonds, for Red Cross work, and for all other war endeavors, so our boys at the front made a record for valor and action in service which the records of the War Department show was unexcelled by the boys of any other State. Fifty-three of our Montana boys wear distinguished-service crosses. For volunteer service and casualties in action they established a record above all other States of like population.

We earnestly want you with us on this occasion, Mr. President, and we promise to do our best to insure you a good time.

"Git down an' come in!"
Could words open wider a heart or a door
Than that greeting of plainsmen in days that are o'er—
"Git down an' come in?"

Sincerely yours,

CARL W. RIDDICK,
Member of Congress, Second Montana District.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I have permission to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House Friday after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object, yet I have so frequently objected to requests of this sort that I am afraid I must object at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is the gentleman going to have up Friday?

Mr. MONDELL. On Friday, if we take up the Private Calendar, the gentleman may have an opportunity. I shall be very glad to be of assistance to him at that time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I assume that I would not get time on the Private Calendar. I hope it may be on some other bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman realizes how embarrassing it is to object to requests of this sort, and yet it is very nearly essential that it shall be done.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I understand that. I was wondering what bill would probably be before the House on Friday.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if I may have two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to say that the probability is that we will take up for consideration to-morrow the conference report on the appropriation bill for the independent offices, after which we shall probably go on with the unfinished business, the bill of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] relative to weights and measures—the container bill.

Mr. WALSH. The basket bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The basket bill; the gentleman from Massachusetts corrects me. Or it might be the box bill. On Friday, Mr. Speaker, we will probably take up the Private Calendar. I want to explain to the House that this change of program—we having intended to take up the legislation from the Naval Committee—is due to sickness in the family of one of the Members, who desires to be here when the naval legislation is taken up.

FISH RESCUE STATION, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 2393, an act to provide for the establishment on the Mississippi River of a fish rescue station, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce, with Senate amendments, and move to agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this is not a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. It would be privileged ordinarily, to be taken up at any time after the reading of the Journal. The Chair is not so certain that it will be privileged now. The Chair understood that there would be no objection to it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is one of the times in which the Senate—think of it—the Senate has made reductions. Had we not better grip that while we can? [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There is no objection to it on the part of anybody.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no uncertainty about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is what the figures indicate, and they did not come from the Navy Department. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman certain that the Senate passed the garden-seed amendment, providing for the free seed distribution?

Mr. ANDERSON. They passed it by a margin of one vote, as I understand.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do they ask for a conference?

Mr. WALSH. We ask for the conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks for a conference.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman conferred with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN]?

Mr. ANDERSON. We have not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I shall have to object.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution; and

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of Edmund Burke.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 2556. An act to advance Maj. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major;

H. R. 7589. An act for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller;

H. R. 10864. An act to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion, and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau; and

H. R. 10429. An act authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credits to and relieve certain disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments in the settlement of certain accounts.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 20, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HUMPHREYS: A bill (H. R. 11362) declaring Tchula Lake, Holmes County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 11363) granting a portion of the rents, royalties, and bonuses received from lands within naval petroleum reserves to the States within the boundaries of which said reserves are located; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LEE of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 11364) for the purchase of a site for a post-office building at Calhoun, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 11365) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection and completion of a public building thereon at Waseca, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FISH: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 308) favoring the establishment in Palestine of the national home for the Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: Resolution (H. Res. 329) requesting a conference on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 9103; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts urging the Government of the United States of America formally to recognize the present status of the Jewish people in Palestine; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 11366) granting a pension to Eugene Goss; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKEY: A bill (H. R. 11367) granting an increase of pension to Edward P. Wolfe; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KOPP: A bill (H. R. 11368) granting a pension to Mollie Bailey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 11369) for the relief of A. B. Taylor; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11370) granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Kinman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 11371) granting a pension to Martha J. Jackson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OGDEN: A bill (H. R. 11372) granting a pension to Mary Zimmerman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11373) granting a pension to William Henry Bush; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 11374) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Stevenson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REBER: A bill (H. R. 11375) granting an increase of pension to Harry E. Snyder; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 11376) for the relief of B. Jackson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 11377) granting a pension to Harriet Boyer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5180. By Mr. BECK: Petition relating to filled milk and oleomargarine legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5181. By Mr. CULLEN: Resolution adopted by the general committee on Army and Navy chaplains of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America concerning chaplain legislation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5182. By Mr. ELLIOTT: Petition of Emma Williams and 100 others, of Richmond, Ind., remonstrating against the passage of House bills 4388 and 9753 and Senate bill 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5183. By Mr. FREE: Petition of citizens of San Jose, Calif., against Sunday closing legislation; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5184. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of Joseph Middleby, jr. (Inc.), of Boston, Mass., protesting against passage of Senate bill 3290; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5185. By Mr. HAYS: Petition of F. S. Leatherberry and 40 other citizens, of Douglas County, Mo., protesting against the passage of House bills 4388 and 9753 or Senate bill 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5186. By Mr. HICKEY: Petition of sundry citizens of South Bend, Ind., opposing the passage of House bill 9753, providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5187. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Broadway Association (Inc.), of New York City, N. Y., relative to the Post Office appropriation bill as amended by the Senate; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5188. By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of East Boston Post, No. 608, Veterans of Foreign Wars, urging the enactment of a bonus bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5189. By Mr. WATSON: Petition for the relief of Mordecai Fizone; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5190. Also, resolution passed by the Quarterly Meeting of Friends at Wrightstown, Pa., favoring the lowest possible figure for the Army and Navy appropriations in the spirit of the recent disarmament conference; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5191. By Mr. WHITE of Kansas: Petition of congregation of First Presbyterian Church of Lincoln, Kans., asking the passage of House Joint Resolution 131; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 20, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast placed us in such a beautiful world, that everything speaks of the hand that made and that is divine. We rejoice that we have the privilege of adding to the beauty of the world by increasing the moral and spiritual forces and emphasizing in our own lives the strength, the moral and spiritual strength, pledged to us through Thine own wonderful grace. Accept of us this morning. Bless our land, our President, and all the interests that we should bear before Thee. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

On request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, April 18, 1922, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2393) to provide for the establishment on the Mississippi River of a fish-rescue station, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 21) providing for printing additional copies of the tariff bill, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of Edmund Burke; and

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by a conference of the National Federation of Construction Industries, at Chicago, Ill., favoring the enactment of legislation to define the operations of cooperative trade associations, the financing of operations for the construction of small homes with the least possible burden to the home builder, and the enactment of legislation taxing incomes derived from State and municipal bonds on the same basis as other incomes, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE. I present a number of resolutions by telegraph expressing sympathy with the establishment of a national home for Jewish people in Palestine in accordance with the terms of the Balfour declaration. I ask that there be printed in the RECORD not the resolutions but simply the list of organizations which I have had appended.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the list of organizations was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions of the Congress committee, representing all local Jewish organizations of Youngstown, Ohio, Oscar H. Altschulter, chairman; Youngstown Zionists District, of Youngstown, Ohio, S. Drabkin, chairman; United Orthodox Rabbis of America, of Philadelphia, Pa., Rabbi B. L. Levinthal, president; Rabbi Congregation Bethel Dorchester, of Roxbury, Mass., David M. Shohet; Rabbinical Assembly of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, of Boston, Mass., Louis M. Epstein, president; the Jews of Newport News, Va., Max Levinson, chairman; Hyman Astor, secretary; Local Lodge Order B'rith Abraham of Newport News, Va., I. Levinson, president; Local Lodge Independent Order B'rith Abraham of Newport News, Va., J. Reyner, president; Hadassah Chapter, of Pittsburgh, Pa., Gertrude Mets, secretary; all of the Jewish ministers of Newport News, Va., Rabbi M. Speir, Rev. I. Feinberg, Rev. S. Cantor; Congregation Adath Jeshurun, of Newport News, Va., I. Cohen, president; the Young Men's Hebrew Association of New Bedford, Mass., Samuel Bebchick, recording secrejary; B'nai Brith of Salem, Mass., Dr. Charles Aronson, president; Congregation Sons of Jacob, of Salem, Mass., Joseph L. Simon, president; the National Jewish Daily, of New York, N. Y.; Jewish Morning Journal, of New York, N. Y.; Rabbi Hyman Soloman, of Lawrence, Mass.; Congregation Temple Emanuel, of Lawrence, Mass., Joseph Harris, president; Haverhill Jewry, of Haverhill, Mass., Rabbi Hyman M. Yood; the United Synagogue of America, of New York, N. Y., Elias L. Solomon, president; Congregation Beth Hamedrish Hagodel, Congregation Beth Israel, Congregation Beth Hachneseth Hacodesh, Congregation Nusach Ari, Congregation Vaad Hakolel, Congregation Anshe Kipol, Congregation Etz Chaim, Congregation Kneseth Israel, Congregation Anshe Poland, Congregation Anshe Radizkovitz, Congregation Ein Jacob, Congregation Lights of Israel, Congregation Anshe Sfard, Hyman Goldman, president, of Rochester, N. Y.; Hebrew Mutual Aid Association, N. Nathan, president; Gathering of Israel, Rabbi M. Fuhrman; Love of Peace Society, B. Meiefsky; Order of Abraham, Aaron Berkwitz; Zionist Organization, K. Halperin, Rabbi David M. Gross, of Pittsfield, Mass.; Zionist Organization of Bridgeport, Conn., Dr. Samuel Wurtzel, secretary; the Organization of Orthodox Rabbis of America, of New York, N. Y., Rabbi A. Yudelowitz, president; Rabbi Ch. E. Moselson, secretary; Rabbi Simon Glazer, of Kansas City, Mo.; American Star Lodge, No. 308, Independent Order B'rith Abraham, of Salem, Mass., Gerald Winer, secretary; Taunton Lodge, Independent Order B'rith Abraham, of Taunton, Mass., Hyman Baron, president; Zionist District of North Adams, Mass., Phillip Solomon, president; Congregation Agudath Achim, No. 3, of Taunton, Mass., F. J. Dana, president; Toro Lodge, Independent Order B'rith Abraham, of Taunton, Mass., W. W. Ells, president; Salem Hebrew Sheltering Society, of Salem, Mass., H. Winer, president; the conference of representatives of Jewish national and central organizations, representing all elements of the Jewish population of America, indorsed by American Jewish Committee (Louis Marshall, president); Union of Orthodox Rabbis (Rabbi M. Z. Margolis, president); Independent Order B'rith Sholom (Solomon Kraus, grand master); Independent Order B'rith Abraham (Judge Aaron J. Levy, grand master); Zionist Organization of America (Louis Lipsky, general secretary); Progressive Order of the West; Independent Western Star Order; Independent Order B'rith Sholom of Baltimore; Hadassah (Miss Alice L. Seligsberg, president); Order Sons of Zion (Judge Jacob S. Strahl, grand master); Mizrachi Organization of America (Rabbi Meyer Berlin, president); Jewish Labor Party; Poale Zion of America; Histadruth Ivrith; Ziere Zion of America; United Synagogues of America (Rabbi Elias L. Solomon, president; faculty of Rabbinical College of America; Jewish National Workers' Alliance; Federation of Jewish Farmers of America; Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society (John L. Bernstein, president); Federation of Russian Polish Jews; United Rumanian Jews of America; Federation of Ukrainian Jews; Federation of Baltic and Lithuanian Jews; Federation of Bessarabian Jews; Federation of Hungarian Jews; Independent Order Free Sons of Israel; Salem Misrachi Society, of Salem, Mass., H. Freedman, president; Salem Hebrew Ladies' Aid Society, of Salem, Mass., Besse Shribman, president; Salem Hebrew School, of Salem, Mass.; Max Harpel, treasurer; Salem Keren Hayesod, of Salem, Mass., Sam Axelrod, treasurer; Bethel Synagogue, of Dorchester, Mass., Rabbi David M. Shohet; Congregation B'nai B'rith of Somerville, Mass., Rabbi S. U. Friederman; Congregation Sharei Jerusalem, of Boston, Mass., Rabbi Aaron Gorovitz; United Hebrew Orthodox Congregations of Cambridge and Somerville, Mass., Rabbi Henry R. Gold; Blue Hill Avenue Synagogue, of Roxbury, Mass., Rabbi Louis M. Epstein; Crawford Street Synagogue, of Roxbury, Mass., Rabbi B. Boruchoff; Beth Israel and Agudath Achim Synagogues, of Malden, Mass., Rabbi J. Abrams; Temple Ohaibi Sholom, Union Park Street, Boston, Mass., Rabbi H. H. Rubenovitz; Temple Mishkan Tefila, of Roxbury, Mass., Rabbi A. M. Shershevsky; Eretz Israel and Anshei Polan Synagogues, of Boston, Mass., Rabbi Philip I. Israelite; Orthodox Rabbis of Baltimore, Md.; United Synagogues of Jersey City, N. J., Harry Max, president; the Young Israel, of Dorchester, Mass., Moses Lesser, president; Congregational Bethel, of Dorchester, Mass., Rabbi Joseph Levenson, president; Congregation Beth Hamdrash Hagodol, of Roxbury, Mass., S. J. Golding, president; Junior Council of Temple Bethel, of Dorchester, Mass., Dr. A. Shubow, president; the Commercial Appeal, of Memphis, Tenn.; the Hebrew Athletic Club of Worcester, Mass.; Congregation B'rith Sholen, of Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Mr. LODGE. I also present individual petitions of 248 citizens of Massachusetts, favoring the passage of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) for the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and also telegrams from the Palestine National League, protesting against the joint resolution, which I move be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I also present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Boston, Mass., in the nature of a petition, praying for the establishment of Armenia as an independent State. The resolutions are brief. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, citizens of Boston, assembled at Faneuil Hall, on the 16th day of April, 1922, do hereby declare that—

Whereas the Armenians from the beginning of the World War fought on the side of the Allies against the Central Powers and Turkey at a tremendous sacrifice of men and property; and

Whereas the allied powers by the treaty of Sevres recognized them as an ally and solemnly promised independence to Armenia; and

Whereas the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, has, at the request of the allied powers, defined the boundaries of the independent Armenia, including the four Armenian Provinces of Van, Bitlis, Erzroom, and Trebizond; and

Whereas at the recent Paris conference the allied foreign ministers have agreed again to subject said Armenian Provinces to the sovereiguty of Turkey, the execution of which agreement would constitute one of the greatest crimes of history, leading to further massacres, to estrangement of peoples, and ultimately to international war; and

Whereas the United States, as an associated power in the World War and by her important contribution to the victory, has the right and duty to be heard in the settlement of this, one of the most momentous of war issues: Be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to express to the allied powers American disapproval of this betrayal of the Armenian people, and to demand that the pledges made to the Armenian people be carried out by the establishment of an independent Armenian State; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State, to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committees of both Houses of Congress, to the allied powers, and to the League of Nations.

Adopted unanimously.

CHARLES W. ELIOT,
Chairman.
ALBERT BUSHNELL HART,
Secretary.

Mr. KELLOGG presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Fergus Falls, Minn., remonstrating against the passage of a compulsory Sunday observance bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the signatures, as follows:

PETITION TO CONGRESS.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Believing (1) in the separation of church and State;

(2) That Congress is prohibited by the first amendment to the Constitution from enacting any law enforcing the observance of any religious institution or looking toward a union of church and state or of religion and civil government;

(3) That any such legislation is opposed to the best interests of both church and State; and

(4) That the first step in this direction is a dangerous step and should be opposed by every lover of liberty:

We, the undersigned adult residents of Fergus Falls, State of Minnesota, earnestly petition your honorable body not to pass any compulsory Sunday observance bill which aims to regulate Sunday observance by civil force under penalty for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oswego, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented resolutions adopted by the United Presbytery of Albany at the United Presbyterian Church of Schenectady, and the Presbytery of Syracuse at the First Ward Presbyterian Church of Syracuse, both in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Syracuse at the First Ward Presbyterian Church of Syracuse and the United Presbytery of Albany at the United Presbyterian Church of Schenectady, both in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the United Presbytery of Albany at the United Presbyterian Church of Schenectady, and the Presbytery of Syracuse at the First Ward Presbyterian Church of Syracuse, both in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Sidney at the United Presbyterian Church of Bellefontaine, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Sidney at the United Presbyterian Church of Bellefontaine, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Sidney at the United Presbyterian Church of Bellefontaine, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from Rabbi Israel Miller Heubath Him Gudath Achem Congregation; the Zionist Organization of Lorain, Sam Barker, president, Isadore Jacoby, secretary; and the Hebrew Benevolent Aid Association, I. Blumenthal, president, N. Zadikoff, secretary, of Lorain; and the Congregation Beth Jacob, by Rabbi E. Pelchovitz, M. Beim, president, of Columbus, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 191, favoring the establishment in Palestine of the National Home for the Jewish people, in accordance with the Balfour declaration, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEWBERRY:

A bill (S. 3489) to continue the Naval Militia as a part of the Naval Reserve Force; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LADD:

A bill (S. 3490) to continue the district land offices at Minot and Williston, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENT.

Mr. DIAL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution (S. Res. 280) was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, which committee is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the acts of the Alien Property Custodian and the administration of the Alien Property Custodian's office, and particularly to investigate the following matters and things: (a) The seizure and appraisal of property; the care of the property seized, whether or not waste has been permitted in relation thereto and the costs and fees allowed paid for such care; (b) the sale and conversion of property by the Alien Property Custodian, whether or not authorized by law; (c) whether such conversions have been by public sale or through private negotiations; (d) whether or not the moneys received by such conversions were adequate and represent the real value of the properties converted; (e) whether or not sales have been made to agents, officials, attorneys, or other persons having fiduciary relations to such property; (f) the sale of patents, trade-marks, and trade names to the so-called Chemical Foundation, a corporation of Delaware, or to any other persons or corporations, and the sale of properties of the Bosch Magneto Co.; (g) and further, to investigate the relations of the Department of Justice to the business and affairs of the Alien Property Custodian, whether there has been any influence or pressure exerted by any Government official or officials, or other persons, to prevent criminal or civil proceedings in relation to any of such transaction; and generally to investigate all matters touching the legality, good faith, and necessity of all transactions and conversions affecting the property held in trust by the Alien Property Custodian.

The committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to sit during the session or during any recess of the Senate and at such places as may be deemed advisable. Any subcommittee duly authorized thereto shall have the same powers as are conferred upon said select committee by this resolution.

JAMES W. PETERS.

Mr. BALL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 281), which (with the accompanying paper) was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint James W. Peters a messenger, who shall be paid $20 per month in addition to the $40 per month he is now receiving, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington it was Ordered, That the papers referred to the Committee on Printing November 17, 1921, relating to "the status of Government-owned and Government-controlled corporations" be withdrawn.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION (S. DOC. NO. 188).

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some time ago the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] presented and secured an order for printing as a public document a brief prepared by Mr. McClatchy in regard to the Japanese question, entitled "Japanese immigration and colonization." It was printed as a public document. A number of citizens of California have sent to me a very short reply brief to that, and they ask that that also be printed as a public document in justice to their views. I ask unanimous consent that this reply brief be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the matter referred to by him be printed as a public document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRIBUTION OF FREE SEEDS.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the consideration of the annual agricultural appropriation bill some statements were made which reflected upon the care exercised by the Secretary of Agriculture in the selection of seeds for free distribution, and a very eminent Senator made the statement that those seeds did not germinate; that they were purchased in order to add to the coffers of the seedmen. These and other statements which were made I think should be refuted, and the refutation comes from the Secretary of Agriculture in a letter addressed to me under date of April 15, 1922. I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope that may be done. I made the statement referred to by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] in reference to the seeds not germinating. That occurred, however, three or four years ago when I tried the experiment. I, too, have received a very nice letter from the Secretary of Agriculture in regard to the matter, and I have no doubt that a change has been made in that respect.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Massachusetts tell us the result of his experiments?

Mr. LODGE. I did so the other day when the agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration. When I planted those seeds only about one-third of them came up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter presented by the Senator from Oregon from the Secretary of Agriculture will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, April 15, 1922.

Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCNARY: As my attention has been called to the discussion in the Senate on the 13th instant of the congressional seed distribution item in the pending agricultural appropriation bill, it has occurred to me that you may be interested in the methods followed by the department in securing seed of desirable varieties suitable for growth in the various sections of the country and of high purity and viability.

In purchasing seed for this distribution it is the practice of the department to secure quotations on the seeds needed from reputable dealers only. The tenders submitted are opened by the department board of awards and the awards are made to the lowest bidder, with the proviso that the seed shall be of satisfactory appearance, true to varietal name and type, and of the highest commercial germinability. As soon as the shipments of seed arrive at the department warehouse samples are drawn from the bulk and these are carefully examined and tested in our seed laboratory for purity and viability.

The standards of purity and viability which the department has set up for the seed purchased are unusually high, in fact appreciably higher than those generally prevailing in the trade. If any lot of seed delivered to the department does not come up to these standards, it is rejected and returned to the shipper at his expense. It may interest you to know that for the distribution just closed, which included approximately 960,000 pounds of seed, the department found it necessary to reject 94,000 pounds, either because of unsatisfactory purity or because of low germination, or both.

Only seed of thoroughly established varieties of vegetable and annual flowering plants is included in the distribution, and in order that every reasonable precaution may be taken to get seed of desirable sorts, the department conducts annual tests in its trial grounds at the Arlington Farm, Rosslyn, Va. In these trial-ground tests each lot of seed that has been purchased for the congressional seed distribution is tested in comparison with packeted seed of the same varieties obtained from the best commercial sources. These trial-ground tests not only indicate the viability of the seed under garden conditions but also its trueness to variety and type. In addition to the regular trial-ground tests at Arlington Farm, less extensive tests are made at certain of our field stations in other parts of the country, these in a measure to serve as a check on the tests made at Arlington Farm. I am advised that in these field tests for a number of years past it has but rarely occurred that a lot of vegetable or flower seed purchased by the department for this distribution has not proved true to varietal name. With vegetable seeds the number of such cases has not exceeded 1 per cent.

The viability of the species and varieties of the annual flowering plants generally grown in American gardens, which include those comprised in the congressional seed distribution, averages considerably lower than is the case with vegetable seeds, this being an inherent characteristic of the seeds of these flowering plants. This is thoroughly established by accurate tests and well known to the seed trade, but in the case of these flowering-plant seeds, the department trial-ground tests have proved fully equal, and in many cases superior, to the packeted seeds of similar type and variety obtainable in the American market.

In the case of bulbs, of course, it is not possible to make tests other than field tests, and the results of such can not be available at the time the bulbs are distributed. However, the department endeavors to deal only with reliable bulb growers and in its purchases of bulbs withholds a certain percentage of the purchase price until the results of the trial-ground tests are available. This has been found to practically assure the delivery of good flower-producing stocks. A considerable proportion of the bulbs recently distributed have been grown by the department in connection with its effort to develop an American bulb industry, and these in general have proved very satisfactory.

The methods of buying and testing seeds and bulbs outlined above have been practiced by the department for several years and have been so thoroughly tested in practice that the evidence of the high quality of the seeds and bulbs which the department provides for this distribution is very convincing. There can, I think, be no question that they are superior to the best average quality of the standard varieties offered for sale by the leading seedsmen of the country.

While in any extensive seed-handling activity there is always a possibility of an occasional error, the department is believed to be exercising every reasonable precaution and making every effort practicable to insure the high quality of the seeds and bulbs included in the congressional seed distribution.

Very truly yours, HENRY WALLACE, Secretary.

SPECIAL CANCELING STAMPS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 10740. The House has agreed to the Senate amendments, and I ask for the consideration of the report.

The report was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND,
THOMAS STERLING,
DAVID I. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. STEENERSON,
W. W. GRIEST,
THOS. M. BELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRINTING OF TARIFF BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate Concurrent Resolution 21, providing for printing additional copies of the tariff bill, which were, in line 6, to strike out "27,000" and insert "15,000"; in line 6, to strike out "10,000" and insert "5,000"; and in line 7, to strike out "15,000" and insert "8,000."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. KING. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I have not yet had time to talk with the Senator from North Dakota about it, but I promised upon yesterday to request that we go on with the calendar until 2 o'clock to-day. I ask the Senator from North Dakota if he has objection to that course? If he has, I shall not press it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope we shall not go on with the calendar to-day.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator desires to go on with the tariff bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; notice was given that we would proceed with the bill to-day, and I hope we can do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that House bill 7456, the tariff bill, be laid before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McNary	Simmons
Ball	Gooding	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Harris	Newberry	Sterling
Broussard	Heflin	Nicholson	Sutherland
Bursum	Johnson	Norbeck	Swanson
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Townsend
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth
Colt	Kellogg	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Kendrick	Page	Warren
Curtis	Keyes	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Dial	King	Pittman	Watson, Ind.
du Pont	Ladd	Poindexter	Weller
Ernst	La Follette	Ransdell	Willis
Fernald	Lenroot	Reed
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Robinson
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is detained on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is detained on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I now renew my motion that the tariff bill may be laid before the Senate for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industry of the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before proceeding with the consideration of the tariff bill in detail I think it appropriate to comment very briefly upon its general purposes and the conditions which are sought to be met by its provisions.

Mr. President, never before in times of peace have such difficult and such serious problems confronted the country, its industries, and its whole social fabric as those which challenge its attention to-day. Never before have the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate had presented to them such a difficult task as that involved in the making of this tariff bill. We have been often advised, and the advice is well founded, that of all times in our history this is the very worst time to formulate and put into effect a new tariff measure; but, Mr. President, it is equally true that of all times in the history of the country this is the time in which a protective tariff is most needed to sustain our American industries and our millions of people dependent upon them. The condition demands action, and, no matter how difficult the problem or how slender the hope of enacting a law that will exactly square with every requirement in these most abnormal times, Congress must meet the task with a patriotic determination to enact a tariff law that will at least guide us into the haven of normal prosperity.

Heretofore we have had comparatively little difficulty in applying as the standard of measurement in fixing our rates the difference between the domestic and foreign costs of production. These differences for the most part have been reasonably stable and certain; but since the 11th day of November, 1918, we have lived in a new world. Old landmarks have been swept away; old guides have become misleading.

During the first three years of the World War the principal source of supply for the Allied Governments was the United States. We took advantage of that war condition, and for three years preceding our entry into the conflict this country enormously enriched itself at the expense of the struggling nations of Europe.

This accelerated progress in the accumulation of wealth brought with it a vastly higher standard of wages and vastly increased earnings of capital. The American appetite for both had become so intensified that when we entered the conflict in 1917 the impetus already gained sent us forward into the field of still higher wages and still more enormous capital returns, which continued to mount skyward for nearly two years after the armistice had been signed and the war was over.

But, Mr. President, there came, as there must come, an end to all such mad flights and resulting extravagances. The manufacturer's cost, his increased overhead expenses, the tremendous rise in freight rates, soon brought the prices of our mills and factories up to a point beyond the reach of the consuming public, and a quick and decisive reaction began in the last quarter of 1920. This reaction was aggravated by the sharp decline in the price of agricultural products. The farmers of the country could no longer purchase liberally manufactured products. The millions of clerks, teachers, professional and vocational men and women—those whose earnings had not increased on a parity with the average earnings of organized labor—found themselves unable to continue their purchases of manufactured products. We all found the bottom of our purse at about the same time.

Under normal conditions Europe had been able to absorb most of our surplus of agricultural products at such purchasing prices as gave us some slight profit; but ruined, bankrupt, tax-burdened Europe could no longer absorb this surplus, and agriculture suffered more of a decline than any other industry. The other industries rapidly followed.

While on this side of the ocean the cost of production increased until about January, 1921, just the reverse condition was operating in Europe, with the exception of one country. Wages in the vanquished country enormously declined. In other countries, measured by the only stable currency in the world, the American dollar, the spread between American cost of production and foreign cost of production has been growing ever greater and greater. The depreciated currency of the Old World has helped to widen the breach.

The gulf separating the cost of production at home and abroad is now so deep and so wide that tariffs which would be sufficiently high to protect our markets against the countries of cheapest production would amount to an embargo against all the rest of the world. To reconstruct our commercial bridge across this chasm two things must operate at the same time in the United States. First, a protective tariff law that will bring the cost of the foreign product when landed in the United States to more nearly equal the cost of the American product in our markets. Second, such reduction in the cost of production in the United States as will more nearly approach and neutralize the difference in cost between the home and the foreign product.

Mr. President, we have written our tariff law on the basis of both revenue and protection. We believe we have made no rate so low that it will compel the American producer to surrender the American market to the foreign producer, if he exercises proper economy in the manufacture and marketing of his product. On the other hand, we do not believe we have made any rate so high as to prevent reasonable foreign competition.

We have tried to protect the American producer, believing that he is entitled to first consideration in his own home market. We have tried to sustain the standard of laborers' wages in the United States and to maintain their higher standard of living in this country, believing such a policy is for the very best interests of both the producer and the consumer. At the same time we have tried carefully to guard the interests of the great consuming public against any unjust charge for the commodities which make up their daily requirements.

We are, therefore, Mr. President, brought face to face with the problem of protecting the American standard of wages and the American standard of living through the protection of our American markets.

We are now to answer the question whether or not we shall continue the policy of protection to our American industries or surrender that policy. To continue it means a most stringent protective system. To surrender it, in the light of the distress and calamity that would surely befall the country, is unthinkable. No matter how ardent a free trader one may be, I do not believe there is one living in the United States who to-day would dare, if it were in his power, to attempt to put into operation his free-trade philosophy.

I shall not stop now to discuss the advantages of a higher standard of wages, with its consequent higher cost of living, as against a lower wage scale, with consequent lower cost of living. It is sufficient to say that for nearly three-fourths of a century we have been living upon the higher wage and higher standard of living plane, and any sudden reversal of that policy would disrupt our entire industrial life and bring about a most appalling catastrophe to the country.

We all recognize the stock arugment so often used by the opponents of protection. They say to the individual producer, "What per cent of the entire product consumed in the United States do you produce?" The witness may answer, "Our concern produces less than one-tenth." The retort then comes, "Then you would tax all of the American people a 30 or 40 per cent higher price that you who produce less than one-tenth of their requirements may live?" And so they can select a thousand different industries in the United States which produce less than 50 per cent of the American consumption, or whose employees constitute less than 50 per cent of the population, and make the same comment. But, Mr. President, if we are to sustain this country as a producing country, as a manufacturing country, we must sustain the many units constituting the whole, even though one standing alone may not seem so important. It takes all the units to make the whole, and we can give the policy of protection to the whole only by giving it to the several units.

Our soil to-day produces more than the American public consumes. The depressed prices of agricultural products are due to our surplus, augmented, of course, by the Old World bankruptcy. By decreasing the number of American consumers of agricultural products you would drive them back to the soil, increase the number of producers and the quantity of the product, and bring agriculture to a worse condition than during these most trying times.

A witness before the Finance Committee—and, by the way, he was a stockman—suggested that the packers of the country ought to conduct the retailing of meats throughout the United States; that with their great organization they could sell the meats which they produce at an enormous saving to the American consumers, and even then make profits sufficient to pay the stock raisers a far better price for their stock. The witness cited the enormous spread between the prices which the packer receives for his product and the prices at which the same product is retailed to the consumer. I ventured to ask him what he would do with the hundreds of thousands, including their employees, of little meat-market men in all the country towns, with the meat dispensers in the cities. He replied that they would have to seek other employment. "Would you send them back into the stock-raising business?" He saw danger there, as anyone would—the danger of converting this vast number of live-stock consumers into producers.

This is true of our agricultural situation throughout the whole country. We are already producing such a surplus that our prices are low, and yet many are preaching a policy of inducing more people to go into the farming business, thereby to decrease the number of consumers and increase the number of producers. What a fallacy! What a short-sighted theory! What the farmer needs is the greatest number of consumers of his product. If he can make the home consumption greater than the home production, even though the deficit does not exceed 1 per cent, then, with a proper tariff wall, he can secure a just price for his product.

For the most part, wheat is a drug on the American market. As stated by President Harding in his address to the Congress, a bumper crop of wheat in the United States often brings in less cash to the farmer than a very much smaller crop. We want more acres of farm land planted to other products. We want to encourage the farmers in this country to sow millions of acres to flax, to hemp, to onions, to beans, and other such products. We, therefore, give good protection to flax. We give encouragement to the production of hemp and beans, and like products. We want to reduce the wheat surplus.

So, Mr. President, the real issue in this tariff bill, and the only legitimate issue, is whether the American market belongs to the American producer or whether it belongs to the foreign producer—whether it shall be turned over to the foreigner, who can produce at a lower cost, or be retained by the American, who must produce at a higher cost—whether we shall continue to pay our laborers a wage very much higher than the average foreign wage or force them into competition with the extremely low-paid labor of the Old World.

This Congress comes from the people pledged to the principle of protection to American manufacturers, to American farmers, and to American laborers. In reporting this bill we have done nothing more than to carry out this pledge. We have done nothing less than this.

I think we can justly say that never before in any tariff bill has the interest of agriculture received such favorable consideration as in the construction of this proposed measure. We have guarded the interest of the farmer as much as it is possible for a tariff bill to yield him protection. He has been underpaid for his labor for many, many years. Agricultural depression has made itself felt throughout the country and has been a big factor in the closing of our manufacturing establishments.

Even if this protection means any increase in the cost of living, the public will be more than compensated, because every dollar of benefit to the agricultural class will be reflected in the increased production of our mills to meet the farmers' increased purchasing power and in increased employment of American labor. But, Mr. President, in my opinion it will not increase the cost of living on the whole one cent. It needs but a glance at the farmer's price and the ultimate consumer's price of agricultural products to show that there is a sufficient spread between them to absorb many times over the little additional benefit which the farmer receives.

To show how deeply American agriculture is concerned with the prosperity of American manufactures and how dependent the one is on the other, I wish to give some figures which are furnished by the 1922 report of Armour & Co. In this report it is stated that the farmer is working for 25 per cent, or thereabouts, of what he made two years ago, while the city man is getting nearly as much, and in many cases as much, as he did during the war; that this has put the farmer at a serious disadvantage as a purchaser, and the industries of the country have suffered accordingly; that while his cattle brought him an average of $11.17 per hundredweight in 1919, he received only $6.74 in 1921, and that this was lower than the pre-war price of 1914; that porkers which brought $14 a hundredweight in the fall of 1920 were worth little more than $7 a year later; that while the total exports of meat products for the first 10 months of 1921 were 11 per cent greater in tonnage than the corresponding period of 1920, they were less in dollar value by 30 per cent, reflecting the inability of Europe, with its adverse rates of money exchange and its generally impoverished condition, to buy American products unless the prices were very low.

But here is the principal matter to which I direct attention: Domestic consumption of meat products, which in 1900 was 185.5 pounds per capita, was but 154.3 pounds per capita in 1920, and considerably less than this, although the figures are not brought down to date, in 1921. Hard times mean lessened consumption of farm products.

The tariff-bill reviewers of the country have had much to say about how this bill compares with the present tariff law and the Payne-Aldrich law. I think it proper to say that the committee gave but casual attention to either of these laws. The whole industrial, commercial, and economic world has changed since these bills were enacted. The committee had to deal with present-day conditions and to rest its conclusions upon those conditions and upon such changes as might be reasonably anticipated. Any comparison with either of these old laws would avail little.

The only question now before the Congress is, Does this proposed law meet the present situation as nearly as it can be met by tariff legislation? It may be that in some instances the rate of duty is as low as the present defunct law. We know that on the whole the rates are very much lower than in the House bill. By imposing duties upon some products which have heretofore been placed upon the free list, and also increasing the duty on some articles which were carrying too low a rate of duty, we have been compelled to increase the compensatory duty on the manufactured article into which the dutiable article enters, and in such cases we may have found it necessary to make rates even higher than the Payne-Aldrich Act. Thus, where we placed a duty on hides, which had been on the free list under the Payne-Aldrich Act, it was necessary to give a compensatory duty on the things made from hides. Otherwise the same hides would come in in the form of manufactured articles and nullify the benefit which we sought to give the cattle raiser by imposing this duty.

Mr. President, I have read with interest the criticisms made of this measure since it was reported to the Senate; and when I read the declaration of some of our manufacturers that the duties in any schedule are so low that their business will be absolutely ruined, and then read the declaration of the importers that the duties in that schedule are so high that their importing business will be absolutely destroyed, I am confirmed in my belief that the rates fixed by the committee are about right.

With the rapid changes going on in the world in the cost of production, in the fluctuation of exchange, in the increase of labor's cost in some cases and decrease in others, any rate which we may now establish as being the proper rate may be found to work an injustice either as against the American manufacturer or the American importer. We have attempted to meet this by a provision permitting the Executive, on a finding of fact that the rates are so high that they amount to an embargo or are unjust or too obstructive to fair competition and fair commerce or so low that our industries are being destroyed, to lower or advance the rates within fixed limits to meet those situations. The President will have to guide him all the data which an industrious Tariff Commission has gathered and is gathering in relation to our foreign commerce. That commission, therefore, will become a forum in which any complaints may be lodged as to the unfairness or the injustice of any rate; and, through the President, we will be able to rectify any injustice that may become pronounced by reason of future fluctuations in market prices.

Mr. President, I think that about 60 per cent of our dutiable imports carry an ad valorem rate and about 40 per cent specific duties.

The bill as it passed the House made the valuation of comparable American articles the basis for levying all ad valorem duties. The Committee on Finance of the Senate most fully and earnestly considered this new departure, and in connection with it also considered the taking as a basis the selling price of the imported article in the United States. There are many arguments that can be urged in favor of the American valuation as the basis of our ad valorem duties. No one who has ever given the subject consideration can fail to note the injustice of the foreign valuation standard of fixing tariffs growing out of the disparity between the cost of production of the same article in the different countries. If an article costs to produce 50 cents in Japan, $1 in Germany, $2 in France, and $3 in Great Britain, and we levy a duty of 20 per cent on the foreign valuation, we charge the Japanese importer for the privilege of entering our markets with his product 10 cents, the German importer 20 cents, the French importer 40 cents, and the British importer 60 cents. Thus we have a range of import duties on practically the same article, of the same intrinsic value, of from 10 to 60 cents, or a difference of 600 per cent. We tried to avoid these discriminations by placing a specific duty wherever it was possible to do so. But inasmuch as 60 per cent at least of our imports are such that it is impossible to levy specific duties, we are forced to continue duties which are discriminatory as between the manufacturers in different countries.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Of course, the Senator means by that 60 per cent of the dutiable list, not of our entire imports?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; about 60 per cent of the dutiable list. The evidence before the committee, however, shows that for the most part the foreign manufacturer, who produces at a cost considerably below pre-war cost, is selling in this country very close to the American price and reaping enormous profits. If an article costs 20 cents to manufacture and is shipped from the foreign country to our American market, and the same article costs $1 to produce in this country and place on the market, and both the American manufacturer and the foreign producer sell the same in the American market for $1.10, the American producer has a profit of 10 cents and the foreign producer a profit of 90 cents. The American valuation system would compel the foreign manufacturer to share to some extent these abnormal profits with the Government of the United States for the privilege of using our markets. Therefore, the American valuation—the wholesale selling price in this country—if it could be applied, would, of course, be the fairest and most equitable system. The Government would receive the same amount on a given value, no matter from what country imported. The importers would be treated alike, and exact justice would be done as between the exporting nations.

There is a general impression, which is entirely erroneous, that the adoption of the American valuation would increase the amount of duty. Of course, if we simply apply the same rates under the American valuation system as upon the foreign valuation, that would be the case. But if the American valuation should be adopted the rates imposed would be very much lower, so much lower as to bring about the same equality between the duty that would be obtained under the one rate and that which would be obtained under the other.

While the Committee on Finance considered it best at this time under present abnormal conditions to continue the old system of basing the rate upon the foreign value of the article, it nevertheless, as it established a rate for each item, had its experts make an estimate of what would be an equivalent rate of duty based on the American valuation, so that if Congress should finally adopt that standard we could quickly change the rates to meet the views of Congress.

I shall not repeat here the difficulties which the majority of the committee considered of sufficient importance to induce them to continue the old system of foreign valuation as the basis of our ad valorem rates. They are fully set out on pages 4 to 9, inclusive, of the committee's report. I especially invite the consideration of that portion of the report when we consider the question of the basis of valuation.

Mr. President, in reporting this bill the committee has done all it can do to help the American people to help themselves by proposing such tariff legislation as will give confidence to business and by assuring them an American market to operate in. This proposed legislation will open the way to prosperity in the United States, but it will not unaided bring about this result. The American people must do the rest, and right here I want to say a word to the American manufacturer and the American laborer in our factories. This bill is intended to, and I believe it will, sufficiently protect your market against any excessive foreign invasion, but just remember that your great customer is the American public. Just remember that over 90 per cent of all your products must be consumed in the United States, right here at home.

I think I am clearly within the actual facts when I say that two-thirds of the American people, the breadwinners in the United States, are not receiving an income any greater than their pre-war income. The net earnings of the agricultural class are, on the whole, below the pre-war income. When we deduct the rents, or in lieu of rents the added taxes and cost of up-keep of the homes, of another one-third of our population who are also breadwinners, it will be found that their net income is also below their pre-war income.

These people are all consumers of the products of our American factories. They are their principal customers. They purchase more than nine-tenths of all their products, and when I say that these people can not spend any more than they earn, I think I have sufficiently foreshadowed the necessity on the part of the manufacturers of bringing down the production cost of their commodities to within the purchasing reach of this vast army of American farmers and American wage earners—a reach that can not extend one inch beyond the limit of their earnings.

We have tried to help bridge this gulf between the production cost of manufactured articles and the consumer's ability to buy them by doing what we can to increase the purchasing power of the latter, and it is now up to the manufacturer to do his part to bring his cost down to meet the size of the consumer's pocketbook. With the present high cost of living it would be most unjust to start his economy by forcing a reduction in the wages of his employees. I am not a manufacturer or an employee, but being an American citizen who must buy the articles that result from the capital of one and the labor of the other, and knowing that the principal cause of idle mills and idle men is this disparity between manufacturers' cost of production and consumers' ability to pay, I think I can suggest a course that will do more for our national prosperity than can be accomplished by any kind of law, tariff or otherwise. Let the manufacturer be satisfied with a most meager return upon his investment for a while, then let the employees increase their efficiency to the highest possible degree. It is a healthful sign that this efficiency is being increased, but it is true that it has not yet reached its pre-war standard. Then if the retailer will just follow the manufacturer, the great American public, now hungry for more and better things, will give employment to all to supply its demands and old-time prosperity will again reign throughout the land.

Mr. President, the Actuary of the Treasury Department has not had time to complete in detail his estimate of the revenue which will probably be derived from this bill. As soon as he completes the estimate I shall have it printed in the RECORD. I can say now, however, that it is expected that this bill, if enacted into law as reported by the committee, will yield a revenue, in round numbers, of about $350,000,000.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, that the bill may be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments may be first considered. I would avoid the necessity of reading the whole bill unless Senators on the other side of the aisle so desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, ordinarily I would not object to such a request, but I feel that I must do so under the circumstances. I have stated to the Senate heretofore the utter inability of the minority members of the committee to prepare themselves for the consideration of the bill within the time which has elapsed between its presentation and to-day. We have been working, and working very diligently, in order to get ourselves ready in the hope that in readiness we might find facility in the consideration and disposition of the different items in the bill.

I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that I am not ready to-day to present my views with respect to the bill. I am not ready to-day nor are my associates composing the minority of the committee to begin the discussion of the amendments proposed by the committee to the bill. I assure the majority that as soon as we are ready to do so we shall not obstruct, but shall do everything we can to facilitate the speediest possible final determination of this very important measure.

For these reasons I feel compelled to object to the proposition of the Senator from North Dakota that we shall immediately begin the consideration of amendments to the bill.

I have had to do with tariff bills for the last 21 years in this body. I can not recall an instance where we began the consideration of Senate committee amendments until after there had been weeks of general discussion not only of the bill but of the different schedules of the bill. I am of the opinion, speaking out of my experience in connection with the other tariff bills, that detailed action upon specific amendments will be greatly facilitated by a reasonable general discussion, familiarizing Senators with the contents of the different schedules, and making it unnecessary when the amendments are reached to have the detailed discussion that would otherwise be necessary.

I do not think any time would be lost by a reasonable general discussion, but the proposition here is within an hour after the bill has been taken up for the first time that we shall begin the consideration of the amendments, with absolutely no discussion except the report of the majority of the committee, which I wish to say now is a very meager report, though I do not want to criticize it, and the general discussion of the Senator from North Dakota this morning. The Senator's speech, of course, we all recognize possessed those qualities of force and vigor which characterize all his utterances, but his discussion has been of general principles and not of any of the particular provisions of the bill. Under the circumstances, Mr. President, I shall have to object, and I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, just one moment. Possibly the Senator from North Carolina misunderstood the request which I made. It was that the bill might be read informally and that instead of going through the formal reading of the bill it might be taken up for action on the amendments. That did not mean, of course, that there was any proposition to force a vote upon any amendment before Senators had plenty of time and were ready to vote upon such amendments. It was simply to avoid the long time that would be necessarily taken by the Secretary in the reading of the bill, which, of course, would take all the afternoon, and perhaps very few would follow it or understand it as it would be read. That course seemed to me to be practically a waste of time, and I thought we could have the formal reading dispensed with and probably go on with the discussion of the bill any time to-day or to-morrow, or a discussion of any amendments that Senators might desire to discuss. I do not expect to call up an amendment and have that amendment voted upon to-day. That would be unfair.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand that the Senator expected amendments would be voted on to-day, but I understand the Senator expected, after the Secretary had devoted a few minutes to reading, that he would take up the first item in the bill which has been amended by the committee, and that we would begin at once the discussion of that specific amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator object that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the bill could go over——

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, it would take all afternoon for the Secretary to read it, and I dislike to impose that task either upon the Secretary or upon the Senate, because the reading will not be listened to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have told the Senator very frankly that I am not ready to begin the discussion of the amendments to-day.

Mr. McCUMBER. May there not be others who are ready?

Mr. SIMMONS. I know of no one who desires to speak, and I know of no one who has read the bill sufficiently to enable him to begin its consideration at this particular time.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if he will object to the formal reading being dispensed with, with the understanding that we shall begin the reading of the bill now and pass over the amendments, so that we can have the bill read for the record, and consider no amendments until after the bill is read and then refer back to the amendments, beginning with Title I of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. What would we do if the bill is to be kept before the Senate after it is read except to begin the consideration of the first amendment, if there is no one ready to speak?

Mr. SMOOT. I should think the Senate could take up the first title of the bill, and the amendments which are in that title, I assure the Senator, will take some time to discuss. That is the chemical schedule. I think there are Senators on both sides who want to discuss that schedule, and we might as well get that back of us. We need not do that until the bill has been read as suggested.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that the Senator who has been agreed upon to take special charge of that particular schedule advises me that he is not ready now to begin the consideration of the amendments in the schedule.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from North Dakota in his address this morning rather intimated that the question as to whether we should frame the bill on the basis of the American valuation or the foreign valuation would be presented to the Senate. I should like to know whether the Senator wants to present that phase of the bill first or proceed to amendments upon the theory that we are going to have the foreign valuation?

Mr. McCUMBER. The committee reported in favor of the foreign valuation, and the committee, through its chairman, will take that stand all the way through. I do not know that there is anyone in the Senate who will raise the question of the American valuation. The bill came over from the House with the adoption of the American-valuation basis. The Senator has undoubtedly read some of the comments by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, showing a very strong purpose to raise that question. I do not think that it will be raised in the Senate, although I may be in error.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I hope the Senator has stated what will be the result. So far as I am concerned I hope no one will insist that we shall take the so-called American-valuation or American-price plan. But the Senator indicated this morning that the committee has prepared a series of rates which would be applicable to the American-price plan, and it occurred to me that if there is anyone who is going to contend seriously for the American-price plan as the basis of the bill, we had better take that question up first and dispose of it before we begin the consideration of the amendments. The amendments proposed are on the basis of the foreign valuation or the foreign price, and if we are even to consider the question of the American-price valuation in fixing the rates we had better dispose of that question now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me explain the matter to the Senator so that there may be no misunderstanding. The majority of the committee in framing this bill had under consideration three standards of valuation as the basis of tariff rates: First, that which was contained in the Fordney bill, which based the rates upon the selling price of comparable articles in the United States. Early in the discussion, I think, the committee were unanimous that that was an impossibility; that it could not be carried out. The next suggestion which was presented was the basing of our rates upon the selling price of the foreign article in the American market; but as that required a great deal of thought and discussion it was considered best to fix the rates upon the old system of foreign valuation, and at the same time to have made a comparison between the respective rates under the various standards to ascertain whether some other system could be properly applied, and to consider the administrative features. Therefore, to guide us as to whether in the end we should adopt the one or the other, we had one of our experts convert the foreign-valuation rates into equivalent rates of duty based upon the American selling price of the same article, so that we would have that before us before finally determining which basis we should adopt. After full consideration the majority of the committee thought it was best to formulate the bill and put it through upon the old basis of foreign values; and, of course, we then discarded both of the American-valuation bases. So, unless some Member of the Senate raises the question and discusses it, we shall go ahead and put this bill through the Senate upon the foreign-valuation basis.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does not the Senator believe that it would be advisable, first, to take up that section of the bill which specifies the basis of the valuation and have that question first settled?

Mr. McCUMBER. I should say not. I should say it would not be a good plan to take that question up unless it is raised in the Senate, and I hope it will not be raised. If it is raised in the Senate, of course, we shall have to discuss it pro and con.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Why not adopt that section of the bill first? If there is no objection to it, it can be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly should be very glad to have that done.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Suppose the Senator brings that question up now and let us adopt the plan of valuation proposed by the committee without any discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the very question which the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has raised is inevitably presented by the parliamentary situation which we have without any Senator introducing the question by special amendment. We are considering amendments to the House bill. The House bill provides for the American valuation scheme. The Senate committee proposes to amend that. That situation raises the question, and it can not be escaped. Of course, we may desist from any discussion of it if we wish to, and we may vote on it when the Senate committee amendment to the House bill is offered; but, Mr. President, the situation that exists, in my judgment, makes it imperative that we shall discuss this very question.

The Senator from North Dakota advises us that a majority of the committee have agreed to substitute the foreign for the American valuation principle of the House bill, but he at the same time advises us that the committee had their experts make rates which his committee agreed to or was satisfied with in case the American valuation principle was ultimately agreed upon. It will not be agreed upon, I am sure, in the Senate; but that does not mean that it will not be agreed upon in conference. The House bill contains certain rates based upon the American valuation. Those rates were not satisfactory to a majority of the Finance Committee, and the committee have prepared a schedule of rates based on the American valuation, which, if we are going to have the American valuation, will be satisfactory to them. They are, we will say, lower than the House rates. Now, when the measure gets into conference, how easy it would be, if a deadlock should be created upon the question, for the Senate conferees, opposed by the House conferees, to accept the American valuation, substituting for the House rates the Senate rates; and if the conference report should be presented in that shape——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Just a moment. If the conferees should agree upon a report carrying the American valuation principle, with a different set of rates from those which are provided in the House bill, then we would be in the position that we could not vote against that principle without voting against everything in the conference report.

The point I make is this: The situation, in my judgment, requires that there should be at least reasonable discussion upon this question with a view of informing the country and with a view of influencing the House of Representatives, if you please, so that there will not be that pressure in the conference to force upon the conferees the House view of this matter.

I do not see how we are going to escape a discussion of that question. I think it would be bad policy for those who believe, as I believe and as the majority members of the Committee on Finance believe, in the foreign valuation principle as against the American valuation principle to refrain from such a discussion. I think we should buttress our position by an open discussion here in the Senate of the weaknesses and the faults of the American valuation system in order that we may influence, as I have said, opinion upon that question, which opinion will be reflected upon the Members of the House and the conferees, with a view to safeguarding whatever action the Senate may take with reference to the basis of valuation. In other words, Mr. President, it is not sufficient for the Senate to vote down the House proposition upon this question, but the Senate ought to put itself in a position of strength with the country and with the other side of the Capitol upon it.

I do not know what discussion of this question was had in the House. I know that they devote only a few days to the discussion of a tariff bill over there and could not devote more than a few hours to the discussion of this great question. I have not read the House debates, but I assume that the discussion of this question in the House was of the most inadequate and meager character, and that there has not been ample and sufficient discussion of the question before the country, and we ought to have it here. This is the great body which in the last analysis solidifies or strengthens the public opinion of the country upon a question of this character.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator undoubtedly misapprehends the purpose in ascertaining what duty a rate fixed upon the basis of the foreign valuation would impose as compared with a rate fixed on the American valuation basis. What the committee wanted to do was before we reported the bill to the Senate to have some guide in determining what standard of valuation we should follow. After most thorough consideration we adopted the old foreign valuation standard. We have given our reasons at great length in the report why we adopted the old standard instead of changing to the new.

I myself never believe in taking any time in discussing an issue which may never arise, and for that reason I was perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] that we settle that question unanimously here and have no discussion of it. By so doing we will gain this much—that question will be determined by the unanimous action of the Senate; and I do not see how it will be possible for the conferees on the part of the Senate ever to back down from that position. I still strongly believe that the House will agree to the valuation which we will submit to the House; but if it should not and we get into a deadlock, then there will be time enough to discuss the question upon which we are deadlocked. Nothing can prevent the Senator from discussing it fully, but we may never have to reach that condition, and I do not believe we will reach it. Why, then, the necessity of arguing the question here for days and possibly weeks when all the time will be entirely wasted? Having charge of this bill, I can say to the Senator most candidly that if, after it passes, the conferees on the part of the Senate should ever come back with an American valuation scheme, there will be full and ample opportunity to debate that question and to take the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that.

Mr. McCUMBER. But inasmuch as I do not believe for one moment that there will be any such change, why take weeks in discussing a matter that may never become an issue?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it will not become an issue here in this Chamber, because we all seem to take one view of this question, but it is certainly going to be an issue in the conference. The Senator from North Dakota says the Senate conferees will never yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not stated that.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House has said that the House will never yield upon that question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not put me in that attitude, for that would be a very discourteous way upon my part of discussing a bill which comes here with a strong vote from the House of Representatives. I stated simply that, with unanimous action on the part of the Senate of the United States in favor of the foreign-valuation plan, I did not see how it will be possible for the conferees to yield that point; but we must go into a conference without any declaration such as I have heard from the other side that we would not reach an agreement. I think we will.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not know how that may be; but if it shall transpire that there is a deadlock upon this question in conference and that that deadlock is compromised by accepting the prepared rates of the Senate committee instead of the House rates, then the question would arise on the conference report; and upon that question, while we might discuss it, we could not express our views by a negative vote without voting against the whole bill. My theory about this matter is that there ought to be some reasonable discussion of it, because there has been practically none or but little in the House, with a view to avoiding the possibility of a deadlock, with a view to creating a sentiment by enlightening the country and also furnishing information to the House that it probably did not get out of its immediate discussions, which would lead to a condition that would make it impossible for the American valuation to be substituted.

In addition to that, Mr. President, I want to say that you will have to discuss this question, because the principle of American valuation is written in the Senate amendment; not in its general application to the schedules of this bill, but in the powers which you have conferred upon the President of the United States. By your amendment you have delegated to the President of the United States extraordinary powers with reference to this bill. You have provided that the President, under certain conditions, may set aside the foreign valuation with reference to specific articles and specific schedules, and substitute for that basis of valuation the American valuation. Therefore you have by this amendment, indirectly it is true, but nevertheless substantially, brought this question before the body for its discussion in one of your own amendments. In other words, in one of your amendments you have conferred upon the President power to do a thing with reference to specific articles and specific schedules which you say the unanimous sentiment on the other side of the Chamber condemns as a vicious principle upon which rates are to be fixed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator one more question, and then I shall not bother him any more if he desires to have the bill read. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will be ready to go on in the morning with the discussion of some of the administrative features of the bill, he tells me; and I am going to ask the Senator if he will not consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, so as to avoid the long reading this afternoon, and then take it up in the morning?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator means to lay the bill aside temporarily?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; on the understanding that the formal reading will be dispensed with and that it will be laid aside until to-morrow morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the Senator will not press for any further consideration to-day unless some Senator is ready to speak?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not to-day.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, some of us want to be considered in regard to the dealings with this bill. There is only one reading of the bill to be had. We can have a formal reading and dispose of the third reading in that way, after which the bill is open for amendment and there has to be no further reading, or the third reading can be had by reading the bill for amendment. I think we had better go on with the bill, let it be read, and take its regular course.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rather agree with the Senator, because I think it is a bill that probably the Senate ought to hear read.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill be read, and then, when it is read, there will be no further reading of the text.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. That is, the third reading of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am willing that that course shall be followed if the Senator from North Carolina desires it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. But, Mr. President, before the reading begins, of course, when what is called the formal reading is completed, there is no further reading of the text. Any part of the bill is then open to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the order. The Chair understands that after the bill has been read the amendments will be proceeded with in order.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that has been decided before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill; and after having read for some time,

COAST GUARD SUPERINTENDENTS ON THE RETIRED LIST.

Mr. GERRY. I ask unanimous consent to call up for immediate consideration Senate bill 1075, giving permanent rank to district superintendents of the Coast Guard on the retired list.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, it is understood that if it leads to any discussion it will be withdrawn.

Mr. GERRY. Certainly.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "lieutenant," to strike out "commander" and to insert "on that list," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a district superintendent, a commissioned officer of the Coast Guard, who has been retired for age, or after having served 40 years in either the Coast Guard or the former Life-Saving Service, or both, while holding temporary rank under the provisions of the naval appropriation act approved July 1, 1918, shall have, on the retired list, the rank, pay, and allowances of a lieutenant on that list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The reading clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

WILLIAM COLLIE NABORS.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 1405, for the relief of William Collie Nabors, of Alabama. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who is absent on account of illness in his family, is the author of the bill and desires that action be had on it as early as possible. This is a meritorious measure and is favorably reported by the Committee on Claims with the recommendation that the bill be passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on line 6, to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Collie Nabors the sum of $5,000 for damages suffered by reason of his being struck and seriously injured by a Government motor cycle which was ridden or driven by a regularly enlisted soldier of the United States Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in connection with this bill I desire to have printed in the RECORD a part of the report of the committee.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Extract from report of the Committee on Claims on the bill (S. 1405), submitted by Mr. BROUSSARD (for Mr. TRAMMELL) February 2, 1922.]

A board of three officers under orders investigated the accident. The said board reported as follows:

"1. That on or about the 9th of March, 1918, between the hours of 7 and 9 p. m., at or near the junction of the Anniston-Jacksonville Pike and the road leading eastward to the area of the One hundred and thirteenth Infantry, Camp McClellan, Ala., William Collie Nabors, a civilian, resident of Jacksonville, Ala., was struck by a motor cycle, the property of the United States, then being driven by Charles W. Stevens, private, Twenty-ninth Division, Headquarters Troop.

"2. That said William Collie Nabors was then exercising such care as was reasonable under the circumstances.

"3. That said Pvt. Charles W. Stevens was then driving said motor cycle at an excessive rate of speed, the conditions considered, and failed to give any warning of his approach.

"4. That said William Collie Nabors sustained severe injuries about the head and legs, and has been unable to work since said accident, and will be unable to work for some time to come."

—

PIEDMONT, ALA., November 23, 1921.

Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In regard to Mr. W. C. Nabors's present condition, we find him both mentally and physically unbalanced. He has stages of extreme melancholia and his uncertain temper is a source of great distress and apprehension to his family. On account of these misfortunes he is unable to make a living for his family.

Respectfully,

W. A. KINABREW, M. D.
O. SARGENT, M. D.
JNO. W. VANSANT, M. D.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 21, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 20, 1922.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Jesse D. Moore, of New York, to be United States marshal, eastern district of New York, vice James M. Power, resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

IDAHO.

Andrew Christenson to be postmaster at Laclede, Idaho. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

ILLINOIS.

Robert McIntyre to be postmaster at Bellflower, Ill. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

INDIANA.

Katheryn L. Huckleberry to be postmaster at Whitestown, Ind. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Fred Dunn to be postmaster at Windfall, Ind., in place of D. C. Zehner, resigned.

KANSAS.

David E. Hill to be postmaster at Nortonville, Kans., in place of A. F. Hamm. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

KENTUCKY.

George R. Holt to be postmaster at Campbellsville, Ky., in place of F. G. Wilson, resigned.

Herbert C. Hall to be postmaster at Hardinsburg, Ky., in place of John O'Reilly, resigned.

MAINE.

Earle R. Hayes to be postmaster at National Soldiers' Home, Me., in place of W. L. Phoenix, deceased.

MARYLAND.

Mary Stevens to be postmaster at Hurlock, Md., in place of W. E. Hurlock. Incumbent's commission expired January 3, 1921.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Walter L. Burt to be postmaster at Canton, Mass., in place of J. J. Haverty. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

MINNESOTA.

Otto Rakness to be postmaster at Alpha, Minn. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Oliver A. Matson to be postmaster at Kiester, Minn. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Anna E. Miller to be postmaster at Kelliher, Minn., in place of A. B. Kobe, resigned.

Orville G. Nichols to be postmaster at Mazeppa, Minn., in place of N. P. Seivert, resigned.

MONTANA.

Margaret H. Lehmicke to be postmaster at Bigfork, Mont. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

John E. Cameron to be postmaster at Bigtimber, Mont., in place of L. C. Bade. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1922.

NEW JERSEY.

Elizabeth Transue to be postmaster at Delaware, N. J. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Peter A. Greiner, jr., to be postmaster at Woodbridge, N. J., in place of J. E. Harned. Incumbent's commission expired February 19, 1922.

NORTH DAKOTA.

J. Rodney Williams to be postmaster at Hampden, N. Dak. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

OHIO.

John J. Haines to be postmaster at East Liberty, Ohio. Office became presidential April 1, 1920.

Leo Mutach to be postmaster at Marblehead, Ohio. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Fred O. Bates to be postmaster at Bellevue, Ohio, in place of M. J. Callaghan, resigned.

PENNSYLVANIA.

William E. Parsons to be postmaster at Hazel Hurst, Pa. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Ralph L. Snyder to be postmaster at New Tripoli, Pa. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

TEXAS.

Clarence R. Redden to be postmaster at De Leon, Tex., in place of S. R. Haynes. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

VIRGINIA.

Wilbur H. Palmer to be postmaster at Greenville, Va. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Laurie D. Marshall to be postmaster at Thaxton, Va. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

David R. Jones to be postmaster at Cambria, Va., in place of J. D. Crenshaw. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

William P. Nye, jr., to be postmaster at Radford, Va., in place of H. M. Brown. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WASHINGTON.

Bert L. McCarty to be postmaster at Battle Ground, Wash. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Walter W. Shore to be postmaster at Farmington, Wash., in place of W. E. Overholt, resigned.

Elva N. Hamilton to be postmaster at Mansfield, Wash., in place of N. B. Burke. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Millard E. Meloy to be postmaster at Winlock, Wash., in place of G. P. Wall. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WISCONSIN.

Henry J. Altschwager to be postmaster at Columbus, Wis., in place of W. J. Riedner. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Helen Pickett to be postmaster at Spencer, Wis., in place of A. A. Pickett, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 20, 1922.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Dudley S. Valentine to be register of land office, Los Angeles, Calif.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Brainerd B. Smith to be receiver of public moneys, Los Angeles, Calif.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

John F. Frazer, Lafayette.

COLORADO.

Harrison E. Thompson, Hot Sulphur Springs.

CONNECTICUT.

William M. Logan, West Cheshire.

FLORIDA.

Dexter R. Milton, Watertown.

ILLINOIS.

James E. Jontry, Chenoa.
Frances Baker, Golconda.
Rola Eubanks, Omaha.
Clara A. Hollow, Trenton.
Russell P. Garrison, Wayne City.

KENTUCKY.

Joseph H. Fortney, East Bernstadt.

MICHIGAN.

Ira N. Dowd, Ontonagon.
George A. Cook, Ypsilanti.

MISSISSIPPI.

John W. Crane, Blue Springs.
Joseph M. Scribner, Derma.
James H. Spence, Grenada.
James S. Niles, Kosciusko.
Sidney M. Jordan, Louisville.

NEW JERSEY.

Eva H. Ketcham, Belvidere.
John Boyd, Greystone Park.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Richard S. White, sr., Elizabethtown.
Otis Banner, Newland.
Alfred A. McDonald, Parkton.

OHIO.

Ray V. Chase, Archbold.
James E. Davis, Belmont.
Addie F. Hosler, Kingston.
Arthur R. Hurd, Lawndale.
Helen E. Sawyer, New Paris.
William M. Freeman, Otway.

OKLAHOMA.

George Rainey, Enid.
John M. Dorchester, Pauls Valley.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Albert S. Leiby, Bath.
Robert S. Bowman, Berwick.
Grant Piper, Petersburg.
Herman Raithel, Smithton.
James A. Stickel, Vandergrift.

TEXAS.

John C. Wood, Big Sandy.
Florence M. Geyser, College Station.
Alfred R. Vernon, Hermleigh.
Robert M. Hazelwood, Leander.
William F. Viereck, Sealy.
Don A. Parkhurst, Tahoka.

VIRGINIA.

Paul E. Haden, Palmyra.
Jessie H. Cox, Washington.
Herbert T. Thomas, Williamsburg.

WASHINGTON.

Helen M. Purvis, Sumner.
Herman L. Leeper, Yakima.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 20, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou ever-blessed God, we are kept in that divine love which makes Thee our Father. O bestow upon us the spirit that discerns Thee with unclouded vision. Hold us closely to the things we know to be right, and let these work mightily against the things that are wrong. In all situations enable us to be temperate, forbearing, and patient. May our laws be so just and so wisely administered that our Nation shall be an example for all humankind. Prosper our land through the diligence and fidelity of all our citizens. Bless all influences that are promoting and tending toward greater unity and cooperation. May Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done in all the earth. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, on roll call 112 I am recorded as not voting. I wish to say that on the assurance of the managers of the naval bill I assumed that there would be no second roll call and so left the Chamber on official business. If I had been present I would have voted "yea" on that roll call, and I would like to be so recorded.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JAMES.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order setting apart Sunday, May 7, for addresses on the life, character, and public service of the late Representative ROBER A. JAMES, of Virginia, be vacated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the order setting apart Sunday, May 7, for memorial addresses on the late Representative JAMES be revoked. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 192. Joint resolution providing for survey of the Potomac River banks and adjacent lands from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls, with a view to possible extension of the District park system.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 192. Joint resolution providing for survey of the Potomac River banks and adjacent lands from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls, with a view to possible extension of the District park system; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, BELTRAMI COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3317) to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 north, range 32 west, Beltrami County, Minn., and put the same on its final passage. A similar House bill (H. R. 10716) has been favorably reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up from the Speaker's table S. 3317, a similar House bill having been favorably reported. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Minnesota be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 north, range 32 west, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. KNUTSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent the bill H. R. 10716 was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 10730) and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. BUCHANAN.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 997).

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill (H. R. 9981).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up a conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment inserted the following:

"Salaries: Comptroller General, $10,000; Assistant Comptroller General, $7,500; assistants to Comptroller General—4 at $6,000 each; chief clerk, $3,000; chiefs of divisions—7 at $3,000 each; chief of appointment division, $2,500; assistants to chiefs of divisions—3 at $2,750 each, 4 at $2,500 each; chiefs of sections—10 at $2,500 each, 13 at $2,250 each, 2 at $2,000 each; assistant chiefs of sections—11 at $2,000 each, 1 at $1,900; chiefs of subsections—3 at $2,000 each; disbursing officer, $3,000; deputy disbursing officer, $1,800; private secretary, $1,800; attorneys—1 $5,000, 4 at $4,000 each, 4 at $3,600 each, 1 $3,100, 5 at $3,000 each, 1 $2,750; law clerks—1 $2,500, 4 at $2,400 each, 4 at $2,250 each, 2 at $2,200 each, 9 at $2,000 each, 4 at $1,800 each, 1 $1,600; accountants—1 $2,500, 2 at $2,400 each, 3 at $2,100 each, 3 at $2,000 each; investigators— 1 $4,000, 1 $3,000, 20 at $2,000 each; reviewers—8 at $2,100 each; principal clerks—17 at $2,000 each; clerks—164 of class 4, 218 of class 3, 255 of class 2, 267 of class 1, 56 at $1,000 each, 70 at $900 each; check assorters—4 at $1,000 each; duplicating machine operator, $900; carpenter, $1,400; foreman of messengers and laborers, $1,400; chief messenger, $1,000; messengers—1 $1,000, 15 at $840 each; assistant messengers—29 at $720 each; laborers—1 $720, 21 at $660 each; messenger boys—14 at $480 each, 1 $420; forewoman of charwomen, $660; charwomen—22 at $240 each; and temporary clerks, stenographers, typists, and other assistants, to be paid at a rate not exceeding $1,800 per annum, $375,000; in all, $2,293,190.

"Contingent expenses: For traveling expenses, rent, telephone service, purchase and exchange of books, office supplies (including stationery) and equipment, repairs and maintenance, and miscellaneous items, $175,261."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"No officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid a salary or compensation at a rate per annum in excess of $11,000, except the following: Six at $25,000 each, two at $20,000 each, and two at $15,000 each."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments numbered 28, 29, and 31.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
T. W. HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
W. L. JONES,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 21: Appropriates $2,468,451 for the General Accounting Office in the detailed manner proposed by the House, instead of $2,496,101 in a lump sum, as proposed by the Senate. The detailed salaries proposed in the House bill have been reduced in amounts of individual salaries and in number of salaries in the aggregate of $400,000, of which $375,000 is made available for temporary clerks, stenographers, typists, etc., with a salary limitation of $1,800, and $25,000 is added to the appropriation of $150,261 proposed in the House bill for contingent and miscellaneous expenses. The aggregate proposed in the substitute for the House provision is $150 less than the amount carried and is $27,650 less than the amount proposed by the Senate under the lump sum.

On No. 35, relating to salary limitations on Shipping Board and Fleet Corporation funds: Inserts a substitute for the House and Senate provisions, which allows 6 employees at $25,000 each, 2 at $20,000 each, and 2 at $15,000 each, instead of 13 in excess of $11,000, as proposed by the Senate, and 6 between $11,000 and $25,000 each, as proposed by the House.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 28, relating to an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the purchase of land in the city of Washington.

On No. 29, increasing the appropriation for the Tariff Commission from $300,000 to $375,000.

On No. 31, relating to the authority granted the United States Shipping Board to continue to use sums received from the liquidation of assets up to $55,000,000.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
T. W. HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Fairchild	Lehlbach	Schall
Ansorge	Fess	Lineberger	Sears
Anthony	Fields	Linthicum	Shelton
Bankhead	Fish	McCormick	Shreve
Bland, Ind.	Focht	Madden	Siegel
Bland, Va.	Foster	Maloney	Sisson
Blanton	Free	Mansfield	Slemp
Brand	Funk	Mead	Snell
Brennan	Gorman	Merritt	Snyder
Briggs	Gould	Michaelson	Speaks
Britten	Graham, Pa.	Moore, Va.	Stafford
Brown, Tenn.	Greene, Mass.	Moores, Ind.	Stiness
Browne, Wis.	Hammer	Mudd	Strong, Pa.
Burdick	Hardy, Tex.	Nelson, J. M.	Sullivan
Burke	Hays	O'Brien	Summers, Wash.
Cantrill	Hicks	O'Connor	Sweet
Chindblom	Hogan	Olpp	Taylor, Ark.
Clark, Fla.	Hudspeth	Paige	Taylor, Colo.
Cockran	Hukriede	Patterson, N. J.	Taylor, N. J.
Codd	Hutchinson	Perkins	Taylor, Tenn.
Cole, Ohio	Ireland	Perlman	Upshaw
Connell	Jefferis, Nebr.	Porter	Vare
Connolly, Pa.	Jeffers, Ala.	Pou	Walters
Cooper, Wis.	Johnson, Miss.	Purnell	Ward, N. Y.
Copley	Johnson, S. Dak.	Rainey, Ala.	Ward, N. C.
Davis, Tenn.	Kahn	Rainey, Ill.	Wheeler
Dempsey	Kennedy	Ransley	White, Me.
Doughton	Kindred	Reavis	Williams
Drewry	Kitchin	Riordan	Wilson
Driver	Knight	Rogers	Yates
Dunbar	Kreider	Rossdale	Young
Dyer	Kunz	Ryan	Zihlman
Echols	Langley	Sabath
Ellis	Lee, Ga.	Sanders, Ind.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-five Members are present; a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

CONFEREES ON AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following additional Members to the conferees on the agricultural appropriation bill: Mr. MAGEE and Mr. LEE of Georgia. The committee on the part of the House consists of Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MAGEE, Mr. WATSON, Mr. BUCHANAN, and Mr. LEE of Georgia.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the conference report has been read. I do not know whether there is any objection to it or not. If there is no objection, I do not care to take the time of the House in explaining what has been done.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For a question.

Mr. WALSH. In reference to the provision that the conferees have adopted relative to the employment by the Shipping Board, amendment 35, does that cover the employment of attorneys or counsel?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It does.

Mr. WALSH. So the Shipping Board under this provision would be prohibited from making a contract with an attorney who would receive anything in excess of $25,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON] five minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I signed the conference report containing the provision as to salaries, as a matter of compromise. Under the compromise six employees can receive not exceeding $25,000 a year and four at a less amount. That is considerably less than the amount that is now being paid. I am still opposed to big salaries, but I felt it due to gentlemen on the conference committee, who are experienced men, careful business men, and who desire to protect the Government, to yield to their judgment to that extent in regard to the payment of these salaries. The compromise is within the instructions of the House, and I do not feel that further contention with the Senate would save anything to the Government. In regard to the proposition of giving the $55,000,000 to the Shipping Board without restriction, that comes up as an independent proposition entirely, and I am opposed to that. As to the purchase of real estate, that will be submitted to the House, but I consider that the purchase should be authorized.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this question of salaries to be paid by the Shipping Board has been discussed many times. I have had the privilege of discussing it a good many times myself. I do not wish to detain the House by further discussion, except to call attention to what the report means. We were told in the newspapers yesterday that the Secretary of the Treasury had informed a committee of the Senate that in the year 1923 there would be a certain deficit of $359,000,000. He expressly said in that statement that he did not take into consideration in presenting these figures the passage of such legislation as the ship subsidy bill and other matters to which he referred. If that legislation passes, I think it very clear, according to the Secretary of the Treasury at this time, that there will be a deficit in 1923 of much more than $400,000,000, and, for my part, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was conservative in his statement the other day, that in 1923 there will be a deficit of at least $500,000,000.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For a question.

Mr. EDMONDS. The ship subsidy will not amount to as much as the present losses by the Shipping Board.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Even if that be true, the ship subsidy will entail an additional expenditure from the United States Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury evidently does not agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He took occasion to expressly except the ship subsidy legislation from the statement he made, showing that he expected it to add to Treasury expenses. Now, I merely made that statement by way of preliminary to what I want to say.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how he knows that the ship subsidy will not equal the present losses by the Shipping Board?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield if I can get additional time.

Mr. EDMONDS. Because we know what the ship subsidy will cost, and we know what the present losses of the Shipping Board are.

Mr. WALSH. I have not heard of the ship subsidy being enacted into law.

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, gentlemen of the House, in view of this immense deficit which the Secretary of the Treasury says under the present legislation will be $359,000,000 for the next year, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says will be $500,000,000, I want to ask Members of this House if they are willing to fix salaries for attorneys for the Shipping Board at a sum which has never been paid to any official by the National Government, except the President of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not this provision remove the salary limit of $11,000 on the 78 lawyers now employed by the Shipping Board, so that if this conference report is adopted they can pay some of them more than $11,000, and yet retain all of them?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; and that is the reason for making this report.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman recall whether any letter came to Congress or to any Member of Congress from the Secretary of the Treasury advising an increase of $60,000,000 on the naval bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

Mr. CRAMTON. And the Secretary of the Treasury apparently was not consulted about it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am satisfied that the Secretary of the Treasury was not consulted as to the increase in the naval bill yesterday by those who voted for it. They probably knew what would be his reply.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does the gentleman think that the issuing of the statement yesterday by the Secretary of the Treasury as to the deficit was premeditated, in view of the fact that the House was about to vote on the increase in the Navy?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I would not bring any such charge against the Secretary of the Treasury. He was simply answering inquiries of the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. The gentleman is a member of the committee, is he not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. There are a number of salaries provided for in this bill, some as low as $720. Did the committee take into consideration living conditions in Washington when it fixed these salaries?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not a member of the subcommittee that prepared this particular bill. The committee does not take into consideration the facts to which the gentleman refers. We were limited in authority by the rules of the House, for these salaries have been fixed by legislation in the past.

Mr. WYANT. Does the gentleman think that any man could live on a salary of $720 a year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think that matter ought to be taken up by a legislative bill and suitable salaries provided.

Mr. WYANT. Does not the gentleman think it ought to be taken up now in connection with these salaries of $25,000 a year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do, and I expected to call attention to the point the gentleman is making. At the present time the Shipping Board is authorized to employ six persons at a sum exceeding $11,000 a year.

They have now, as I understand it, two operators at $35,000 each, whose salaries are fixed by the Shipping Board and not by the Congress, and another one at $30,000 and possibly one at $25,000. Just to show you that big salaries do not always mean efficiency, I call attention to a letter which I received yesterday from a gentleman who wanted to do business with the Shipping Board. He had a lot of lumber that he wanted to ship from Seattle to Balboa, in the Canal Zone. He wrote to the Shipping Board on April 12, and I have a copy of that letter in my hand, asking them to please put in his hands by mail or telegram on or before April 25 the ocean freight rates from the railroad dock at Seattle to the Government docks at Balboa, Canal Zone, and so forth. He received a telegram on April 15 from Boston, Mass., which, by the way, was addressed incorrectly and not to the man who sent the letter, although he received it, as follows:

Ocean rate, car siding Pacific north coast ports to Baltimore, carload lots, 60 cents hundred pounds.

I cite that simply to show that large salaries, even though they be as high as $35,000 a year, have not brought efficiency to the Shipping Board, and neither will $25,000 paid to some attorney who comes here not so much for the purpose of rendering legal services as to enjoy for himself and his family the social advantages of Washington. You will not get efficiency in the legal department, for which we all hope and which we all want, by that method. You know and I know that we can get attorneys all over this country for $11,000 or less a year who can render efficient service in the Shipping Board in its legal department, and, in view of the contemplated deficiency, in view of the necessity for reducing appropriations, why should we put upon the statute books a provision authorizing the Shipping Board to pay—in fact, actually fixing the salary—men at $25,000, $20,000, and $15,000 a year, as contemplated in this report?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. As I understand it, that telegram was asked to fix the rate on a shipment of goods from Seattle to Balboa.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. How did it find its way into the legal department?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, I was not referring to the legal department at that time. I was simply citing this for the purpose of showing that large salaries do not always bring about efficiency and have not brought about efficiency in the Shipping Board.

Mr. MILLER. The answer was sent by the traffic department, was it not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I presume so.

Mr. MILLER. And that is where some of these expensive men are?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. That is where these expensive men are to-day, but now it is proposed not only to have expensive men in the traffic department but to give some of these attorneys who are now on the rolls at $11,000 salaries at the rate of $25,000 and $20,000. Why should we do it? I dare say, and I make the prediction here now, that if this House will vote down this conference report and stand firm in its determination to save the people's money and keep these salaries at not exceeding $11,000, the very same attorneys who are serving there in the Shipping Board to-day will be found there a year from now if the Shipping Board desires to keep them. That was the result a year ago. Gentlemen will remember that we passed a provision that not more than six employees should be paid more than $11,000 a year, and at that time we were met with the proposition that the Shipping Board would go on the rocks if we did any such thing, that they would lose their valuable employees. As a matter of fact, they are there to-day, and they gladly and willingly accepted the reduction in salary to $11,000. I hope the House will vote down this conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have had from high authority in the last two or three days estimates as to the probable deficiency in the coming fiscal year. I am sure that both the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the Secretary of the Treasury in making their estimates felt that those estimates were at least reasonably accurate in the view of matters as they now stand. I am very much in hopes that it will be proven that both of the estimates that have been referred to are excessive. I realize that if we are to continue to add large sums to our appropriation bills, not only shall we have these deficiencies which have been suggested but possibly even greater ones. I very much hope that no further great additions will be made to our present estimates of the totals of appropriations. While I do not desire at this time to go into the details of the estimates made by either of the gentlemen to whom I have referred, I am of opinion that time will prove that certain of the items included in the sums which make up the deficiencies as estimated by them will not be charges upon the Treasury. We shall, I believe, secure greater revenues from certain sources than have been estimated, and certain sums have been suggested as charges against the Treasury which it will not, in my opinion, be necessary to meet. If I am correct in my views, we shall be able to get through the next fiscal year with a comparatively small deficit. At least I hope that will be the case, and I trust the developments of the future will indicate that I am sound in that belief.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any inside information with reference to the revenues and expenditures of the next fiscal year that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasury Department do not have?

Mr. MONDELL. No. I do not pose as an expert. However, I do not always agree with the experts. The Secretary of the Treasury intended to be accurate and entirely fair in his estimates. We realize, of course, that the Secretary of the Treasury has constantly upon him the duty of advising that outlay be kept within income, and that it is no part of his duty to underestimate probable deficiencies. The estimate made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was one that certainly will prove to be accurate if the House is not careful in its appropriations from now on. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that time will prove that both of these estimates were high.

In regard to these salaries of the Shipping Board, the Government of the United States commands a very great deal of talent of a very high order generally at very low salaries. That is true of this House. There are a great many men here who could earn many times the salary they receive here in private life, giving private business no more time and attention than they do the public business. There is no question about that. In all of the departments of the Government there are many men—there always have been and there always will be—who are giving to the people and the Government their services at much less than those services are worth, measured by the ordinary rewards of private life. That is a very happy and a very fortunate condition for the Government.

That condition, let us hope, will always exist with regard to governmental business. I believe it always will. When the Government embarks upon a great business enterprise quite a different situation is presented. Men for patriotic reasons, out of a desire to render public service, out of a proper legitimate impulse of ambition, render very valuable service at a very small stipend in the ordinary affairs of Government. But if we are to embark on great business enterprises we must expect to have to meet the competition to a certain extent of private employment. We have embarked upon a great shipping enterprise, one of the very largest business enterprises and projects of the world, requiring talent of the highest order and great experience, and outside of the general line of public business. When we seek men to perform for the Government the same class of duties and assume the same class of responsibilities that private enterprise demands, we must to a certain extent meet private competition. I wish it were possible, not in view of possible deficiencies, but out of regard for proper economy in the discharge of public business, we could engage in the shipping business or continue the shipping business, and not be compelled to compete with private enterprise in the matter of salaries, but I do not believe we can. I hope we shall get out of this class of business. I hope we may be able to keep out of purely business enterprises of all sorts, but so far as we are or should be engaged in them we must to a certain extent at least meet the competition in the payment of salaries of private employment and private enterprise. I do not think the salaries provided for are excessive as compared with the compensation men receive in similar employment in private life. Much as I should like to have these sums reduced, I believe so long as we remain in the shipping business we must pay some considerable salaries. I hope the conference report will be adopted.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. APPLEBY. Five minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am opposed to this conference report based on the ground that it is paying too much money and employing too many men. I recall the first bill in the House called for a deficiency of, I think, $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 for the Shipping Board. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as I recall it, told us that this was something left over from the last administration, and this money would probably carry through the deficiency for some time. Since then I think a second deficiency bill was offered and passed by this House. Personally, I believe the Shipping Board is an expensive proposition that sooner or later you are going to pay for very heavily or you are going to get out of that business. I have not much sympathy for hiring half a dozen men, lawyers or otherwise, at salaries of $25,000 a year. I do not think they are worth it. My humble opinion as a layman is that there are too many members of the Shipping Board; in the first place, the responsibility is divided and there are too many employees, and it costs too much to run it under present conditions.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Schlesinger, head of the legal department of the Shipping Board, was asked in the hearing what reductions they were making, and I read to the House what he said:

> Mr. Chairman, we have been cutting down our expenses as much as we can. For instance, we recently sent a man in our New York office who has cut down all the stenographers in that office. He has cut them down, I think, from $150 to $100 a month. We have cut down all the stenographic force and the messenger force.

The gentleman does not think, as he has indicated, that the saving made by the cutting down of the small salaries of these stenographers ought to be taken and applied to the payment of high-priced attorneys, as proposed in this conference report?

Mr. APPLEBY. No. In other words, if you went through this bill, you would find the people drawing the least money are probably underpaid, and those who get from $10,000, $15,000, and $25,000, in my judgment, are overpaid. It is not only this particular proposition I object to, but it seems to me we have on our hands a liability here that is going to continue month by month, and the question that this House has to determine is whether we are going to cover these deficiencies every time a deficiency bill comes in, or whether we are going to get down to an economical basis of running the Shipping Board.

As I recall it, the other day when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] opposed this conference report, the sentiment of the House was overwhelmingly in favor of the reduction of these expenses, and it seems to me there is no time like the present for action. I hope the report will be returned to the conferees for further consideration.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what explanation the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] may give as a reason for reporting the provision in reference to Shipping Board salaries in just this form, but the actual saving in this amendment is not going to be very great. It is true that the conferees have acted within the $25,000 provision. But I recall that when the Shipping Board was first organized under this administration and Mr. Lasker took charge he employed two practical ship operators who were to receive, I think, $35,000, and he brought another ship operator, a Mr. Frye, from the Pacific coast at $25,000 per year. Mr. Frye had formerly been a very efficient employee and director of the Shipping Board during the period of its construction work. He came here from the Pacific coast at $25,000 a year, and rendered service up to recently, I am told, when they increased his salary to $35,000. It is my judgment if they would give that gentleman $25,000 a year they could eliminate the other two ship operators which they have, and that he could run the active ship-operating work of the Emergency Fleet Corporation at this time.

Now, something has been said about this thing being governmental business. It is governmental business. It is a business the Government embarked upon. It was, of course, greatly because of the war, but it is a business in which this Government is engaged and in which, I think, it will be engaged for some years to come, whether the ship subsidy bill becomes a law or does not. It would seem to me that the number of these high-salaried men brought back here by the conferees is too great. We ought not to increase the number of men receiving $25,000 and $20,000 a year as proposed by the conferees. And I venture to state that if the chairman of the Shipping Board would use some of these steel ships and these wooden ships that are tied up in the rivers and lakes and other waters of the country, and use one of them for a year's salary for some of these officers, we would find not only a very good way for getting rid of the ships, but find a good way of paying adequately for the services performed by some of these gentlemen who are to receive high salaries, and the Government would be relieving itself of a lot of these ships it now has on its hands and can not sell, or, if it does sell, will sell at $1,800 apiece to a concern which, under the inspiration and the encouragement of the present Shipping Board, will in the future, I believe, control the shipping interests on the Pacific coast, just as the shipping interests on the Atlantic coast will, under like encouragement on the part of the Shipping Board and its officials, in the future be under the control of another gigantic shipping concern on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman know why it is necessary to have seven heads to a concern of this kind and why Mr. Lasker could not do it alone if the law was changed?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the law required that there should be seven commissioners, and it fixed their salaries, and we thought when we passed the so-called Jones bill with seven commissioners at $12,000 a year, a salary equal to that of a Cabinet officer, we should solve the problem, and that all the waste, extravagance, and mistakes would cease, but instead of that we have seven commissioners at $12,000 a year each, not one of whom is a practical ship man, but one of whom, the chairman, is a practical advertising man. And he is advertising to his heart's content. And as soon as we can furnish him with subordinates at $25,000 a year the chairman of the Shipping Board will find himself in governmental clover. We should have one practical shipping man on the Shipping Board, and we should have among some of these high-salaried officers men who are willing to accept employment at some sacrifice, just the same as Mr. Powell did when he came down here and organized the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it was very fine and sweet to hear the Republican leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], felicitate the membership of this House, or the legal gentlemen who are Members of this House, upon the great sacrifices that were made to serve their country here. I do not know whether, quartered, it is even one part ambition and three parts patriotism. I can not say. I doubt if the lawyers of the country are so prosperous or their fees are so munificent that we could not now, as was insisted only about two years ago by the gentleman who now reports this conference report, get the best kind of men, men as good as we have, for a much less salary.

The first group of lawyers that I remember to have read about in history were at the close of the day standing idle in the market place. I suppose they were lawyers, although it is not definitely stated in the narrative, because in answer to the question of, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" they said, "Lord, no man has hired us." And that is true to-day with many of the lawyers, and it must be so. There is no diminution of the crop. They are coming along all the time. Gentlemen, it is a pernicious and indefensible precedent to establish by a vote of Congress these salaries that are out of all reason or justification. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a practical proposition. The House passed this bill with a limitation of six employees drawing over $11,000. The Senate provided for 13 employees drawing over $11,000, and for four salaries of $35,000. I think the House conferees have done very well.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. For a question or correction, but not for a speech.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is mistaken in the statement he made that the Senate provided for four at $35,000. Their provision was for 13 at sums exceeding $11,000.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the conferees afterwards agreed, at the insistence of the Senate, on four at $35,000. My statement was substantially correct. The House does not legislate by itself; the Senate is coordinate with us. And after all a conference is a compromise. The conferees have eliminated all salaries over $25,000, and they have provided for 10 at over $11,000; 2 at not over $15,000, I believe; and 2 at not over $20,000, I think; and the other 6 at not over $25,000.

I would be glad if the Shipping Board could be well operated with no salary over $10,000; but I know perfectly well that that will not be done, and you know perfectly well that it will not be done. I would be glad, if I knew the Shipping Board would be well operated, to pay somebody $100,000 if we cut it off somewhere else, although I do not believe in paying any salary to any Government officer over $25,000. But I think in view of what has taken place that the House may well afford to agree to the conference report and to the compromise that has been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it has just been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and well stated, that we can not have our own way. If we were the entire legislative body, we could insist upon many things that we do not like to give up, but as it is we have to yield in order to effect a compromise. I am thankful indeed that, under the instructions we received when we were last before you, made on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], this limitation was placed at $25,000. I am frank to say to you that had it not been, we could not have reached an agreement at all. We have done absolutely the best that we can, and one of the best evidences of that fact is in the action of a member of this conference, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON], in signing the conference report. You all know that he was just as violently opposed to these high salaries as anybody, as I was myself, and he is not entirely in sympathy with them as they are now, but he believes with his coconferees that the best has been done that possibly can be done.

Now, I want to call your attention to what we have done, and in what we have done we have acted in accordance with our instructions. The House instructed the conferees not to agree to any provision which proposed the payment of salaries in excess of $25,000. We did not agree to any provision proposing any salary in excess of $25,000. The House bill as passed proposed 6 officers or employees with salaries in excess of $11,000. The Senate bill provided for 13. In this compromise that we propose we have eliminated all salaries of $35,000, and we have limited the number to 10 who may receive a possible salary of $25,000. Of these there will be only 6 that will receive a salary of $25,000, 2 that will receive a salary of $20,000, and 2 at $15,000 each.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not think the gentleman intended to state what he did, when he said that 10 should receive $25,000. What you do provide is 6 at $25,000, 2 at $20,000, and 2 at $15,000 each.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I say that only 10 shall receive a salary in excess of $11,000.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think that is right.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Some reflection has been made upon lawyers here. I am not holding any brief for the lawyers. They are worthy of their hire. But it is not the purpose, if the relief be granted, to spend all this money in the employment of lawyers.

I think at most they intend to employ only two additional lawyers—one an admiralty lawyer and the other an expert trial lawyer. They do propose out of this sum, if it is granted, to employ some extraordinarily high-class, efficient men in the specialties in which they are engaged.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] elaborated on the fact that we have a number of commissioners here not one of whom is a practical shipbuilder or knows anything about the shipbuilding business. I suppose that is true, but we have nothing to do with that. We did not alone create the law providing for them. But, gentlemen, we ought to see the necessity of employing somebody who knows something about this business.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I regret I can not yield.

We are informed that because they did not have a competent insurance man last year they lost $200,000. You know that we are losing money because we have not admiralty lawyers who can cope with the admiralty lawyers on the other side.

Now, this thing is not to be of long duration. We hope that with this coming year the thing will end. They claim that they have an organization there now that is equipped to do this work. They contend that they can not keep that organization unless we provide what they are now asking. I do not want to take the responsibility of disrupting that organization, which at best can only last temporarily. They think that unless they are permitted to keep this organization it will result in untold losses to the Treasury of the United States.

Some complaint has been made about the deficit that may occur at the end of the next fiscal year. It may be the amount estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. It may be dependent upon the administration of our fiscal affairs. It may be greater if we disorganize this organization, so that instead of recovering what is justly due us and saving the most that we can out of this mess that loss may be very greatly enhanced. These gentlemen are supposed, at least, to know what they are talking about. They have this thing in charge. Theirs is the responsibility. They come before us with their recommendations, and I confess that in all my experience here I have never heard a fuller report made by any administration or the head of any bureau than has come from this Shipping Board.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GRIFFIN. As a member of the committee I would like to ask the gentleman will he explain the evolution of this particular section of the bill? The House bill provided for six employees with salaries in excess of $11,000, and the Senate provided for 13 employees in excess of $1,100, but specifically mentioned seven attorneys. In the conference report the attorneys seem to have been lost in the shuffle. I should like to ask the gentleman what understanding there is in regard to the employment of attorneys?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman the reason why that change was made. It was because, realizing that there must be some compromise, realizing that they must sacrifice beyond the point to which they think they ought to make sacrifices, they consented that the number of lawyers first designated should not be employed, in order that they might have some expert shipping men. There is nobody here who would dare set himself up as being an expert shipping man. They are very scarce, because that is a very peculiar business, and, as I stated here before, they are invited to come from here, there, and yonder for a temporary employment; not that they are receiving a life job, not that they are going to enhance their fortunes under the Government, for, if we are to believe what those who are at the head of governmental affairs are telling us, the Government is trying to get rid of this whole business, and get rid of it as quickly as possible.

Mr. APPLEBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. APPLEBY. Is my understanding of this report correct, that 10 men are to receive a total of $220,000—6 men at $25,000, 2 men at $20,000, and 2 men at $15,000, making a total of $220,000—which, divided among 10 men, makes an average of $22,000 each? Is that correct?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman referred to the Senate amendment limiting the number to seven attorneys, but in the conference report I do not see any limitation at all. They can employ all of these 10 for attorneys, can they not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I tried to explain a moment ago in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] that because of the fact that they could not get the entire number they wanted, it was agreed to eliminate the designations, so that they might have some discretion in making selections.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But you leave it so that they can use the whole 10 as attorneys.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are not going to use the whole 10 as attorneys.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They can use any number of them that they want to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Of course they could; but they are not going to do it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is nothing to keep them from doing it, is there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Of course there is not; but why should there be? These men have been placed at the head of this institution to run it. They ought to know best how to run it. It is our business to furnish them with the sinews of war, and if they are not careful with reference to the application of those sinews it is for them to answer. They tell us that if we do not disrupt this organization they will pay off these claims and get rid of this thing and collect this money that is coming to us and get out of the business if provision is made to transfer this property to our merchant marine.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to have the gentleman call attention to the fact that if this bill is defeated we shall go back to the present status, where there is no limitation at all on the maximum to be paid to any of these employees. They are paying some of them $35,000 a year now, but they could pay them $50,000 if they chose.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is absolutely correct. But here is something to which I want to call your attention. The salaries involved are not all that makes it important that this report should be adopted. There are men now in Washington who have been here since the 1st of January to my knowledge trying to get what is due them.

Men have come here repeatedly trying to make settlements of accounts that are just and about which there is little or no dispute; but until this bill is passed these men who are suffering in their business every day have got to continue to suffer. The amount of the difference about which we have been quibbling so much has been lost ten times over during the time that we have been quibbling. Here are men in private business whom we are injuring by this delay, and we ought to have some little regard for them.

Mr. APPLEBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. APPLEBY. Are the salaries of the members of the Shipping Board included in this limitation of 10 men?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are not.

Mr. APPLEBY. They are outside of that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. APPLEBY. Will the gentleman tell the House what salary each member of the Shipping Board is receiving and how many members of the board there are?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The number and the salaries paid them are fixed in the bill creating the Shipping Board. There are six at $12,000 each.

Mr. APPLEBY. They get less than these men whose salaries are $25,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and if what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] says is true—and I suppose it is true—they are paid far too much; but what we want and what we should have is somebody who can bring order out of this chaos, and we have got to pay high-priced men to get them.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I notice in the report also that Senate amendments 28, 29, and 31 are not agreed to. Can the gentleman give the House any idea whether there is likelihood of an early agreement upon those amendments or is there a deadlock?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; those are matters that have to come back to the House.

Mr. MILLER. That is true, but what is the prospect of an agreement?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As far as the conferees are concerned we are not in material disagreement.

Mr. MILLER. I agree with what the gentleman has said, that the quibbling about this matter has occasioned enormous loss to the business interests of the country.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURTNESS. As a practical proposition the only increase suggested by the conferees above the amount provided by the House bill originally applies to four people only?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is all.

Mr. BURTNESS. Providing that two might get $20,000 and two might get $15,000, because the six were included in the first place, and they might get the maximum?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; the gentleman is absolutely correct, it only increases the number by four.

Mr. BURTNESS. And as to the four it does not increase the amount beyond $25,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; and, on the other hand, it reduces some to $25,000.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. If we agree to the conference report, these salaries will not take effect until July 1.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not see how the delay which the gentleman speaks of affects the business interests of the country.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have appropriated $50,000 000 for the purpose of compromising the settlement of claims. This bill passed this House more than three months ago, and passed the Senate two months ago. These gentlemen who paid out their good money in good faith have been trying to get their pay, and felt that within a reasonable time after the action of the House and the Senate they would get their pay; but they have not. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH and Mr. HARRISON) there were 55 ayes and 33 noes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 154, answered "present" 3, not voting 132, as follows:

YEAS—140.

Anderson	Evans	Leatherwood	Robertson
Andrew, Mass.	Fairfield	Lee, N. Y.	Robsion
Ansorge	Faust	Luce	Rogers
Arentz	Fenn	Luhring	Rose
Bacharach	Fish	McArthur	Rosenbloom
Barbour	Fitzgerald	McCormick	Sanders, N. Y.
Begg	Focht	McFadden	Shaw
Bixler	Fordney	McPherson	Sinclair
Bond	Frear	Madden	Sinnott
Brooks, Ill.	Freeman	Magee	Slemp
Brooks, Pa.	French	Mann	Smith, Idaho
Burdick	Fuller	Miller	Smith, Mich.
Burtness	Gahn	Mondell	Sproul
Burton	Green, Iowa	Moore, Ill.	Steenerson
Butler	Griest	Moore, Ohio	Stephens
Cable	Griffin	Moores, Ind.	Stiness
Cannon	Hadley	Morin	Swing
Chalmers	Hardy, Colo.	Mott	Temple
Chandler, N. Y.	Harrison	Murphy	Thompson
Chandler, Okla.	Hawes	Nelson, A. P.	Tilson
Chindblom	Hawley	Nelson, Me.	Timberlake
Christopherson	Hickey	Newton, Minn.	Tinkham
Clarke, N. Y.	Hill	Newton, Mo.	Treadway
Clouse	Hogan	Nolan	Underhill
Codd	Johnson, Wash.	Ogden	Vaile
Colton	Jones, Pa.	Osborne	Vestal
Crago	Kearns	Paige	Volstead
Cramton	Kennedy	Parker, N. Y.	Wason
Cullen	Kiess	Petersen	Watson
Curry	King	Pringey	Webster
Darrow	Kirkpatrick	Purnell	White, Me.
Davis, Minn.	Kissel	Reber	Williamson
Dickinson	Kline, N. Y.	Reed, N. Y.	Winslow
Edmonds	Knutson	Reed, W. Va.	Wood, Ind.
Elliott	Larson, Minn.	Ricketts	Wurzbach

NAYS—154.

Almon	Appleby	Beck	Bird
Andrews, Nebr.	Bankhead	Beedy	Black
Anthony	Barkley	Bell	Blakeney

Boies	Garner	Linthicum	Rouse
Bowling	Garrett, Tenn.	Little	Rucker
Box	Garrett, Tex.	London	Sanders, Tex.
Briggs	Gensman	Lowrey	Sandlin
Browne, Wis.	Gernerd	Lyon	Scott, Mich.
Buchanan	Gilbert	McClintic	Scott, Tenn.
Bulwinkle	Graham, Ill.	McDuffie	Sisson
Burke	Haugen	McSwain	Smithwick
Byrnes, S. C.	Hayden	MacGregor	Steagall
Byrns, Tenn.	Hays	Mapes	Stedman
Campbell, Kans.	Herrick	Martin	Stevenson
Carew	Hersey	Mead	Stoll
Carter	Hoch	Michener	Strong, Kans.
Clague	Hooker	Millspaugh	Sumners, Tex.
Cole, Iowa	Huddleston	Montague	Swank
Collier	Hukriede	Nelson, J. M.	Tague
Collins	Hull	Norton	Ten Eyck
Connally, Tex.	Jacoway	O'Connor	Thomas
Cooper, Ohio	James	Oldfield	Tillman
Cooper, Wis.	Johnson, Ky.	Oliver	Tincher
Coughlin	Jones, Tex.	Overstreet	Towner
Crisp	Keller	Padgett	Tucker
Crowther	Kelly, Pa.	Park, Ga.	Tyson
Dallinger	Ketcham	Parks, Ark.	Voigt
Davis, Tenn.	Kincheloe	Patterson, Mo.	Walsh
Deal	Kleczka	Porter	Weaver
Dominick	Kline, Pa.	Quin	White, Kans.
Dowell	Kopp	Radcliffe	Wilson
Drane	Kraus	Raker	Wingo
Dupré	Lampert	Ramseyer	Wise
Favrot	Lanham	Rankin	Woodruff
Fisher	Lankford	Rayburn	Wright
Foster	Larsen, Ga.	Reece	Wyant
Frothingham	Lawrence	Rhodes	Yates
Fulmer	Lazaro	Riordan
Gallivan	Lea, Calif.	Roach

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Aswell	Cockran	Rossdale

NOT VOTING—132.

Ackerman	Fields	Langley	Ryan
Atkeson	Free	Layton	Sabath
Benham	Funk	Lee, Ga.	Sanders, Ind.
Bland, Ind.	Glynn	Lehlbach	Schall
Bland, Va.	Goldsborough	Lineberger	Sears
Blanton	Goodykoontz	Logan	Shelton
Bowers	Gorman	Longworth	Shreve
Brand	Gould	McKenzie	Siegel
Brennan	Graham, Pa.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Snell
Britten	Greene, Mass.	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Snyder
Brown, Tenn.	Greene, Vt.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Speaks
Burroughs	Hammer	Maloney	Stafford
Campbell, Pa.	Hardy, Tex.	Mansfield	Strong, Pa.
Cantrill	Hicks	Merritt	Sullivan
Clark, Fla.	Himes	Michaelson	Summers, Wash.
Classon	Hudspeth	Mills	Sweet
Cole, Ohio	Humphreys	Montoya	Taylor, Ark.
Connell	Husted	Moore, Va.	Taylor, Colo.
Connolly, Pa.	Hutchinson	Morgan	Taylor, N. J.
Copley	Ireland	Mudd	Taylor, Tenn.
Dale	Jefferis, Nebr.	O'Brien	Upshaw
Dempsey	Jeffers, Ala.	Olpp	Vare
Denison	Johnson, Miss.	Parker, N. J.	Vinson
Doughton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Patterson, N. J.	Volk
Drewry	Kahn	Perkins	Walters
Driver	Kelley, Mich.	Periman	Ward, N. Y.
Dunbar	Kendall	Pou	Ward, N. C.
Dunn	Kindred	Rainey, Ala.	Wheeler
Dyer	Kinkaid	Rainey, Ill.	Williams
Echols	Kitchin	Ransley	Woods, Va.
Ellis	Knight	Reavis	Woodyard
Fairchild	Kreider	Riddick	Young
Fess	Kunz	Rodenberg	Zihlman

So the conference report was rejected.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Denison with Mr. Aswell.
Mr. Shelton with Mr. Woods of Virginia.
Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Brand.
Mr. Himes with Mr. Cockran.
Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Goldsborough.
Mr. Dunn with Mr. Kitchin.
Mr. Ellis with Mr. Lee of Georgia.
Mr. Patterson of New Jersey with Mr. Moore of Virginia.
Mr. Maloney with Mr. Clark of Florida.
Mr. Williams with Mr. Bland of Virginia.
Mr. Olpp with Mr. Pou.
Mr. Greene of Massachusetts with Mr. Sears.
Mr. Ireland with Mr. Campbell of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Hudspeth.
Mr. Shreve with Mr. Doughton.
Mr. Young with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi.
Mr. McLaughlin of Michigan with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.
Mr. Kendall with Mr. Cantrill.
Mr. Volk with Mr. Blanton.
Mr. Sanders of Indiana with Mr. Drewry.
Mr. Atkeson with Mr. Humphreys.
Mr. Bland of Indiana with Mr. Logan.
Mr. Ackerman with Mr. Mansfield.
Mr. Connell with Mr. Kindred.
Mr. Dunbar with Mr. Hammer.
Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania with Mr. Rainey of Illinois.
Mr. Snell with Mr. Fields.
Mr. Free with Mr. Jeffers of Alabama.
Mr. Brennan with Mr. Kunz.
Mr. Gorman with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.
Mr. Hutchinson with Mr. Vinson.
Mr. Kahn with Mr. Driver.
Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Upshaw.
Mr. Merritt with Mr. Sabath.
Mr. Taylor of New Jersey with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.
Mr. Snyder with Mr. Sullivan.
Mr. Walters with Mr. Ward of North Carolina.
Mr. Perlman with Mr. Hardy of Texas.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

On motion of Mr. WALSH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was rejected was laid on the table.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is necessary to ask for a further conference on this bill or not; but if it is the wish of the House that a further conference should be had, then I think that the two or three matters in disagreement ought to be brought up and we should know the sense of the House on them. It would expedite business if these matters could be taken up and determined at this time. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the matters in disagreement be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois). The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the matters in disagreement be considered by the House at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent is not required for the consideration of the matters in disagreement.

Mr. MANN. All of the amendments have to be considered.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has a perfect right to call up these matters in disagreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands it. It is a matter of right.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, before we enter upon the consideration of these matters I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to amendments of the Senate Nos. 21 and 35.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the amendments in disagreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 28.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 24, after line 24, insert:

"The commission in charge of the State, War, and Navy Departments buildings, to wit, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, so far as they may be able to at prices deemed by them to be reasonable and fair, otherwise by condemnation in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing for a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office, the following squares of land for public purposes, to wit, the whole of squares known as numbers east of 87; east of 88; 124; 125; 145; 146; and 147, in the city of Washington, D. C., as officially recorded in the office of the surveyor, District of Columbia. The commission is further authorized to reduce the area to be acquired where by reason of improvements constructed or unreasonable prices asked, or for other reasons in their judgment the public interests may require: Provided, That if acquired by purchase, the cost of the squares, including expenses incident thereto, shall not exceed the sum of $1,500,000, which sum is hereby authorized and the same is hereby appropriated: Provided further, That the squares authorized to be acquired herein shall be under the control of the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Departments buildings."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 28. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON].

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, this matter was reported to the House a short time ago and I trust that all are familiar with it. At that time there was doubt in the minds of many Members just what the provision related to. In order that you may all understand, there has been prepared this map, and the part of the map that is indicated in yellow indicates the seven buildings that are on leased land, that are involved in the recommendation of the committee. Gentlemen will notice that the map shows the location of the temporary buildings as being north of B Street, between Eighteenth and Twenty-first Streets NW. South of B are buildings occupied by the Army and the Navy. They were the more permanent of the war structures.

Mr. CANNON. The cement buildings are on the Mall.

Mr. WASON. Those are the semipermanent buildings that were erected during the war and that are now occupied by the Army and the Navy.

Mr. MONDELL. And the ground in question is across the street from the Army and Navy building?

Mr. CANNON. The cement buildings that are permanent and good.

Mr. WASON. Yes. The buildings that are across the street from the Army and Navy buildings on the north side of B Street and extending up practically to New York Avenue are on leased land. During the war the Government took a lease of this area. Those leases expire this year. The leases were drawn differently from the way most business men would draw leases. They provided a rental to the owners which aggregates $52,000 for all of them. At the expiration of the lease the Government must put the land back in the same condition it was in when the lease was executed, or when the Government entered into possession. In order to put these temporary buildings on the land leased it was necessary to destroy some of the old structures, and they were destroyed or taken off and new structures put on. When the lease expires, the lease requires putting that land back in practically the same condition that it was in when the lease was executed and the Government took possession, or we must settle in damages.

Mr. STEPHENS. Can we not renew the lease?

Mr. WASON. They say not. There is no provision for that.

Mr. STEPHENS. We could condemn and take the property.

Mr. WASON. Yes; but the condemnation proceedings, I might say, in the opinion of men who ought to know, would cost more than the option which the Government has on most of that land.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Are all of these buildings now occupied by Government offices?

Mr. WASON. Many of them are, though all of them at this moment are not.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Has the gentleman any idea of the amount of rent it would take to lease buildings in place of these?

Mr. WASON. I want to come to that a little bit later.

Mr. KEARNS. For what terms did the leases run?

Mr. WASON. The leases were for five years. They will expire this year. To put the lots back in the condition they were in at the time the leases were executed would cost about what the buildings thereon now could be salvaged for. We have had some experience in salvaging temporary buildings during the war, down at Sixth Street. It is estimated that the salvage value of these buildings, if they were wrecked this summer, might possibly yield $75,000 to $80,000, and it is also estimated that the Government would have to pay under these leases to settle with the owners about that much, perhaps a little more, for the damages they have done to the property while in possession. So that the salvage value of the temporary buildings would practically liquidate the damages that the owners could claim at the expiration of the lease.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has there ever been any hearing on this proposition by the proper legislative committee of the House, or by any committee of the House?

Mr. WASON. There has been no hearing before a committee of the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Was there a hearing before the Senate committee?

Mr. WASON. I have never seen a copy of one.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that they have had no hearings, and that this amendment was put on on the floor of the Senate by a Senator and that we have absolutely no information before any committee of the House or the Senate with reference to the advisability of the proposition?

Mr. WASON. I am not informed as to the procedure in the Senate, but since the matter came to the attention of the conferees we have gone into the matter very carefully in some detail.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Can the gentleman furnish the House information as to the owners of the land, as to the amount they paid for it, as to the amount of assessment there is on the land at the present time, and the testimony of outside disinterested persons as to its probable and actual value at this time upon the market? I think the House ought to have that information before it votes a million and a half dollars out of the Treasury for some land down there.

Mr. WASON. If the gentleman will let me go on, I will come to that point, and if I do not cover it generally I will be glad to answer so far as my knowledge goes. The proposition comes to the conferees from the Senate, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] stated. There is a Public Building Commission that has to do with the allotment of space for Government activities, and the Senator to whom the gentleman referred is the chairman of that commission. He made the motion in the Senate, as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows. Now, then, here is this land leased with these buildings on it and leases about to expire. A Government official has options on practically all the land generally on the map they have leased, and the average price on those options is $2.20 per square foot. Whether that is high or low is a matter where men can differ, but we have some comparison to make. The United States Government paid $2 per square foot for that lot years ago [indicating]. They paid $2 a square foot for the lot there, where the new Interior Building is, some years ago. Recently the easterly portion of that lot on the north side of New York Avenue has been sold for the Memorial Hall, and the price paid for that is a trifle over $4 per square foot. On all of this down here we have options, or nearly all. I think there is one lot we have not, which brings the average price to $2.20 per square foot.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. When this conference report was up before, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] stated, as I understood him, that some of the options were about to expire, and I know it made quite an influence on my mind at the time, and that if we were going to get any advantage of those options we had better operate pretty quickly. I understood that some were going to expire about the time he was speaking.

Mr. WASON. They did.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What is the situation about that now?

Mr. WASON. Some of them did expire, and some did not, but let me say to my friend, who is a good lawyer, that if some man had an option and it expired at midnight——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. WASON. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana for some more time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WASON. I will ask for five minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. WASON. If some one is attempting to gouge the Government who owns land right beside somebody who sells his land for $2.20, my friend from Illinois would welcome the opportunity to represent the Government in condemnation proceedings, and that is the situation in several instances. But on most of the options, I think, there will be no difficulty in carrying out, if the authorization is allowed. Now, we have paid already for these temporary buildings over $2,000,000 in construction. The life of them is from 12 to 15 years. They are already being occupied and being used. The heat is put in by the Government from the heating plant in the Army and Navy Building, the wiring is there, the lights are there, the sprinklers are in there to prevent serious fire damage. They are of concrete construction outside, good floors, and many of them are occupied by Government activities.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. I will.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Do I understand there is a clause in the lease whereby the Government claims ownership of these buildings, or would they have to be torn down?

Mr. WASON. They can abandon if they want to. The Government only had the lease upon the land, and of course the lessee can take the buildings off before the leases expire.

Mr. WURZBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. I will.

Mr. WURZBACH. Were there any improvements or buildings on any of this leased property at the time the contract went into effect?

Mr. WASON. There were some buildings there, but they have been destroyed and these temporary buildings put in place thereof, and under the lease the owners can oblige the Government to put the structures back in the condition they were when the Government took them under the lease or settle damages.

Mr. WURZBACH. That would be, as a matter of fact, impossible of performance, would it not?

Mr. WASON. The probable thing would be damages.

Mr. WURZBACH. Does the gentleman think the owners of that land would be satisfied to accept the property in the present condition of the buildings on it?

Mr. WASON. That would be impossible, because there are so many owners in fee.

Mr. WURZBACH. Do you think the owners of that land would be willing to accept the buildings on the land?

Mr. WASON. I can answer only for myself. If I owned one lot there with buildings on it, I should say no.

Mr. WURZBACH. You think, then, they would insist upon those buildings being removed or upon payment of damages?

Mr. WASON. If they view the property the same as I do, they would.

Mr. WURZBACH. What is the nature of the improvements that were on this property at the time the Government leased it?

Mr. WASON. I know about one. It was of brick construction and was used as a tenement. It was not in very good condition.

Mr. WURZBACH. Has the gentleman information as to the improvements on the balance of the property?

Mr. WASON. What property?

Mr. WURZBACH. On the different pieces of property?

Mr. WASON. On a large portion of that property there were no improvements at the time the Government took the lease.

Mr. WURZBACH. No improvement at all?

Mr. WASON. No; on some of it there was.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I may say that I am in sympathy with the gentleman. Who has supervision of these buildings now?

Mr. WASON. It comes under Colonel Sherrill, acting for the Government.

Mr. MANN. Has any reason been given here why the Government ought to purchase this land, and why the proposition was not made to the legislative end of the Government in the proper way at the proper time for consideration by the proper committee, instead of offering it offhand as a Senate amendment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will explain to the gentleman from Illinois. There was an independent bill introduced in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

There was an independent resolution introduced in the Senate for the purpose of doing this thing, because the leases expired, and because of the desire on the part of the committee to get the Government activities to use the space in order to avoid rent. That was the reason they urged upon us as the necessity for passing this bill. And I will say that they are trying to raise now the rental of the Department of Justice Building $300,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. But there was no estimate made for it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. MANN. There was no request for this which came through the ordinary and proper channels, and while I am inclined to think that we ought to buy the land I think somebody somewhere is subject to severe criticism for not bringing this to the attention of Congress in the proper way. Now, having relieved my mind in that way, may I ask the gentleman if these buildings are now all occupied by the Government?

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The space is needed by the Government?

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And if we abandon these buildings, as I understand, we have got to go out and rent privately owned buildings with equal space?

Mr. WASON. Yes, sir; that is right.

Mr. MANN. And at a considerable and probably more cost than it would be in the course of three or four years to buy this land?

Mr. WASON. It is estimated by a member of the Public Building Commission that the floor space that is available for use in Government activities in these temporary buildings will, if hired of private owners in Washington, be of such an amount that the rentals will equal the $1,500,000 that we can acquire the land for in three years. In other words, it is estimated it will cost $500,000 a year.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know whether all the floor space is taken and availed of in the Army and Navy Building down near the Lincoln Memorial?

Mr. WASON. I know that the activities occupying them claim that it is all needed, but I think they are going to be crowded into a smaller space if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has its way, and I believe they will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Who is responsible for tearing down Government buildings in Seaton Park and making the argument for us now to buy property?

Mr. WASON. What park?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Seaton Park, on the Mall. Three or four buildings have been torn down there in the last year. Who is responsible for it?

Mr. WASON. Congress is responsible for that.

Mr. MANN. We provided by legislation that they should be torn down.

Mr. WASON. The Committee on Appropriations last year—and the gentleman from Indiana and myself were on the subcommittee—provided that instead of laying out any more money in keeping the buildings so they could be used they should be salvaged at once.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is it not true that those buildings were in better condition and far more convenient to the general public than these other buildings?

Mr. WASON. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And has not the very fact that they have been torn down made it possible to come here now and say that we must buy this property without a hearing and without an opportunity to investigate by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and get the exact facts, and without a hearing on the part of the committee in either branch of Congress, in order to avoid having to rent those buildings?

Mr. WASON. I will say no, because at the time you and I recommended to this House the disposition of those temporary buildings down there on Sixth Street last year, I did not know that these temporary buildings on the north side of B Street were on leased land. But in regard to the condition of the buildings, that is essential. I can say to my colleague candidly that those buildings that were destroyed and were situated between Sixth and Seventh Streets are no comparison to these buildings, either in construction or condition, as they existed when they commenced to salvage those and destroy them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Senator from the State of Utah, if I may be permitted to quote from him, stated in the Senate yesterday, as reported in the newspapers, that there has been a demand made by the owner of the building occupied by the Department of Justice for $300,000 per annum at the expiration of that lease on June 30. The Government now pays $36,000, and the Senate adopted an amendment to the bill providing for an appropriation for the Departments of Justice and State of $75,000 per annum. He was asked what the Government was going to do. He said the Government was going to stay there until the Supreme Court passed upon it.

Now, why can not the Government stay in this property for a few months until we can get information upon this matter and thus be enabled to vote intelligently? I do not know whether, so far as I am personally concerned, I would vote for it or not, if I had all the facts; but I certainly do not want to vote for a proposition involving a million and a half dollars when there has been no hearing by a committee of the House or Senate on the subject and we are not supplied with the information which I think we ought to have before we vote for an appropriation of that kind.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. PADGETT. Is it not apparent and evident that these buildings will not be in demand from anybody else except the Government? And is it not also true that they are in the off part of the city, out of the business area, and out of the business section, and that the owners of the buildings will be more than glad of an opportunity to renew the leases to the Government if they should expire? Because if the leases expire there will be absolutely no demand, and they will have the property on which they will have to pay taxes, and they will be absolutely glad of the opportunity to lease them.

Mr. WASON. I wish the statement of my friend from Tennessee coincided with the facts. But the facts are exactly the opposite. The owners of the buildings refuse to re-lease.

Mr. PADGETT. Of course, they want to force a sale, and they say now that they will not lease; but if the Government calls their bluff and they have vacant property on their hands and taxes to pay, they will rejoice at the opportunity to release that property.

Mr. WASON. I will say to my friend that I do not know whether they will or not. The gentleman probably knows more about real estate in Washington than I do, but I know that there is a contention here——

Mr. PADGETT. Let the Government call their bluff, and——

Mr. WASON. There is no bluff. All you have to do is to ask the Government to make them live up to the contract entered into with the Government five years ago. It was not such a contract as a few of us who knew about real estate would have signed. We would have drawn the leases different.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Is it not true that the Government can condemn at any time?

Mr. WASON. Certainly.

Mr. ROSE. Does the gentleman believe that the condemnation proceedings would result in such an enormous expenditure as is now asked for?

Mr. WASON. I do not know what the result of condemnation proceedings would be here. I know that the lawyers who would have to handle them have plenty of work to do without any additional work.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, may I have two minutes more?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield two minutes more.

Mr. WASON. I know that it takes time to go through the necessary steps in condemnation, and I believe that before a jury or before a court, from what I have investigated here, they could easily show that that land is worth more than $2.20 a square foot on the average, in view of the fact that recently that little lot right there [indicating] has been sold for over $4 a square foot. Before the Pan American Building was constructed some years ago the United States Government paid $2 per square foot then.

I have been told by a real estate man who is not interested in this vicinity but who has lived in Washington for a great many years and has owned a great deal of property here, that $2.20 per square foot in his opinion was cheap. I will not tell you his name, but this was his language: "If the Government will not take it, I think I would be willing to go in with you and buy it at that price and hold it for speculation." That was his statement.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. About what is the life of the present building on the property?

Mr. WASON. From 12 to 15 years.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. RICKETTS. What department of the Government made this lease in the first instance?

Mr. WASON. The War Department.

Mr. RICKETTS. Have you a copy of the leases?

Mr. WASON. I have seen some of them.

Mr. RICKETTS. It is a straight-out lease for five years at a certain sum per year?

Mr. WASON. They are different. They are not written alike.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do I understand that this is to be used as an extension of the Government Printing Office?

Mr. WASON. No, indeed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is what was read, or what some gentleman said.

Mr. WASON. No. These are temporary buildings at Eighteenth and B Streets, right across from the Army and Navy buildings.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASON. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Would it not be practicable and proper to use these buildings for the Department of Justice in case we are unable to secure a reasonable lease of the property now occupied by that department?

Mr. WASON. Yes. It is contemplated that unless the Department of Justice can get satisfactory terms they will move down there. The Alien Property Custodian is going to be put in there. The Agricultural Department, that is scattered all over Washington, will be put in there, and for the rent that we will have to pay private owners we will pay for this land in three years and own it at a fair price.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has again expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 21.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 29: Page 30, line 8, strike out "$300,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$375,000."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment and concur in the same with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Wood of Indiana moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 29 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert $325,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 31: Page 32, line 22, after the word "ships," strike out the colon and insert: "and (d) $55,000,000 from moneys collected from mortgages, leases, accounts and bills receivable other than those arising from current operations, and from moneys collected from the sale of ships, plants, material, securities, and other assets prior to July 1, 1923, less such portion of said $55,000,000 which shall have been collected during the fiscal year 1922 under the provisions of an act entitled 'An act making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes,' approved March 4, 1921."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur, with the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Wood of Indiana moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and (d) not to exceed $25,000,000 from moneys collected from mortgages, leases, accounts and bills receivable other than those arising from current operations, and from moneys collected from the sale of ships, plants, material, securities, and other assets during the fiscal year 1923."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I think the House is familiar with this proposition. It has been voted upon, and by an overwhelming vote has been rejected on at least two occasions. The question is whether we are going to change our minds and give to the Shipping Board this additional amount of $25,000,000. Whatever you do, I want at least to put the facts before the House.

The facts are that though early in this session the Committee on Appropriations took the position that it would not report to the House an amount in excess of that which was estimated for by the Budget, in the case of the Shipping Board—of all departments of the Government—the bill as originally reported to the House contained, in addition to the $100,000,000 asked for by the Shipping Board, this legislation making available whatever balance there was on July 1, 1922, out of this total fund of $55,000,000. It was estimated that this balance would be $30,000,000. Now, the only change that is presented to you by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] is that the Shipping Board will certainly have $25,000,000 instead of $30,000,000, as it would have had if the original provision was agreed to.

Now, let me show you what money the Shipping Board wanted for the next fiscal year. The original request submitted to Congress was for $50,000,000. They then came before the committee and discovered how generous the committee was. Therefore, after they had had the hearing on January 4, they went back and submitted a supplemental estimate which I hold in my hand. In this estimate the Director of the Budget submits a request for $50,000,000 additional for claims, making the total estimate $100,000,000, as against the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year of $73,500,000.

Now, their hearings began on January 3. If, as late as January 7, four days after the hearing began, they asked for only $100,000,000, why will you vote for this provision giving them $25,000,000 more? Some gentlemen say they want it for claims. Not exactly.

Mr. Lasker said he would like to have this $55,000,000 made available during the next fiscal year for the following purposes:

We ask you to simply authorize the $55,000,000 as a continuing appropriation, and we will use only such part as we need in the liquidation of debts, including the payment of the United States mail obligations and the reconditioning of the Leviathan, and to generally clean up for general purposes.

"To generally clean up for general purposes." In other words, on general principles they want you to give them $25,000,000 more than they ever estimated for to the Budget Bureau. To this date no estimate has come from the Director of the Budget for this $25,000,000. Now, why are you going to do it? What is there in the record of the Shipping Board to justify you in giving them $25,000,000 more than they asked the Director of the Budget to recommend? What are you going to have the Bureau of the Budget for if you are going to have the Shipping Board submit supplemental estimates increasing their estimates by $5,000,000 at a shot, and then, after they get that recommendation from the Budget Bureau, come and ask you for $25,000,000 more? Do you know of any other department of the Government that comes to this Congress and asks for $100,000,000, and then after getting the $100,000,000 asks for $25,000,000 more, just for good measure, and gets it?

Let me call your attention to another thing. This bill as it stands provides that the Shipping Board, for the general expenses of the Fleet Corporation for the next fiscal year, shall have: (a) The amount on hand July 1, 1922. You do not know what that will be and I do not know what that will be.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes more.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. First, they are authorized to spend the amount on hand July 1, 1922. We do not know what that is, (b) $50,000,000, (c) the amount received during the fiscal year 1923 from the operation of ships, (d) $55,000,000 of the unexpended balances. They get not only that but whatever is received from the operation and whatever amount of money is on hand July 1, and in addition to that my friend from Indiana wants to give them this $25,000,000. Then they have $50,000,000 for claims.

Now, they may say that they need this $25,000,000 for claims. They have $50,000,000 to pay the claims, and I have read the statement of Mr. Lasker that he wants it for general purposes to clean up. They do not need it. Furthermore, if during the year there is any necessity for more money, you know that Congress is going to be in session for some time during the balance of the fiscal year. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggested when the matter came up last, is there any reason why they can not come back during this session if they need it and ask for it through the Budget instead of coming directly to Congress?

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is this money to be used in the settlement of claims?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That statement has been made on the floor, but the statement of Mr. Lasker is that they want it as "a continuing appropriation, and will use only such part as we need in the liquidation of debts, including the payments of the United States mail obligations and the reconditioning of the Leviathan, and to generally clean up for general purposes."

Mr. WALSH. Did not he further elaborate it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; having asked for it, he knew he was going to get it, and that is all that appears in the hearings.

Mr. WALSH. Then it can all be applied to the settlement of claims?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It can be applied to all purposes. The statement was general enough to leave him so that he could spend it for any purpose—I see no tying of his hands. I know that this was not estimated for through the Budget.

Every dollar they asked for through the Budget has been granted them, and in addition they get the amount on hand July 1 and the amount they get from the operation of the ships. Furthermore, if you do this you serve notice upon the department that after they get all they ask for through the Budget Bureau they can come to Congress and get additional amounts. Even a Congress as generous as this one is can not afford to give it to them.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not true that, on page 33 of the bill, we have already appropriated $50,000,000, of which $30,000,000 will be immediately available for the payment of claims?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They asked for $50,000,000 for claims and got it. If they had asked for $100,000,000 they would have got $100,000,000, but fortunately they were mild in their demands.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Has anything new arisen since we voted on this before?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Nothing except that it appears that we are to have a deficit next year of $480,000,000. My good friend the gentleman from Indiana is ordinarily a watch dog of the Treasury, but when it comes to the Shipping Board, he goes to sea, and he is at sea now. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is what the Shipping Board is for.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina does not wish, I am sure, to confuse the minds of the membership with reference to the payment of these claims. The $50,000,000 we appropriated, authorizing the payment of claims, are for the payment of claims that were created prior to the present administration during the war and for war material. They have nothing to do with the present operations of the Shipping Board. That is to say, suppose a man in Michigan furnished a certain number of ships during the continuance of the war under a contract about which there might have been some dispute and that dispute compromised. That is one of the items that would be included in the $50,000,000 appropriation for claims.

Now, the manner in which the money is collected, including the $55,000,000, is for the purpose of paying debts incurred since the war and outstanding indebtedness from the operations of the Shipping Board.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SNELL. When they made the estimate for the appropriation did not they take into consideration the outside expenses and debts?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. I want to point out the peculiar condition that we are in in reference to the $55,000,000 item. The Jones Act provided that these collections should be paid into the Treasury. Last year we changed the Jones Act and said to the Shipping Board if you are going to have any money to defray the expenses of operation or the paying of debts you owe for operation you will have to collect your own money and apply it. Therefore we authorized them to collect the $50,000,000 and apply it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did not we give them the cash and also give them the authority? This year you gave them the cash, and now they want the authority.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; we are only extending the authority. The gentleman is trying to confuse the minds of the Members on this $50,000,000. The $50,000,000 has nothing to do with the operation or the paying of debts that were created through the operation. Here is the situation we are in: A year ago, or when the bill was passed authorizing the collection of this $55,000,000, they were given the right within the fiscal year of 1922 to collect that $55,000,000. That was before this present board came in. When this board came in they stopped that whole process and commenced taking an inventory of stock and the property on hand and the debts of the Shipping Board, and in consequence there was a great space of time in which they did not collect any money. Up to the last three or four months they only collected six or seven million dollars, and since then they have collected some $15,000,000. Now they want authority to collect the $25,000,000 before the last day of June, 1923.

They are not asking for any more authority, but that the time be extended during the next fiscal year for the collection of this sum. Belgium owes us a large amount of money, and it is a part of their business to collect it. England owes us a large amount of money, and it is the business of the Shipping Board to collect it. Those gentlemen over on the other side of the sea are hoping that this Congress will do what some of you gentlemen are advising shall be done, namely, that the authority of these gentlemen to make these collections may end on the 30th of June.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. There seems to be a misunderstanding. Certainly it is not clear to me. Is it absolutely necessary to do anything as far as their authority to collect this money is concerned?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I want to get clear in my mind. If it is necessary to do anything so that they will be allowed to collect the money, we want to do that, but the only question is whether we will give them authority to spend it for the Shipping Board after they collect it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is what is included in this. It is the same authority that was had last year.

Mr. SNELL. Why does it have anything to do toward the collection then?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is their business to collect the debts. These are debts contracted by these foreign governments, due to the Shipping Board.

Mr. SNELL. We understand that, and we want them to collect those debts, but we do not want to give them authority to expend the money after they have collected it. It seems to me that unless we pass this as the gentleman asks us to they can not collect it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They can collect it if it is collected before the 1st of July.

Mr. SNELL. Why not after the 1st of July?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Simply because the authority which you gave them under a rule would expire.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, does the gentleman from Indiana contend that under the Jones Act there is anything that restricts or prevents them from collecting that money? Is not this the fact, that they are directed to go ahead and collect it, but after July 1, when they do collect it, it goes into the Treasury and is not available for them to spend?

Mr. SNELL. That is the only question that we are discussing.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My friend from Indiana will not question the correctness of that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely not, but here is the trouble. Anyone who has had anything to do with collecting indebtedness from a foreign government knows how much trouble there is involved.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman is now getting onto another question. We are not discussing that. We want to collect that money, but we do not want to spend it, as I understand it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is a business man conducting a business, we would say. He has authority if he collects money within a certain time, due to a certain concern, to apply that money in his own business. Suppose in order to collect that you have to make reductions, because you need the money to run your business.

Mr. SNELL. What authority have they got for making a reduction?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have ample authority. They have a right to compromise. The men who are charged with the administration of the Shipping Board have the right to conduct their business just as the gentleman would conduct his own business, in the absence of fraud.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman mean to give out the impression that Mr. Lasker, in charge of the Shipping Board, would absolutely sacrifice the interests of this country and consent to a discount rather than have the money go into the Treasury after July 1?

Mr. SNELL. That is the purport of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I shall make my own statement, and gentlemen can draw their own conclusions. Here is what Mr. Lasker would do, or might be inclined to do, just as the gentleman would. If you have a given policy, if you have a given amount of work laid down and you have to have a certain amount of money to do that work, and you knew that by making a reduction you could save your employer, the Government of the United States in this case, some money you would do it, because by waiting and going through the dilatory tactics employed it would cost you more. What would be your duty in such a case?

Mr. SNELL. That does not seem to be the question before us.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the only question.

Mr. SNELL. I maintain the question before us is whether we will give them authority to spend this money after they collect it. Let the gentleman refute that and show us why that is not the question.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is one of the questions.

Mr. SNELL. That is the only one that we are contending about at this time. We all want them to collect the money.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman wants a little time, I will give it to him; but I will ask him to please let me speak for a little while.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is it the gentleman's purpose to move the previous question when he concludes?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would like to have about two minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Very well; I yield the gentleman two minutes now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I simply want this time to keep the record straight. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] made a remark a little while ago to the effect that those who are opposing this proposition are trying to cripple the Shipping Board. Those who are opposing this proposition are acting in accord with Mr. Lasker's own opinion and his own earnest protests to Congress made last July. Gentlemen will remember when this was up before that I read from hearings some very strong statements made by Mr. Lasker on this subject. To make the record complete, I want to read to you a portion of a statement issued by Mr. Lasker to the press on July 18, 1921, when he was new in the business and fresh from the people and the taxpayers. Here is what he had to say about this particular proposition, and he was referring to the $55,000,000 which is carried in the present bill. He says:

> This is a basically wrong thing to do, anyway. Therefore I am going to ask Congress to withdraw that permission and require us to cover into the Treasury all money derived from sales. I do not want to be at the head of a business that is run in any such fashion. If department heads do not have to account for money they use, it is easy enough for them to fool me and fool themselves. It makes for criminal waste and extravagance just as undoubtedly it has in the past.

That was Mr. Lasker in July, 1921. I would like to know what has come over the spirit of his dreams after six or seven months' service on the Shipping Board.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will try to tell the gentleman. Mr. Lasker made the statement the gentleman attributes to him, and he did it immediately or within a few days after taking charge. He was laying down then a business policy to which we will all subscribe. There are a thousand things that happened during the war that make exceptions to general business and the very creation of this Shipping Board is one of them. Mr. Lasker found out that he had gotten himself into something entirely new, the like of which he never before confronted. Let me give you one of the reasons why he thinks this should be extended. He says:

> The Lloyd Royal Belge owes the Shipping Board on our books approximately $12,000,000. We have had the matter of settlement with them under negotiation with the company and with the Belgian ambassador. They offered us some two weeks ago $8,200,000 in settlement of the claim. We offered to take $9,300,000, which we considered a fair amount. Our reason for making this offer is that they threatened us with extended litigation in the courts abroad, which would drag along for years, giving, as a basis for the claim, technicalities which could tie us up indefinitely.
>
> To-day I received a letter from the Lloyd Royal Belge refusing to pay $9,300,000 withdrawing their offer of two weeks ago of $8,200,000, and virtually giving us an ultimatum to immediately accept $6,500,000 or have a lawsuit.

The Royal Belgian Government now is hoping that you gentlemen will take and do the thing here you are attempting to do and thereby give them time to take this thing through the courts.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. How will this affect it one way or the other——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will affect it in this way: If we do not take and extend this time, so far as being able to compromise is concerned——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What will stop them from compromising? They can wait a year. They can settle in 30 days. That does not——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the gentleman from South Carolina in conducting a business of his own would exercise authority and use his best judgment in the transaction of that business, and he would not want to come to Congress every time he makes a settlement and get the sanction of Congress.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This does not require it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the whole trouble about this business. This Shipping Board is something entirely new, the like of which we never had to deal with before. It is a business of the Government and we are not recognizing it as such, but simply recognize it as a pure business function which it is not.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS. Has not Mr. Lasker or the Shipping Board authority to settle these claims at any future time? If this amendment is not passed, will it not have the same authority to collect all of this money that is due just the same as if this were passed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Under the Jones bill they have the general authority to transact this general shipping business, but they have not the authority that is given under this amendment; and here is the peculiar thing about this business: The Congress is simply playing a shuttlecock game with this thing. In the Jones bill we make one provision under which this business shall be done, and under the amendment in last year's appropriation bill we make an entirely different provision. They have accepted the last amendment and have proceeded under that until this time, and if you wish and can force them they may collect the whole amount within the next two months, or before the 1st day of July.

Mr. STEPHENS. Can not they collect now, whether we give them the authority to use it after it is collected, or not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is not the only question whether they can use this money after it is collected?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is absolutely true.

Mr. STEPHENS. But they can collect, whether we give them that authority or not, and it is the gentleman's idea that they have not got the authority to use this money after it is collected, and therefore they will not make any effort to collect it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not say that. If we give them the right to collect this money, they will not only use their best judgment in collecting it but also they can use it in their business to advantage.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is the question.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Some gentlemen here say that they should come to Congress, and in the main that is a good proposition and should be followed.

But here is a business with ramifications all over the world. They need something to-day that they did not anticipate yesterday, and they are going to need something to-morrow that they had no conception of to-day. Now, they must come to Congress and state whether or not they have spent any of this money. Under the Jones Act they must collect it and put it in the Treasury.

Mr. STEPHENS. The only question is whether they will have authority to use and expend this money as they collect it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is it.

Mr. STEPHENS. And that has not anything to do with the extension of time, so far as they have authority to collect it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have authority to collect. It is simply a matter of business expediency and business policy. You gave them this very authority and power. Now, then, you are going to take it away from them right in the middle of its execution. It was the contemplation of Congress that they had the right to collect this money and use it in the operating expenses.

Mr. SNELL. You would not want to leave the impression that the Shipping Board was sacrificing some particular interest in order to get this money collected before the 1st of July in order that they might have it to spend?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not want to leave that impression, but I want to leave this impression, that if you do not do this thing you are going to encourage the dilatory tactics of gentlemen who are on the other side and who owe us large sums of money.

Mr. SNELL. Just explain how it will be possible to encourage dilatory tactics?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It was explained in the letter I have just read you, where they are attempting to make these compromises, and they have told them that unless we accept the amount of money they offer they will extend this thing and drag it through the courts for time immemorial.

Mr. SNELL. What has that to do with the extension of the time? You have not made it clear.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am trying to make it plain. Perhaps I am unfortunate in so doing. I do not know how much money it is going to take for the upkeep of the Shipping Board during the next fiscal year. No man can tell.

Mr. SNELL. I guess that is true.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I know that the best guesses they have had in the past have missed it by many, many millions of dollars. I know that if these men had a little bit of surplus money with which to make a just contract, they could save money, rather than letting the man who is going to contract with them know that before we could pay him he must come down to Congress and get a bill through here.

I want to say to you, gentlemen, that by reason of the bad faith practiced by the Government upon men who have contracted with it we have brought ourselves into very great disrepute, these men knowing that they are taking the greatest chances in the world, no matter how good the faith of the man might be who represented the Government, or how much he may believe at the time he made the contract on behalf of the Government that the bill would be paid. Every one of you has constituents now who are appealing to you to help them get the money that has been due them for years and years.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that this $25,000,000 is to be used for operating expenses?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is to be used; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Has not the proper appropriation been made for that purpose?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. We made an appropriation of $50,000,000 for the purpose of covering a deficit in operating expenses, upon the evidence that we had at the time. But they are running behind now at the rate of $4,000,000 a month.

Mr. DOWELL. Originally this was for the purpose of paying claims?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it was not.

Mr. DOWELL. Now it is for the purpose of operating expenses?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it is for the purpose of paying debts. Here is what happened: When this $50,000,000 was given it under the old bill they owed debts all over the world. They asked us to give the money. We said, "You go and make the collections and apply them to the extent of $50,000,000."

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman not think the board should come before the committee and show what the expenses are?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is simply a matter of business expediency, and if you think these gentlemen can save more money to the Treasury by doing it that way, than by using their judgment, it is all right. If it was purely a governmental function, I would say all right, but it is a business conducted by the Government and ought to be conducted on business principles.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I understood the gentleman to say in response to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] that the $50,000,000 appropriation was not available for the general expenses and administrative purposes, such as reconditioning and repair of ships and other general purposes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Which $50,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In subsection (b).

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The $50,000,000 was based on the theory of the deficit created from month to month; that it would take $50,000,000 in addition to what they might collect in order to cover the deficit.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Indiana agree that the Shipping Board did not ask for $50,000,000 for general expenses of the Shipping Board, and you gave them $50,000,000, and for claims?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman confuses that item with the $50,000,000. The $50,000,000 other than the $50,000,000 for the payment of claims was for the purpose of anticipating a deficit of $50,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman provides this for all purposes?

Mr. DOWELL. Did the gentleman state a moment ago that proper appropriation had not been made for the running expenses of the board, and that this $25,000,000 was to be used in addition to what had already been appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I said that if this was expended, whatever was appropriated, could be used for the conduct of the business.

Mr. DOWELL. But you have already allowed $50,000,000 for that purpose?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is purely a question of business policy. Take the proposition made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. That $50,000,000 is for the purpose of operating and this $25,000,000 for the purpose of operating, and then you would have $75,000,000 for the purpose of operating. Now then, if at the end of the year they have got a surplus, or anything left over, they have got to use it for the payment of claims. I say it is good policy to let them collect this money in a business sort of way and apply it in a business sort of way for the payment of claims, rather than to come here in a tedious way and tie up the money and accomplish no good results.

Mr. EDMONDS. As the matter stands to-day, the $50,000,000 will about cover the operating deficit of the Shipping Board?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is right.

Mr. EDMONDS. They will not need more than that. They are losing now about $4,000,000 a month. But times are getting a little better in the shipping business, and it is possible they will not lose that much money. Now, would it not be well if you were to take this $25,000,000 and apply it in your amendment just to the payment of claims and leave it stand that way? Then there can be no doubt in the minds of Members as to how you want to apply it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not care how they apply it, whether in paying debts or in the operation of the business, so as to show a surplus at the end of the year.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair in his time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. If this amendment is voted down, will a motion that the House still further insist on its disagreement be in order?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Now, gentlemen, I have told you all I want to say to you about this business, and it is for you to determine it. I believe it is the part of good business to continue in the hands of those gentlemen the power to collect this $25,000,000 in the year 1923 and spend it in the best manner possible in the conduct of the affairs of the Shipping Board.

Mr. DOWELL. If they needed this $25,000,000, why did they not present their estimate in the first instance, when they asked for $50,000,000 and you gave it to them?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They thought they could collect the entire $55,000,000 before the expiration of the year, but after that time and before the termination of the hearing before the committee they concluded that because of the long delay in completing the inventory that they had to make and other conditions which they could not anticipate they found that up to that time they had collected only $7,000,000, and that unless they made an extraordinary effort they could not collect more than $20,000,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Ought not that to have been provided for at the time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. If a mistake was made, it was made at that time. But that was the policy we adopted then, to encourage them, and they started out along that line of policy and conducted their business in that way. Now, we propose to take and reverse it.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CLOUSE. I wonder if the gentleman can tell us, if he has the facts in his possession, the facts with respect to the amount of money that is likely to be available and left on hand July 1?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is only an estimate or assumption that they will have collected by the 1st of July $20,000,000.

Mr. CLOUSE. And that will be available for defraying the necessary operating expenses?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and I suppose it has all been used in refitting vessels and for other purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is just throwing a smoke screen all around this proposition. He wants you to believe that this is a plan to collect debts from foreign debtors and others. If you want to increase the appropriation for the Shipping Board, then adopt the amendment as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations; but if you do not want to appropriate any more money than we have already appropriated, vote down the amendment. I understand that we gave them all that was asked for by the Budget Bureau. If you do not want to appropriate any more money than we have already appropriated, then you want to vote down this proposition. But it has nothing whatever to do with their ability to collect these accounts.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I think there is some confusion on the point involved here. It seems to me the reason for that is that originally the law provided for the expenditure of the receipts of the Shipping Board. But that was terminated by the Jones Act, and after that goes into effect the money goes into the Treasury.

Now, it is very analogous—and that is the reason why I took the floor—it is very analogous to the system that governs the Postal Service. The Postal Service, we will say, is in receipt of about a million dollars a day in cash, but the Constitution provides that that money shall go into the Treasury unless it is appropriated by Congress. Now, then, to avoid the difficulty of coming in here for an act of Congress to pay everybody's salary every month, Congress passes a Post Office appropriation bill every year for the next fiscal year, authorizing the money required to be paid out of the postal receipts. That obviates the necessity of stopping the wheels of Government, because the money is appropriated out of the postal receipts instead of out of the Treasury.

Here you say the Shipping Board is in receipt of revenues, but, as it is explained here by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], that money will go into the Treasury, and they can not pay their debts with it unless Congress appropriates for each specific item due to the creditor. Of course, that is impossible, and therefore the money will be paid in, but it has to lie there in large sums until Congress makes provision for its disposal.

Now, I can not see that there is any danger whatever in adopting the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, because the only difference is that if you do not pass it this money will go into the Treasury and have to wait the pleasure of Congress when it wants to authorize its expenditure, whereas under the provisions of this bill the Shipping Board will not only have authority to collect it, but authority to spend it in their business to pay their audited and honest debts.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Would it not be a pretty good idea, then, to appropriate $25,000,000 more for the Shipping Board now, but to let all this money that is collected go into the Treasury, the same as is done in the Postal Service?

Mr. STEENERSON. It does not go into the Treasury in the Postal Service, because before it is collected you passed a bill to pay all expenditures out of the postal revenues. You appropriate a year in advance from that revenue to pay the salaries of postmasters and other salaries before you get the money.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. It is a fact, however, is it not, that we have appropriated for the operating expenses of the Shipping Board all that they asked?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not know about that.

Mr. BEGG. The records show it.

Mr. STEENERSON. You certainly have not appropriated for the debts they owe. They ought to have authority to pay these out of receipts instead of waiting till the money is in the Treasury and then appropriated by Congress.

Mr. BEGG. We have appropriated all they asked—$100,000,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not so understand it. That was for operating expenses, but there are claims that are undisputed and should also be paid.

Mr. BEGG. Now, if we give them this other $25,000,000 we are simply boosting the ante $25,000,000 more, are we not?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; you are not losing a cent. They are not assumed to pay out anything that they are not obliged to pay, any more than the Post Office Department will pay out anything that it is not required by law to pay. If you should fail to pass the Post Office appropriation bill, the postal receipts would go into the Treasury, and the men working for the Government would get nothing until you made an appropriation to pay them.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman believe the House ought to go on record as appropriating $25,000,000 to allow the Shipping Board to scatter around as they see fit?

Mr. STEENERSON. I believe the House ought to act on business principles. When you engage in a business analogous to the business of the Post Office Department the running expenses and debts must be paid right away, and you should pass a law authorizing that institution to pay those running expenses and debts, as soon as they are incurred, out of the receipts. If you send out an agent to do a commercial business for you, you authorize and expect him to pay the bills honestly incurred out of money coming in, as well as collecting for articles sold. If you can not trust him to keep honest accounts, he is not fit for the job. We must assume the same here.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. WOOD of Indiana) there were—ayes 27, noes 48.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 31.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 31.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House request a further conference with the Senate on this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman offer that as a motion or ask unanimous consent?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I offer it as a motion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first put it as a unanimous-consent request. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, if the House should not ask for a further conference, it would then simply be a matter of the Senate accepting the bill, would it not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. My understanding is that if a further conference should not be asked by the House, the Senate could request it, and then we would either have to grant their request or refuse it. As we are the latest ones acting upon it, it occurs to me that we ought to be the first ones to make the new move.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me the House has expressed itself on these propositions often enough so that the Senate ought to know how the House feels about them, and I do not see the necessity for a further conference. I shall not object, however, if the gentleman desires to take that course.

Mr. MANN. The customary thing is for the House, when it rejects a conference report, to further insist upon its amendments or its disagreements, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know that is customary.

Mr. MANN. And that is the courteous thing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the courteous thing, and I shall not object.

Mr. MANN. It is not a matter that requires unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The House has expressed itself often enough so that the Senate ought to know how the House feels about it, I think.

Mr. GARNER. How long will it take before some conclusion is reached?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is something I can not tell the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]?

Mr. MANN. It is a matter of right to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. It is; but the Chair thought it would save time to put it first as a request for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. WASON, and Mr. HARRISON.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year 1923, and for other purposes, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Departments of State and Justice appropriations bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume that the gentleman has conferred with the minority of the subcommittee?

Mr. HUSTED. I have conferred with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and he is quite agreeable to this course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HUSTED, Mr. TINKHAM, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the defenses of the Panama Canal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the defenses of the Panama Canal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the Panama Canal is one great national institution of which the entire country is proud. It was built under the direction of the Army and entirely without scandal or accusations of graft. Under the direction of Army officers, detailed for that purpose, it is now being operated with most gratifying success and with complete satisfaction.

The canal was built more for national defense than for commercial use, but the use of it for commerce, even thus early, has proved to be greater than was anticipated by the most sanguine. It is becoming more and more evident that its use for commercial purposes is destined to increase year by year in the time to come.

It was properly determined that the United States should fortify the canal. This work was begun while the canal was under construction and has since continued. The plans for its fortification were all made prior to the outbreak of the war in Europe, and the armament was projected and constructed on that basis. In naval parlance we speak of pre-Jutland and post-Jutland navies, meaning that the Battle of Jutland marked a very material change in naval armament and construction. The same may be said of the war in Europe in its relation to land armament.

One of the great changes brought about by the war was the increase in the range of artillery by means of increasing the angle of elevation at which the gun is fired. The large guns placed in the fortifications at Panama are all of the pre-war type of carriage construction. For instance, the 14-inch guns on Flamenco Island at the Pacific end of the canal are good guns, but their range is limited because of the fact that they can be elevated only 15 degrees. Likewise the 16-inch gun on Naos Island was almost antiquated before it was finally placed in position. The mortar batteries on Flamenco Island, however, are quite up to date, and in case of attack would probably prove to be about the most effective pieces of ordnance at either end of the canal.

About 12 miles to the northwest of the Pacific end of the canal is Toboga Island. Prior to the last war it was supposed that this island was so far distant that it need not be taken into account in the construction of fortifications. It now seems that in this we were mistaken. With the present range of naval armament it is entirely possible for warships to take advantage of Toboga Island to do great damage to the Pacific end of the canal. With the development of naval aircraft it is also possible for a hostile naval air fleet to make a rendezvous under the protection of Toboga Island, entirely safe from our present guns. I concur with those who contend that Toboga Island should be fortified with modern guns. Bear in mind that Toboga Island is more than 1,000 feet in height. Therefore while it remains unfortified it will serve as a protection to an enemy, whereas, on the other hand, if fortified it will make secure and impregnable the Pacific end of the canal.

In making a careful study of the defenses of the canal attention has been called to several points of possible weakness. One of these is the so-called Cano Saddle, which is on the northeast side of Gatun Lake. Gatun Lake was formed by building a dam across the valley of the Chagres River, just north of where the Trinidad River enters the Chagres. The lake, therefore, occupies these two river valleys and backs up in a number of places almost to the height of land or water divide. Cano Saddle is the most noteworthy of these places. It is about a thousand feet long measured by the shore of the lake and is almost level for the entire distance. At the lowest point it is exactly 87.4 feet above mean sea level on the Atlantic side. The gauge at Gatun on the day I was there last February showed the surface of the lake to be just 87 feet above sea level. This means that if the level of the lake were raised 6 inches the water would overflow through Cano Saddle, as it was originally, and flow down into the Atlantic. A steel barge, reinforced with concrete, has been sunk across the lowest point in the saddle and a loose-earth fill, 20 feet high and about 50 feet thick at the base, has been made throughout the length of the saddle.

So far as making an attack on the canal at this point is concerned, the loose-earth fill may as well be left out of consideration, because it would not be a very large task to dig a ditch through it. In order to injure the canal it would be necessary not only to dig through the loose-earth fill, but also to sink a ditch through the original soil to the depth of at least 20 feet in order to lower the level of the lake below the using point. In the light of modern digging operations it would seem that this might not be a difficult matter, and fears have been entertained for the safety of the canal on this account. In my judgment, however, these fears are not well founded, and for this reason: Surprise would be the only reason that would justify an attack at this point. Being in the jungle, as it is, would aid surprise, but would likewise render difficult the assembling of the necessary personnel and implements for digging the ditch.

The undertaking is made still more difficult by the terrain itself. The saddle is very flat. It would be necessary for the ditch to be excavated for a distance of at least 300 feet in order to run the water out of the lake. The earth is heavy jungle loam, and I am informed is underlaid with decomposed rock at a depth of about 10 feet. Digging a ditch of the size necessary to lower the lake materially under the conditions prevailing at this point would be an operation of such magnitude as to render its accomplishment by surprise well-nigh impossible. It would therefore seem to me that a reasonably careful patrol of the lake by the garrison on the Canal Zone would be sufficient protection against possible surprise. An attack other than a surprise attack would, of course, be made at a more vulnerable part of the canal, such as the locks or the spillway at Gatun.

It was unfortunate that in the original building of the canal provisions were not made for crossing the canal at a number of places. While construction was going on, waterproof concrete tunnels could have been placed across the canal at a number of places without material additional expense. Unfortunately this was not done, and the question at this time is whether means should be provided now for crossing the canal, even though the cost would be considerable. I believe that it should be done. At the present time there is no way of crossing the canal with heavy transportation except by ferry. For a long time a pontoon bridge was maintained at Pedro Miguel, on which railroad trains crossed the canal. As the canal came to be used more and more, this proved to be such a serious inconvenience that it was discontinued about January 1, 1921. The result is that the Canal Zone itself is divided into two equal halves, and the Republic of Panama is likewise divided into two substantially equal parts.

In my judgment the use of the Canal Zone for homes, for agriculture, for grazing, and for other purposes should be encouraged. More of the supplies used on the zone should be produced there and less should be shipped from the States. The people of the Republic of Panama also should be encouraged to produce as much as possible for their own support as well as for supplying the needs of our employees on the Canal Zone. The construction of means for crossing the canal would be most helpful in this direction.

Whether it would be practicable to tunnel under the canal now, or whether a bridge or bridges would be necessary, I am not prepared to say, but the subject should be taken up and thoroughly considered from every point of view.

Another most important matter, which is not necessarily related to the defense of the canal, but is of the greatest importance to the future use and operation of the canal, is an additional reserve water supply. The difficulty of getting rid of the surplus waters of the Chagres was considered one of the most difficult problems in connection with the construction of the canal from the beginning. This problem has been completely solved. No longer is danger anticipated from the surplus waters of the Chagres, and the day is coming when there will be need for all the water that the river can supply.

At the present time there is a hydroelectric power plant at the Gatun spillway which furnishes power for the entire Canal Zone. During the rainy season there is always an abundance of water for this power plant in addition to the water that is needed for lockage purposes. During the dry season, however, if there should be an unusually large number of lockages, there might prove to be even now a lack of a sufficient supply of water. In order to meet an emergency of this kind, an auxiliary steam power plant has been established at Pedro Miguel. As a matter of economy this steam power plant should, of course, be used just as little as possible.

The entire problem of an ample water supply can be solved by the erection of a dam across the upper Chagres Valley near Alhajuelah, thereby forming an immense reservoir for the impounding of the surplus water that now runs to waste during the rainy season. By so doing the amount of water to be wasted at the Gatun spillway during the height of the rainy season will be greatly diminished and at the same time an ample reserve supply for the dry season will be gathered and maintained.

One advantage of having this reserve supply would be that by erecting a hydroelectric plant at the Alhajuelah Dam an abundance of power could be produced even during the dry season. As the water is drawn from Gatun Lake for the Gatun spillway power plant all of the water used is gone and must be subtracted from the total supply available for lockage purposes. With the reserve reservoir there would be the unusual condition of eating one's cake and having it too. That is, the same water that would be used for generating power at the Alhajuelah Dam would also be used for lockages at Gatun, Pedro Miguel, and Miraflores.

As I now recall, the highest number of ships that have gone through the canal in one day has been 21, and the average number is about 10 per day. The number is increasing and there is every reason to believe that the number will continue to increase indefinitely. It is now generally agreed that an average of two lockages per hour, or 48 per day, would be a comfortable maximum. Long before this maximum is reached, however, a reserve water supply would have to be furnished or the use of the hydroelectric plant at Gatun would have to be discontinued during practically the entire dry season. Therefore, in view of the substantial increase in the use of the canal which everyone confidently expects, it would seem to be the part of wisdom to begin at once to carry out the proposed plan for a reserve supply of water. Everyone should look forward hopefully to the time when the canal will be used to its maximum in carrying commerce for the benefit of mankind, and as a forward-looking people we should be prepared in advance to take care of it. Meanwhile an additional water supply would insure against the expense of operating the auxiliary steam-power plant at Pedro Miguel and would assure an abundant supply of cheap hydroelectric power for an ever-increasing use on the Canal Zone.

BASKETS.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 7102.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. As I recall the number of that bill, that is the basket bill.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I think the statute of limitations has run against that bill, and that there ought to be a quorum here. Will the gentleman state what the situation is with reference to the general debate?

Mr. VESTAL. General debate has been concluded.

Mr. WALSH. What is the situation now?

Mr. VESTAL. We commence reading the bill from the beginning for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7102) fixing standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7102) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Driver	Kahn	Morin
Ansorge	Dunbar	Kelley, Mich.	Mott
Anthony	Dunn	Kennedy	Mudd
Atkeson	Echols	Kindred	Nelson, Me.
Beedy	Ellis	Kirkpatrick	Newton, Minn.
Bixler	Fairchild	Kitchin	Newton, Mo.
Blakeney	Faust	Kleczka	Nolan
Bland, Ind.	Fenn	Knight	O'Brien
Blanton	Fess	Kreider	Olpp
Brand	Fields	Kunz	Parker, N. Y.
Brennan	Fish	Lampert	Patterson, N. J.
Briggs	Foster	Langley	Perkins
Britten	Free	Lee, Ga.	Perlman
Brown, Tenn.	French	Lehlbach	Porter
Burroughs	Funk	Linthicum	Pou
Butler	Goldsborough	Little	Pringey
Campbell, Pa.	Gorman	Logan	Rainey, Ala.
Cantrill	Gould	Longworth	Rainey, Ill.
Chandler, Okla.	Green, Iowa	Luhring	Ransley
Clark, Fla.	Hammer	McArthur	Reavis
Classon	Hardy, Tex.	McFadden	Reber
Clouse	Haugen	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Riddick
Codd	Hersey	McLaughlin, Pa.	Riordan
Cole, Iowa	Hicks	McSwain	Robertson
Connell	Himes	Maloney	Rodenberg
Connolly, Pa.	Hogan	Mansfield	Rogers
Cooper, Wis.	Hudspeth	Martin	Rosenbloom
Copley	Hutchinson	Merritt	Rossdale
Crowther	Ireland	Michaelson	Rucker
Dale	James	Mills	Ryan
Davis, Minn.	Jefferis, Nebr.	Montague	Sabath
Dempsey	Jeffers, Ala.	Moore, Ill.	Sanders, Ind.
Doughton	Johnson, Miss.	Moore, Va.	Schall
Drewry	Johnson, Wash.	Moores, Ind.	Scott, Mich.

Sears	Sullivan	Towner	Wheeler
Shelton	Summers, Wash.	Treadway	Williams
Shreve	Sweet	Upshaw	Winslow
Siegel	Tague	Vaile	Woods, Va.
Slemp	Taylor, Ark.	Vare	Yates
Snyder	Taylor, Colo.	Voigt	Young
Sproul	Taylor, N. J.	Volk	Zihlman
Stafford	Taylor, Tenn.	Walters
Steenerson	Timberlake	Ward, N. Y.
Strong, Pa.	Tincher	Ward, N. C.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill (H. R. 7102) fixing a standard for hampers and baskets for fruits and vegetables, found itself without a quorum; that he caused the roll to be called and 256 Members answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the standard round stave baskets for fruits and vegetables shall be the one-half bushel basket, five-eighths bushel basket, 1-bushel basket, 1½-bushel basket, and 2-bushel basket, which, respectively, shall be of the capacity and conform to the specifications set forth in this section.

(a) The one-half bushel round stave basket shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches, and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 13½ inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 8½ inches; the web shall consist of 20 intersecting staves, of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 16 quarts, standard dry measure.

(b) The five-eighths bushel round stave basket shall contain 1,344 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 13½ inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 10½ inches; the web shall consist of 20 intersecting staves, of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 20 quarts, standard dry measure.

(c) The 1-bushel round stave basket shall contain 2,150.42 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 17 inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 10⅝ inches; the web shall consist of 20 intersecting staves, of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 32 quarts, standard dry measure.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting on page 1, line 5——

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that we have passed section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that section 1 has been passed.

Mr. QUIN. I hope the gentleman will reserve his point of order and let me offer this amendment for information, and then go back to section 1 afterwards and consider it. I may not be here when we revert to section 1, as I may be called out. We have another committee at work and I may not be here, as I am engaged in that work. Let the amendment be read, and then one of my colleagues can take care of it when we go back to section 1.

Mr. MANN. Let some one offer it when we go back to section 1.

Mr. VESTAL. I have no objection to the amendment being read for information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting on page 1, line 5, after the third word, "seven-eighths bushel hamper," and by inserting on page 3, between lines 6 and 7, "(C-1) the standard seven-eighths bushel hamper shall contain 28 quarts, or 1,881⅗ cubic inches, and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 15½ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 9¾ inches; the inside length of staves shall be 15⅞ inches, the inside top hoop shall be set with its upper edge even with the upper ends of the staves; and the bottom shall be set with its lower edge even with the lower ends of the staves."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that on May 16 this committee reported out H. R. 4900, and on June 17 they reported out the pending bill. What is the substantial difference between the two measures? I notice that in H. R. 4900 the title is very similar, and the first two or three sections seem to be identical.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What was the necessity for reporting out two measures?

Mr. VESTAL. There were two or three amendments to the bill—I do not remember just exactly what they are now—which the committee had agreed upon, and rather than put them in the bill as amendments I had the bill rewritten and introduced the bill with the amendments that the committee had agreed on.

Mr. WALSH. So that there would be no committee amendment?

Mr. VESTAL. So that there would be no committee amendments in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 6, line 3, by striking out the words "sixty-three one-hundredths" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "sixty-four one-hundredths."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: Page 6, line 3, strike out the words "sixty-three one-hundredths" and insert "sixty-four one-hundredths."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am very much gratified that I have the opportunity to offer this amendment. I believe that in vital legislation of this character we should be very careful to be certain that all parties get full measure. The committee has written this 63/100 cubic inches. I believe that if there is any doubt at all, that the purchaser ought to receive the benefit of the doubt, and I propose to make it 64/100 cubic inches. I know there are some gentlemen who are opposed to this bill. I know that in every legislative body there are always trimmers and dodgers; but I want to serve notice now that in the coming campaign you are going to have to face this issue of whether this bill shall provide 64/100 cubic inches or 63/100 cubic inches.

The Republican Party is pledged to this legislation. It has gone before this country and it has received the mandate of the American people, and Republican campaign workers propose to see to it that this legislation is written into the statute books. [Applause.] It is true that some farmers, some agriculturists throughout the country are concerned about what they are going to get in money for their products—for their wheat, for their hogs, for their cattle—but some gentlemen seem indifferent as to that anxiety. The question with them seems to be, How big shall the basket be? How will it be possible for farmers to market their produce at all unless we provide with some degree of accuracy, unless we standardize these measurements, so that they can carry their produce properly to the market? Why not provide how many potatoes should be in a bushel and prescribe the standard of weights and fineness without the consent of any foreign nation? Of what concern is it to the Congress whether or not international trade shall be improved? Trade with the rest of the world can wait. What we are concerned with is right here at home. The question is, What size shall the hamper be in this Republic of ours? [Applause.] It is true that some countries, some international statesmen, have absolutely missed the point.

They are engaged now over at Genoa, with Lloyd-George representing the British Empire, with the representatives of the Russians and the Germans and the other European countries there, having in a moment of weakness, of error, conceived the idea that the proper matter to adjust is the economic rehabilitation of Europe, the value of coinage, the exchange, the re-establishment of trade and commerce; but what have these paltry questions to do with the matter, when this country is face to face with a great problem like this: How big shall the hamper be? Some people do not seem to properly appraise the importance of this problem. I want to say that it has got to be faced, and it has got to be faced now. We disposed of the naval question only a short time ago. We have adjusted the matter of international disarmament. Why not now solve this question? Let us settle it now. The tariff question can wait for another year in a Senate committee, but an important question like this ought to be settled, and it ought to be settled now. Of course, a great many people are interested in legislation to continue the War Finance Corporation, the bill for agricultural representation on the Federal Reserve Board, and other important and useful measures, but a Republican Congress must pass the basket bill. The people of the Republic are anxiously looking to this Congress for action on this consuming question, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] has heard their cry and has revived this old friend of ours.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, it is very amusing to this House that this old basket-bill corpse has been dragged up [laughter] after all these weary months. [Laughter.] After all this long sleep, with nothing else to do, the Republican majority are figuring out the difference between sixty-three one-hundredths and sixty-four one-hundredths of an inch in the size of a hamper. Listen, you Republican folks. They have been around here trying to rob the farmer in every conceivable way. You robbed him on this nasty tariff bill you put through this House. You robbed him when you took off the excess-profits tax from the profits of the rich. You robbed him when you took off the income tax and reduced it down, and, by the way, it then took the United States Senate to come in with a mess on that measure. You robbed him when you put the railroad rates on him in the Esch-Cummins bill. And now, after he gets up in the morning at daylight, goes out to his field and works all day, not stopping except when 12 o'clock comes and the dinner horn is blown, he goes to his house, where his wife has fixed him a little food to eat, and while she is getting it ready she says, "John, go out and cut some wood while you are resting." [Laughter.] Then he goes back to the field and ploughs as long as he can see. These vegetable farmers throughout the South actually build torchlights in their fields and work at night. You are here with this little old mess of a basket bill, allowing one section of the country to have a five-eighths hamper and another one a hamper of a different kind, but you make it a crime for a farmer to ship in truck in a seven-eighths hamper. But with all these things you are figuring around what to do and trying to see that the farmer can not get a square deal in his hamper, after you failed to give him a chance to make a crop, after you failed to give him implements and fertilizers at a decent price, after you fix it so that the tax grabber can go into all of his pockets, after you fix it so that he is going to be robbed if he ships his produce to the consumers of this country, you come along with a specified hamper to further hamper him [laughter] on the kind of hamper that his produce is to be put in before it is shipped. Do you think the farmers of the United States will be very enthusiastic over such legislation as this when on every hand they are being pressed down by the oppressive hand of the commercial fertilizer manufacturer and the railroad magnates that charge him 100 per cent more than they did four years ago on his freight—and remember the farmer is paying seven-tenths of all the freight that is paid, aggregating billions of dollars of freight charges that are collected in the United States by the transportation companies?

The farmer must pay the freight on his equipment and the things necessary to raise his crop; that man must pay the freight on his produce before it reaches the table of the consumer; that is the man you are legislating against by this sort of a bill. Why do not you put up a bill and say that a sack of fertilizer must be of a certain kind, that the sack must be so many inches in diameter, so many inches high, and tied with hickory bark, slippery-elm bark, or twine string? Why do not you say that the plowstock the farmer gets shall be made out of hickory wood, with the grain running crosswise and curved in the middle? [Laughter.] Why do not you say the collar the farmer must put on his mule shall be stuffed with long-staple cotton, that the leather shall be of rhinoceros hide, sewed together with alligators' tails? Why do not you say the farmer shall have all of these discomfitures and miserable things inflicted upon him? This hamper or basket bill is just as unreasonable as the other suggestions. What else do you do?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. You have done all these things to injure him, and you are still hankering after something else with which to hamstring him. [Applause.]

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, we have had 10 minutes of discussion, and I now ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. QUIN. Division, Mr. Chairman; it is a very important amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. QUIN. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one gentlemen are present; a quorum. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the standard splint baskets for fruits and vegetables shall be the 4-quart basket, 8-quart basket, 12-quart basket, 16-quart basket, and 24-quart basket, standard dry measure.

(a) The 4-quart splint basket shall contain 268.8 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the two following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 7 inches by 12 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 5⅝ inches by 10⅛ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(2) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 6 inches by 12 inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 5⅛ inches by 11⅛ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(b) The 8-quart splint basket shall contain 537.6 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 8 inches by 14 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 7 inches by 12 inches. The inside depth of the corners shall be 5 inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 9⅛ inches by 16⅛ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 7⅛ inches by 14⅛ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 7⅝ inches by 15⅛ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 7 inches by 14⅛ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5 inches.

(c) The 12-quart splint basket shall contain 806.4 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 9⅛ inches by 16 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8⅛ inches by 14 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5⅛ inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 11⅛ inches by 17⅛ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8⅛ inches by 14⅛ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 5 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 8⅝ inches by 17⅛ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 8 inches by 16⅝ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5⅝ inches.

(d) The 16-quart splint basket shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 10⅛ inches by 18⅛ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8⅛ inches by 16 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 6⅛ inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 11⅛ inches by 19⅛ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8⅛ inches by 16⅛ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 6 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 9 inches by 19 inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 8⅛ inches by 18 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 6⅝ inches.

(e) The 24-quart splint basket shall contain 1,612.8 cubic inches, and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 12 inches by 20 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 10 inches by 17⅛ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7⅛ inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 12 inches by 23 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 9 inches by 19 inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 10⅝ inches by 22⅛ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 9⅝ inches by 20⅛ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7⅛ inches.

Mr. WINGO and Mr. JONES of Texas rose.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum. It seems that we ought to have a quorum here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-two gentlemen are present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Fish	Lyon	Sabath
Ansorge	Focht	McArthur	Sanders, Ind.
Anthony	French	McKenzie	Sanders, N. Y.
Bankhead	Frothingham	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Schall
Beck	Funk	McLaughlin, Pa.	Scott, Mich.
Bell	Gahn	McSwain	Sears
Bixler	Gorman	MacGregor	Shaw
Black	Gould	Magee	Shelton
Blakeney	Graham, Pa.	Maloney	Shreve
Bland, Va.	Hammer	Mansfield	Siegel
Blanton	Hardy, Tex.	Martin	Sisson
Boies	Haugen	Merritt	Slemp
Brand	Hawes	Michaelson	Smithwick
Brennan	Hawley	Mills	Snell
Briggs	Herrick	Montague	Snyder
Britten	Hersey	Montoya	Stafford
Brown, Tenn.	Hicks	Moore, Ill.	Steenerson
Burke	Hill	Moore, Va.	Strong, Pa.
Burroughs	Hogan	Moores, Ind.	Sullivan
Butler	Hudspeth	Morin	Summers, Wash.
Cantrill	Hull	Mott	Sumners, Tex.
Chandler, N. Y.	Husted	Mudd	Sweet
Chandler, Okla.	Hutchinson	Murphy	Tague
Clark, Fla.	Ireland	Nolan	Taylor, Ark.
Classon	James	O'Brien	Taylor, Colo.
Clouse	Jefferis, Nebr.	Oldfield	Taylor, N. J.
Cockran	Jeffers, Ala.	Olpp	Taylor, Tenn.
Codd	Johnson, Miss.	Padgett	Ten Eyck
Cole, Iowa	Johnson, Wash.	Paige	Tincher
Connell	Kahn	Parker, N. J.	Treadway
Connolly, Pa.	Kelley, Mich.	Parker, N. Y.	Underhill
Cooper, Wis.	Kelly, Pa.	Patterson, N. J.	Upshaw
Copley	Kennedy	Perkins	Vaile
Crisp	Kindred	Perlman	Vare
Crowther	Kitchin	Porter	Vinson
Dale	Kleczka	Pou	Voigt
Dallinger	Knight	Pringey	Volk
Davis, Minn.	Kreider	Rainey, Ala.	Walters
Deal	Kunz	Rainey, Ill.	Ward, N. Y.
Dempsey	Lampert	Ramseyer	Ward, N. C.
Doughton	Langley	Ransley	Webster
Drane	Layton	Reavis	Wheeler
Drewry	Lea, Calif.	Reber	Williams
Driver	Lee, Ga.	Riordan	Williamson
Dunbar	Lehlbach	Robertson	Winslow
Echols	Linthicum	Rodenberg	Wise
Fairchild	Little	Rogers	Woods, Va.
Faust	Logan	Rosenbloom	Yates
Fenn	Longworth	Rossdale	Young
Fess	Luce	Rucker	Zihlman
Fields	Luhring	Ryan

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 7102) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 226 Members answered to their names—a quorum—and he presented a list of absentees for entry in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected that I would have to expend any energy in explaining and elaborating my views on this bill any more. I have endeavored in the last two or three years in the consideration of this bill to explain to the House my fundamental objection to it. Of course, each time it is changed it presents a new face. But, Mr. Chairman, while I have never had any hopes of defeating this bill, I can at least have the consolation of seeing that the proponents of it have at least confessed some of its wickedness and have cut out some of its glaring inconsistencies.

I see no hope of defeating legislation of this kind, and I say it seriously because in every district throughout the land, as is the case in my district, there are men urging the passage of bills like this and other similar measures, by which they wish the Federal Government to create more Federal agents, establish more Federal regulations, and impose more Federal restrictions. Of course, this is a representative body, Mr. Chairman, and while in one breath they condemn us for keeping our ears to the ground, condemn us for having no more backbone, yet in the next breath they flood us with petitions and with demands that we continually rob the people of the States of the little authority they have left and lodge it in some bureau in Washington.

Mr. Chairman, I speak seriously when I say I think the greatest danger to our free institutions to-day is the tendency of the American people to make a mad rush to Washington and demand that everything be done by the Federal Government. [Applause.]

You are creating new judges, and if you keep up this business you will have a greater number of Federal judges in this land than you have district judges in the State courts. Not long ago I became interested in the conditions existing in my State, and I found, much to my surprise, that to-day, going upon the soil of Arkansas, marching up and down its highways and byways, and nosing into people's smokehouses and their orchards and their vineyards——

Mr. MILLER. And into their stills. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Yes; and into their stills, the gentleman from Washington says, although they are not so busy with the stills now in the mountain districts as they are in the cities, among the clubs, and other places. But to get back to the proposition, I found Federal agents nosing into our little fruit gardens, even into the flower beds of the little children at the schools. They are going into the bathrooms, into the pantries, into the business houses; they are nosing into the books; and to-day I say in the State of Arkansas there is a greater number of these Federal agents being supported by the taxpayers of America than there are State, county, and municipal officers.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. No; I am serious, and therefore I am not going to follow your "still." The gentleman can not get any relief or sustenance from me along that line. [Laughter.]

If anyone had suggested to the founders of this Government that the day would ever come when in a State like Arkansas—not a great industrial State, but with just a few industrial centers—that the day would ever come when Federal officers and Federal agents would outnumber the State, county, and municipal officers, they would have thrown up their hands in horror.

Mr. Chairman, hardly a day passes that I do not get an inquiry from some anxious constituent of mine wanting to know if Congress has passed a law forbidding this thing or that.

I venture the assertion that my experience is that of other Members of this Congress. This morning I got a letter from an old gentleman who said he had been advised that the Federal Congress had enacted a law making it a Federal offense for a boy to play baseball on Sunday and asking me to advise him if that was true. [Laughter.] Why, even the boys are afraid to play upon the streets of the land for fear they will be nabbed by some Federal officer. Gentlemen, whenever the time arrives that there is throughout this land a resentment against the Federal Government which becomes an overwhelming sentiment, then your Government will be destroyed. People are absolutely in terror. They do not know when they will be haled down from the mountains or up from the valleys to go before some Federal commissioner to answer to some charge predicated upon some honest act of theirs growing out of the habits and customs of the people for a lifetime or for generations, with no criminal intent, with the purest motives, following their daily customary habits. Yet they are dragged into court.

Why, under this bill, if some farmer dares to practice that economy that we are preaching to everybody and happens to use a basket or a bunch of baskets that he has carried over in the loft year after year in taking his stuff to town and marketing it from door to door in his little wagon, if he happens to use a basket that comes in between these quarts, some Federal agent snooping around will nab him up and take him down to Texarkana or Fort Smith, in my district, and make him plead to a charge that he has attempted to overthrow the liberties of the people by using a basket that does not fit the measurements of Congress. Oh, we talk about experts. Since when did this Congress become an expert on baskets?

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Let me conclude my thought and then I will yield. Congress recognizes the fact that it does not know anything about this. It recognizes the viciousness of this bill, because it says, "Notwithstanding the fact that we have muddled along here for years and twisted in and twisted out and changed first one specification and another, yet further along we will have a saving clause"; and that saving clause, in effect, is that if Congress makes a fool of itself, if it enacts a bill that stirs up too much resentment, then the Secretary of Agriculture has absolutely the authority to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERRICK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. Always.

Mr. HERRICK. How large a basket would be required to put in it all the good that this Congress has done for the common people, and how old would a child have to be in order to be able to carry that basket? [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate the inquisitive mind of the gentleman from Oklahoma, a representative of the Republican Party upon this floor, overwhelmingly elected by a great constituency against a distinguished Democrat, and one of the leaders on that side. He is not deceived by the song sung every few days by the Republican leader [Mr. MONDELL], and I have been expecting the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] before we adjourn to-day to expatiate on the wonderful harmony between the Republican organization in this House and the Chief Executive. [Laughter.] I can understand how the gentleman from Wyoming will answer the question of the gentleman from Oklahoma. I am not going to answer it; but you go to your constituents in November and answer that question. That is what they are going to ask you and every other Republican about your legislation. [Applause and laughter.]

But to get back seriously, gentlemen, turn to the top of page 12, where you seriously say, after we have spent months and months in perfecting this bill, if it proves to be a mockery and a failure—

> the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he finds it necessary, may, in his regulations, prescribe specifications and tolerances with respect to the strength of the material used, or the dimensions thereof, for such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or parts thereof, in addition to, differing from, or superseding those set forth in sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act, but not departing from the respective capacities therein prescribed.

Nobody objects to Congress fixing the standard of measure for the bushel, for the quart, or anything else, but the viciousness of this thing is that you undertake to prescribe the material and the shape and the dimensions, even to the fraction of an inch. You absolutely do the humiliating and childish thing, after having done that, of saying, "Well, if we have made a failure of the law, some bureaucrat, some officer may rewrite the law and simply give six months' notice, and that will be sufficient."

Oh, where is the boasted capacity of the Republican Party. I do not blame you; whenever you get on ground like this you are getting into trouble. Gentlemen, I know you are going to pass this, but I want to bring it home to you that day after day you are yielding to clamor, you are continually setting up a Government not of law, not of local law, but you are yielding to these bureau chiefs and Cabinet officers the right to prescribe and make by executive edict the law of the land. There is not a lawyer in this House that can take this bill and in two hours tell a farmer whether the basket he has in his wagon is a violation of the Federal statute; and you will not be able to do it until the Secretary of Agriculture has made the rules and regulations fixing the tolerances. Of course, there has to be provision for tolerances in this intolerant bill. You have to have some saving grace.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred Members are present; a quorum.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7102) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Has any order or agreement been entered into whereby unobjected bills on the Private Calendar will be in order to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. There has not.

RECOMMITTING A BILL.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 10611, on the Union Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 10611 be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, is that at the request of the committee?

Mr. SINNOTT. It is a bill that I introduced myself and was inadvertently reported out.

Mr. WALSH. What is it about?

Mr. SINNOTT. It has reference to water-power sites on Indian lands.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean that the committee did not in fact act on it, and that it got on the calendar by error?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; it got upon the calendar by error.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 21, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

591. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting request for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 90, empowering the director of aircraft production to dispose of assets of the corporation, to impose conditions upon such, and likewise authorizing the postponement of the dissolution of the corporation if the Secretary of War deems it necessary; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

592. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination and survey of Monongahela River, Pa. (H. Doc. No. 288); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MILLER: Committee on Military Affairs. H. J. Res. 300. A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan cots, mattresses, and blankets for the use of the Grand Army of the Republic at the California and Nevada State encampment, to be held in Riverside, Calif., in May, 1922; without amendment (Rept. No. 913). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 11347. A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon known as Fort Hale; without amendment (Rept. No. 914). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 11346. A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon known as the old lighthouse property at Lighthouse Point, in the city of New Haven; without amendment (Rept. No. 915). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 11378) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in first-class post offices in Oregon and Idaho; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 11379) authorizing and directing the Postmaster General to permit the use of special canceling stamps in the post offices of the first class in the State of Arkansas, bearing the words and figures, "Visit Arkansas State Fair and Exposition, October 4–14, 1922"; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. PARKS of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 11380) for the protection of property and the relief of destitute sufferers from floods in the State of Arkansas and other States; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 11381) exempting junior high-school teachers on permanent tenure from the requirement of examination for the position of teacher in the junior high school in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MEAD: A bill (H. R. 11382) to provide study periods for post-office clerks; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 11383) granting a pension to Jennie A. Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOCH: A bill (H. R. 11384) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Myers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11385) granting a pension to Jane C. Watkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11386) granting a pension to Martha R. Potts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 11387) granting a pension to Adolph G. Reinert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KINDRED: A bill (H. R. 11388) for the relief of John Guigel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MICHENER: A bill (H. R. 11389) for the relief of Robert Guy Robinson; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H. R. 11390) providing for the retirement of W. L. Allen; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. TOWNER: A bill (H. R. 11391) granting a pension to Lottie J. Thomas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VAILE: A bill (H. R. 11392) granting a pension to Ernest W. Larson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. A. P. NELSON: Resolution (H. Res. 330) for the appointment of an additional clerk to the Committee on Accounts; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5192. By the SPEAKER (by request): Resolutions adopted at the National Construction Conference in Chicago April 5 relative to different legislative matters and urging early consideration of them; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5193. By Mr. CRAGO: Resolution adopted by the Pittsburgh Coal Exchange, of Pittsburgh, Pa., urging the early completion of the slack-water system on the Ohio River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

5194. By Mr. DRANE: Resolution from Tampa (Fla.) Board of Trade, favoring full complement of officers and enlisted men for the United States Navy; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5195. By Mr. FRENCH: Petitions of citizens of Lewiston and citizens of Kootenai County, Idaho, protesting against enactment of H. R. 9753 and other Sunday bills; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5196. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Bellrose-Standard Silica Co., of Ottawa, Ill., opposing the Capper bill, S. 1150, and the Sweet bill, H. R. 6861; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5197. Also, petition of the Chicago section of the Society of American Military Engineers, favoring adequate appropriations for the Army and Navy and opposing unreasonably curtailing the personnel of the armed forces; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5198. By Mr. KIESS: Petition of citizens of Potter County, Pa., protesting against the passage of H. R. 9753; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5199. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Central Trades and Labor Council, New York City, N. Y., urging the passage of H. R. 10034; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5200. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of George A. Edwards, of East Aurora, N. Y., indorsing the Morgan pension bill; to the Committee on Pensions.

5201. By Mr. MOORE of Ohio: Petition of the Presbytery of Muskingum of United Presbyterian Church at New Concord, Ohio, indorsing H. R. 9753; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5202. Also, petition of the Presbytery of Muskingum of United Presbyterian Church at New Concord, Ohio, indorsing Senate Joint Resolution 31; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5203. Also, petition of the Presbytery of Muskingum of United Presbyterian Church at New Concord, Ohio, indorsing House Joint Resolution 131; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5204. By Mr. OSBORNE: Petition of J. B. Baker, 1151 Orange Grove Avenue, Hollywood, Calif., and 113 other residents of Los Angeles County, Calif., protesting against the passage of House bill 9753 or any other Sunday bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5205. By Mr. SNYDER: Petition of Frank Grizzo and others, against observance of any religious institution as provided by the first amendment to the Constitution; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5206. By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of C. M. Corliss, Augustus Lewis, and other residents of Fergus Falls, Minn., protesting against proposed compulsory Sunday observance bills for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5207. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of Mercer Presbytery, United Presbyterian Church, New Wilmington, Pa., indorsing House bill 9753, to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5208. Also, petition of Mercer Presbytery, United Presbyterian Church, New Wilmington, Pa., in support of House Joint Resolution 131, proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in the United States; also Senate Joint Resolution 31, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to enact uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5209. Also, petition of Beaver Valley Presbytery, United Presbyterian Church, New Brighton, Pa., indorsing House Joint Resolution 131, proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in the United States; also Senate Joint Resolution 31, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to enact uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5210. Also, petition of Beaver Valley Presbytery, United Presbyterian Church, New Brighton, Pa., indorsing H. R. 9753, to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5211. By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of Mr. Thomas J. Denley, of Jackson, Mich., and 82 other citizens of the State of Michigan, asking for the passage of the Towner-Sterling educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

5212. Also, petition of Mr. B. M. Ransom, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and 94 other citizens of the State of Ohio, asking for the passage of the Towner-Sterling educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

5213. Also, petition of Mrs. E. P. Deming, of Algonquin, Ill., and 132 other citizens of the State of Illinois, asking for the passage of the Towner-Sterling educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

5214. By Mr. WEBSTER: Petition of John S. Gnagy and other residents of Colville, Wash., and vicinity, requesting the passage by Congress of legislation providing for the reestablishment of the Government Grain Corporation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 21, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3317) to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 north, range 32 west, Beltrami County, Minn.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MAGEE, Mr. WASON, Mr. BUCHANAN, and Mr. LEE of Georgia were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HUSTED, Mr. TINKHAM, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 31, and 35, requested a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. WASON, and Mr. HARRISON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, 1922 AND 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 189).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of State (foreign intercourse), fiscal years 1922 and 1923, for salaries of ambassadors and ministers, $10,600, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MEAT PACKERS IN UNRELATED LINES OF INDUSTRY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 211, further information relative to a proposed modification of the consent decree in the meat packers' case, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER ESPIONAGE AND OTHER WAR ACTS (S. DOC. NO. 190).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 226, of January 25, 1922, a supplemental statement showing the persons indicted in the northern district of Illinois, whose cases have not been disposed of under the war-time statutes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the Chair may lay before the Senate the action of the House on House bill 11065.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. WARREN, Mr. LODGE, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. HITCHCOCK conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. McNARY, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28; receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and concurring therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 31, and 35, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the action of the House on amendment numbered 29 may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, concurring in the amendment of the Senate numbered 29 with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$325,000."

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 31, and 35, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments still in disagreement, agree to the request of the House for a further conference thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GLASS conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Juneau (Alaska) Commercial Association favoring the enactment of legislation to regulate the salmon fisheries of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a resolution adopted by Neuwaukum Home Grange, No. 622, Patrons of Husbandry, of Enumclaw, Wash., favoring the passage of Senate bill 2604, the Ladd honest money bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Jackson, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 889) further to assure title to lands granted the several States, in place, in aid of public schools, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 610) thereon.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 910) for the relief of Frank Grygla (Rept. No. 611); and

A bill (S. 1723) for the relief of William Hensley (Rept. No. 612).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 449) for the relief of the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich. (Rept. No. 613);

A bill (H. R. 1009) for the relief of H. C. Mullins, his wife, and minor children (Rept. No. 614);

A bill (H. R. 3346) for the relief of the heirs of Oscar Chrysler (Rept. No. 615);

A bill (H. R. 6525) for the relief of the Cortez Oil Co. (Rept. No. 616); and

A bill (H. R. 6686) for the relief of George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek (Rept. No. 617).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5775) for the relief of Liberty loan subscribers of the North Penn Bank, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Santa Rosa National Bank, Santa Rosa, Calif.; Mineral City Bank, Mineral City, Ohio; Robbinsdale State Bank, Robbinsdale, Minn.; and Farmers and Merchants' State Bank, Kenmare, N. Dak., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 618) thereon.

Mr. BROUSSARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 907) for the relief of Ellen B. Walker (Rept. No. 619);

A bill (S. 1599) for the relief of the estate of David B. Landis, deceased, and the estate of Jacob F. Sheaffer, deceased (Rept. No. 620);

A bill (S. 2584) for the relief of John H. Walker (Rept. No. 621);

A bill (H. R. 6523) for the relief of John Burke, former Treasurer of the United States, for lost bonds without the fault or negligence on the part of said former Treasurer (Rept. No. 622); and

A bill (H. R. 6524) to permit the correction of the general account of John Burke, former Treasurer of the United States (Rept. No. 623).

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that April 20, 1922, they presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled joint resolutions:

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of Edmund Burke; and

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution to authorize the presentation of a tablet to the officers of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 3491) to continue the land office at Del Norte, in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. DIAL:

A bill (S. 3492) for the relief of Ernest Elmer Hall; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3493) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3494) granting a pension to Mary E. Brown; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3495) to provide for reopening the accounts of Harry Caden and charging of certain expenses therein to a different appropriation from the one used in payment; and

A bill (S. 3496) providing for notice to the Secretary of the Interior in cases involving the condemnation for public purposes of land included in any Indian allotment; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 3497) granting a pension to Sarah M. McKinnis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. LODGE submitted two amendments and Mr. JOHNSON submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by them to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation, from $42,815,661 to $47,815,661, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10871, the War Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL OIL RESERVE LEASES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read, and I also ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 282) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to send to the Senate:

(a) A list of all oil leases made by the Department of the Interior within naval oil reserve No. 1 and, separately, naval oil reserve No. 2, both in the State of California, and naval oil reserve No. 3, in the State of Wyoming, showing as to each the claim upon which the lease was based or issued; the name of the lessee; the date of the lease; the area of the leased property; the amount of the rent, royalty, bonus, and all other compensation paid and to be paid to the United States.

(b) All Executive orders and other papers in the files of the Department of the Interior and its bureaus, or copies thereof if the originals are not in the files, authorizing or regulating such leases, including correspondence or memoranda embodying or concerning all agreements, instructions, and requests by the President or the Navy Department as to the making of such leases and the terms thereof.

(c) All correspondence, papers, and files showing and concerning the applications for such leases and the action of the Department of the Interior and its bureau thereon and upon the several claims upon which such leases were based or issued, all in said naval reserves.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In connection with the resolution I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have just received from former Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Josephus Daniels, in response to one written to him.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RALEIGH, N. C., April 18, 1922.

DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your esteemed favor of April 6, stating that the report has been given out that the proposal to receive bids for the oil land of the naval reserve was inaugurated under my administration. I am astounded that any such impression prevails. I devoted many hours while I was in office, and some of them very strenuous ones, in an effort to preserve intact the oil reserve that had been set aside for the Navy. I remember one night toward the end of a session that Mr. Roosevelt and I remained at the Capitol all night long, watching the legislation of closing hours, fearing that some act might be passed that would turn over these invaluable oil reserves to parties who made claim to them without even decent shadow of title.

I, with the Attorney General, fought, contested, and opposed the action of the Land Office in the Honolulu land question, which would have given oil lands worth many millions of dollars to a company which in my judgment had no shadow of right to them. To the very last days of my administration I opposed all the suggestions toward the leasing of these oil reserves set apart by President Taft and President Wilson. During the war there was a hard drive by those who claimed ownership to these lands and the matter was so pressed then that the Navy had to stand in the way of the exploitation of this oil reserve. Even then I opposed the proposal; I felt that this oil had been set apart for the Navy and that exploitations by those who claimed an interest was not necessary to win the war and the day would come when the Navy must depend upon its own oil reserves for a part of its supply.

Ten days before March 4, 1921, I more than once saw the Secretary of the Interior, to whom application had been made to lease the oil, and I presented the Navy's claim and opposition to any lease of these reserves. Secretary Payne refused to approve the applications for leases, and he was very wise and far-seeing in so doing. I never at any time even inferentially agreed to proposals made, but held steadfastly for the whole eight years to the protection of these reserves and holding the oil in the ground for the use of the Navy.

The legislation enacted went further than I desired, but it was impossible to stand out against it. In my judgment it would be a great wrong to lease these oil reserves. The wisest policy of conservation, as well as the Navy's efficiency in the future, depends largely upon holding these naval oil reserves intact.

If you will apply to the Navy Department, you can obtain letters written by me with reference to these oil lands, and you will see that if anybody suggested that I at any time was willing to make any concession looking toward the leasing of these lands, their statements are not borne out by facts. If you will have your secretary look over my annual reports, you will find that I have touched upon this matter many times, and in one you will find an appendix which will give you several of my references to these oil lands, showing why these reserves ought to be preserved.

You may be interested in knowing that when I first looked into this matter, when the first application was made, I found that the claims on the Navy oil reserves were asked for in the name of parties working in the stock yards in Chicago, who, upon inquiry, declared that they had never made application for the oil lands, and the applications presented bearing their names were in fact signatures that they had made in Chicago, supposing that they were signing a petition for an election. Many of these applications were grossly fraudulent and nearly all of them were made after President Taft set the reserve apart for the use of the Navy.

The hearings before the Public Land Committee of both the House and Senate will give you the story as it came out and will show the position of the Navy Department while I was Secretary of that department.

The persistent attempts to lease these lands began in 1913 and were kept up until my term of office expired. It was a battle during my entire term, and I was happy upon retirement to private life that the Navy Department, aided by Attorney General Gregory and Secretary Payne, blocked the insidious propaganda to exploit these reserves.

In 1913, after conference with the Department of the Interior, the Navy Department decided upon the policy of building all naval ships as oil burners. The experiences of the war demonstrated the wisdom of the course. In my judgment, not one acre of the naval reserve should be leased, and Congress should set a face of flint against the present exploitations.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

To Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MARIA M'ARTHUR.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 283), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate for the fiscal year 1921, to Maria McArthur, widow of James McArthur, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ARTICLE BY COL. ROBERT E. OLDS—EUROPE'S DEBTS.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Col. Robert E. Olds, formerly commissioner for Europe of the American Red Cross, on the international situation. I think it will be of value to Senators.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Public Ledger, Sunday, March 12, 1922.]

The following article, by Colonel Olds, analyzing the international debt situation, is based on first-hand observations of the economic conditions in practically every European country. These were made during his direction of the Red Cross activities covering three years up to last summer and during which he dispensed many millions of dollars. He has intimate contacts in nearly every nation and has been received as a sort of special ambassador wherever he has gone.

[By Col. Robert. E. Olds, former commissioner in Europe of the American Red Cross.]

PARIS, March 1.—With the calling of the Genoa conference we may fairly say that the pendulum has nearly completed its slow but inevitable swing from the purely political to the economic view of world affairs. The change is momentous. It has taken some time to effect it. One has only to recall the memorial presented to the American Government and to the principal European Governments more than two years ago, declaring that the basic problem was essentially economic and requesting on grounds of "extreme urgency" that an international conference of experts be called to consider it. The subjects of inflation, instability of exchanges, decline of credit, production, taxation, public expenditures, and international debts were all there suggested as matters of imminent concern.

Although the memorial carried an almost unprecedented array of distinguished signatures, among others from the United States, Morgan, Root, Eliott, Warburg, Vanderlip, Hepburn, Reynolds, Hoover, and Hadley; from England, Bryce, Inchape, Cecil, Asquith, Grenfell, Clynes, McKenna, and Leaf, it made little stir. Now, for the first time, the voice of the man of affairs and the student of actual conditions is being heard.

Throughout the political phase the United States played a difficult rôle. It was asked to enter an alliance with France and England and to join the League of Nations. To both of these proposals it finally gave a negative answer. In the economic phase we are faced at once by the exceedingly troublesome and complex question of the allied debts. Whether we like it or not, we stand forth as the greatest creditor Nation of all time, and must admit that it is a position of grave danger to ourselves as well as to others. The future in no small degree depends upon our ability to see clearly and to act wisely on the issue now before us.

CONFUSED BY LINKING OF DEBTS.

The issue calls for accurate definition. The public on both sides of the Atlantic is manifestly being confused by the linking of the allied debts, in turn, with the questions of reparations, European militarism, taxation, public expenditures, the bonus bill, and other more or less relevant matters. Under the circumstances there is much to be said for the idea of isolating the problem of the allied debts and considering it by itself on the merits.

The European Governments owe the United States altogether (with accrued interest) about $11,000,000,000, of which approximately $3,500,000,000 lie against France and $4,500,000,000 against England.

No interest is being paid, and so the staggering liability goes right on piling up. This black cloud, casting its sinister shadow over an entire continent, necessarily tends to promote pessimism and destroy hope. It is coming to be more and more recognized as the dominant fact in the minds of statesmen and in the lives of peoples. Hardly a newspaper in Europe fails to mention it in some connection every day. Statesmen are interviewed and economists are writing books about it. There is undoubtedly a growing conviction that no way out of the present difficulties can be found until the debts to America are somehow eliminated from the problem.

From the European point of view the discussion presents some curious and interesting features of which America should take note. There is, in the first place, the bold but not always profound thinker, of the Wells type, who comes forward with this simple formula: The debts are fantastic; they can not possibly be paid, so why let them block the way? Let us forget this legendary indebtedness and get on with the real business of world reconstruction. More serious writers of the economic school, who have recently reviewed the situation as a whole, find no ready solution, and can by a strange non sequitur leap to the conclusion that the world can be saved only by a cancellation of the loans outright.

Gustav Cassel, the eminent Swedish economist, in his second memorandum prepared for the League of Nations, after a pessimistic survey, suggests cancellation as almost the last hope. Mr. Keynes, the British economist, arrives by a different route at virtually the same destination. He would have the United States and England form a sort of underwriting syndicate to settle the reparations problem by canceling France's debts in return for a proportionate release of the German indemnity.

ADVICE AGAINST PAYMENTS.

Moreover, the bankers and economists seem to be agreed that under present conditions the United States can not afford to exact even the interest payments. It is said that if by any possibility the payments could be met, the results would be distastrous; abnormal payments of this nature would only postpone still further final recovery.

Now, it is quite impossible, in this memorandum, to follow the argument in all its involutions. It is reasonably clear, however, that if we want to work toward a restoration of trade equilibrium, the last thing we ought to do is to make a drive for the collection of these debts. They can not be paid in gold, because the gold is not there. Payment could in no event be made except in goods, and we do not want the goods. The only way we can accept commodities safely is in the normal course of trade. These conclusions appear to be well founded, but the step from them to the sweeping generalization that the allied debts should be at once completely wiped out is by no means so easily taken.

The picture of a torn and distressed Europe, weighed down by an impossible load of debt which keeps her from rising at all, is appalling, but is it quite accurate? On the face of things the load is to-day nothing but an acknowledged liability to be discharged some time in the distant future. There are no penalties to be enforced or mortgages to be foreclosed for default. America holds no security beyond the honorable engagements of the nations concerned. If Europe can not pay presently, she wont, and there will be an end of the matter for the time being. Let us be practical and face the facts. Nobody with practical sense expects the European Governments to come to us with "a pathetic light in their eyes and the cash in their hands." It is scarcely conceivable that any substantial payment, on account of principal at least, can be made within the next 25 years.

Why not look at this business as what it really is—an affair between two generations of men not yet in being. A present discharge would be like a quit claim running from a coming generation of Americans to a coming generation of Europeans. Just how that is going to reconstruct the great devastated region of international trade in the year 1922 and set the present generation in Europe on its feet perhaps some banker-economist—Otto Kahn, for instance—will explain. If it can be made clear to the lay mind, it ought to be made without further delay.

GIVE EUROPE A FIGHTING CHANCE.

After all, is it not the uncertainty alone that is doing the damage? As it stands, the indebtedness is to be compared to a "call loan." Naturally a finance minister in Paris is seriously embarrassed by it, because he can not know what provision, if any, should be made on that account. If the loan is called, France would have to pay or repudiate. With an outstanding account against Germany upon which not a centime has been collected, and an enormous debit to England and America occupying this doubtful status, the situation can not fail to continue desperate.

Suppose our Government said, "We can not go so far as to tear up these obligations, but we can and will come to an understanding with you about the time of payment. We can agree definitely not to demand the principal for X years or the interest for Y years. Tell us what you think you may eventually be able to do, and let us see if we can not make an arrangement." The reply would be probably along these lines: "We appreciate your reluctance to convert a loan of this nature into a gift. If, however, you can grant us X years to work out of our present difficulties without embarrassment from the loans, we shall do the best we can; and we should like to have the privilege of discussing the subject again at the expiration of that period in the light of the facts as they may then appear, it being fully understood that the loans are regarded by both parties as subsisting obligations to be eventually met." It goes without saying that a negotiation of this general nature, approached in the right spirit on both sides, would lead to a definite agreement. To the ordinary observer trying to take a common-sense view and maintain a proper perspective, it is the only way to satisfy public opinion in the United States and at the same time give the European Governments a good fighting chance to pull through.

If the allied debts can be thus removed as a complicating factor in the problem of settling European budgets for the next 25 years, for example, the pressure will be immediately released and plans for reconstruction can go forward. It is hard to see how anything more could be accomplished by outright cancellation. What the European Governments must have is definite assurance that demands which would surely throw them into complete bankruptcy will not be made pending the critical reconstruction period.

ENTITLED TO UNITED STATES VIEW.

Europe is plainly entitled in this connection to a frank disclosure of the American point of view. There is much misunderstanding and some bitterness being engendered by a failure to make full explanations. Absolutely nothing is to be gained by controversial talk about militarism; there is no end to such a discussion. The urgent need is to tell these peoples who owe us so much money exactly what we propose to do, and why.

Now, it should not be hard to state the American case so as to make it understood. The allied powers were waging a war for their existence. After a time we came in with them and began to loan them money in addition to financing our own war operations. In order to get the money we swelled our national debt to a point never before dreamed of. Those familiar with the Liberty loan drives know that the funds produced were not merely loose cash which we did not know what to do with. Thousands of persons had to borrow and mortgage to subscribe. It was a virtual levy upon capital—productive capital. In the form of cash or its equivalent in goods or munitions it went out of the country and has never come back. According to John Stuart Mill, productive capital so diverted is taken from wages and operates as a tax upon the laboring classes.

However that may be, the State remains charged with the interest and must pay the principal of the Liberty bonds when they fall due. The interest charge alone calls for an annual tax of nearly $10 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. These are familiar facts to Americans, but they are not appreciated in Europe. Nor does Europe understand how a public debt of $25,000,000,000 looks to us as a Nation. We have never been committed to the fallacy that a large debt of this character is a blessing. In 1800 we owed $83,000,000; in 1840 we had cut it down to $3,500,000, or 21 cents per capita; after the Civil War it stood at $2,300,000,000; at the beginning of the Spanish War we had paid it down to one-third of that sum; in the spring of 1917 our debt was a trifle over $1,000,000,000; it jumped immediately to $12,000,000,000 and later to $25,000,000,000; last year it worked out to $216 per capita. With this national policy behind him it is no satisfactory answer to the American taxpayer to tell him that France owes fifty billions and England thirty-seven billions. It is too much like asking a man to compare the distance from here to Uranus with that to Arcturus. He knows he doesn't want to have to walk either of those distances.

CHARGE ON POSTERITY.

This revolutionary rise of the national debt entails a heavy charge upon posterity. To us it is bound to appear that we have mortgaged the future beyond all precedent. Moreover, we have not the justification of having created this debt for the purpose of developing resources or making permanent improvements which would inure to the benefit of our successors; and is it not going a little too far to say that we did it to save the national existence? Public morality demands that debts passed on to a new generation shall have some solid justification. Here a distinction may be made between principal and interest. If we forego the interest for the time being that is our own affair, the money belongs to us. With the principal it is obviously quite different, and there we may well pause and ask: "Have we the right?" The future citizen who must redeem the bonds, the proceeds of which were handed over to our allies in the great war (some of these proceeds, it should be remembered, were used to "peg" exchange) can not speak, save through us. We are his trustees. If we cancel the obligations, we are giving away his money, perhaps impoverishing him in the distant future, which may not be so bright after all.

In this matter of public finance one is bound to look beyond the exigencies of the passing moment. Where is this mad career of indebtedness leading us? In 1913 the aggregate public debt of the civilized countries of the world was $43,000,000,000. It is now $354,000,000,000. If debt piled up by the municipalities, as many competent authorities assert, hastened the decline of the Roman Empire by a couple of centuries, may not our civilization be wrecked on this rock also? Public expenditures are, of course, in the same case. Gardiner states that in the first part of the reign of James I the expenditures of the British Government averaged £400,000 per annum. Adam Smith says that in his time (1776) the peace revenue of the country was £10,000,000, which he asserts, with proper management and without contracting a shilling of new debt, ought to be sufficient to carry on the most vigorous war. The ordinary disbursements of the United States Government last year exceeded $5,000,000,000. Europe will surely not blame America if she pauses while there is yet time. Somebody in this topsy-turvy world must try to keep right side up. Whose interest is it that we should all go down together in universal bankruptcy?

PROBLEMS FOR AMERICA.

Those who summon us to save the Old World from economic ruin by an act of amazing but futile altruism should also understand that America does not enjoy any miraculous immunity. In the long run this planetary economic chaos is likely to hit America hardest of all; she has furthest to drop if the crash comes. Already our foreign trade is at the vanishing point. Forty per cent of the clerical force of the country is out of work. Great industrial sections, such as the Pittsburgh district, are said to be operating at 30 per cent of normal capacity. The farmers complain that the 1920 and 1921 crops were marketed at an actual loss. What is the advantage to us from the gold heaped up in our Treasury, when one ounce of that metal buys 201 hours of labor in Germany, 117 hours in France, 97 hours in Japan, and only 17 hours in the United States?

The demand for cancellation manifestly can not be conceded by any American Government. The demand for collection within 25 years, as contemplated by the recent act of Congress, can not be met by the European Governments. The danger is that this deadlock—and it can be nothing else so long as the two extreme views are maintained—will keep the question of the allied debts alive to plague us all for many years to come. The effect upon our trade, as well as upon international relations generally, can not be other than baneful. More than any other single factor, this uncertainty, with its attendant evils of bitter controversy and misunderstanding, is liable to precipitate the final crisis.

There are those who would like to hold the club over Europe. Do they realize what that means? Does any right-minded American citizen, on reflection, want to take on the task of dictating European policies, settling budgets, arranging boundaries, and defining military establishments? America should hesitate long before deciding to go about the world for the next 25 or 50 years carrying a club. It is rather a time for firmness, patience, sympathy, frankness, and, above all, for definite action.

LUTHER B. TURNLEY.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on April 14, at page 5499 of the RECORD, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] had inserted a letter from Mr. Luther B. Turnley criticizing or making charges against the Civil Service Commission in Mr. Turnley's case. I present a letter from the Civil Service Commission, received this morning, in answer to those charges of Mr. Turnley and in refutation of the charges made. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, what is the Senator asking to have printed in the RECORD?

Mr. STERLING. A letter from the Civil Service Commission, in answer to a letter of Mr. Turnley, which the Senator from Arkansas put in the RECORD the other day.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let it be read. I have three resolutions sleeping in the Civil Service Committee now, and I would like to know what the chairman of the committee is proposing to put in the RECORD on the subject.

Mr. STERLING. The statement is entirely gratuitous.

Mr. CARAWAY. And it is meant to be entirely gratuitous.

Mr. STERLING. I refer to the statement of the Senator from Arkansas in regard to the Civil Service Committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to know what the Civil Service Committee is doing with the resolutions. If they do not know what they are doing, I intend to know.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the letter may be read.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask that the letter be read. I want to know what is in the letter.

Mr. STERLING. I have no objection to having it read. I will be glad to have the letter read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1922.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR STERLING: There has just come to my attention the copy of letter quoted on page 5499 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Friday, April 14, 1922, from Mr. Luther B. Turnley, in which he makes certain charges against the Civil Service Commission. The facts in his case are as follows:

Mr. Turnley, two years ago, entered the clerk examination and attained a rating of 70.40 and was granted military preference. His name was certified in due course to the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, where he was appointed July 21, 1920. As that board was required last July to make a very material reduction in force, it dropped Mr. Turnley, effective June 30, 1921.

As you know, the commission recommended to the President the issuance of a special order creating the reemployment registers, on which were to be entered the names of employees dropped from the service by reason of necessary reduction of force and not for inefficiency, in order that these persons might be considered in their order for certification to vacancies in other Government establishments needing the services of persons having their qualifications. As soon as the general military preference status was passed the commission placed at the head of this reemployment register the names of persons entitled to preference and has certified their names when reached for vacancies in other departments.

It will be observed that Mr. Turnley attained a rating slightly above 70 per cent, and there are the names of a large number of ex-service men ahead of his on the reemployment register and, therefore, first entitled to certification. Mr. Turnley has expressed willingness to accept appointment at the comparatively low salary of $900 plus the bonus, and yet to-day there are 12 preference eligibles on the reemployment register who have attained higher ratings than his who are likewise willing to accept this salary. Under the law, of course, their names must first be certified.

The commission has never advised Mr. Turnley that his name could not be certified until after he had served three years in office, nor has any employee of the commission so informed him. The fact is simply that his name is not within reach among the preference eligibles on the reemployment register because he attained so low a rating in the examination.

There is a clear distinction between being certified from an eligible register and being transferred from one department to another without reference to a person's standing on any eligible list. In a transfer case there is a law of Congress requiring three years' service, and the commission has no power to waive this.

The commission has done its utmost to accord ex-service men every possible consideration and has gone beyond the usual powers inhering in its organization for the purpose of assisting these men in finding employment.

We are addressing you in this matter because as chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, United States Senate, it seems to be a matter within your jurisdiction. We trust you will be able to secure the publication of this letter in the RECORD.

Very sincerely yours,

G. R. WALES, Commissioner.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I want to say merely a word in regard to the letter. I put the letter of Mr. Turnley in the RECORD not as a criticism of the Civil Service Commission. If they had read it, they would know there is a law of Congress which provides that no department may drop a soldier or sailor who has been honorably discharged in the reduction of forces if his record in the department is good. It provides a penalty that if the head of the department shall disregard the law he shall be immediately removed from office, and upon conviction fined in a sum not more than $1,000, and he may be imprisoned.

Here are the facts: This former soldier had a place; his record was good, because the letter of the chief of his bureau was put in the RECORD also; but he was dropped in reducing the force, although the law says he should not be dropped.

That is the reason why the letter was put in the RECORD. It had nothing to do with the Civil Service Commission. If the Senator from South Dakota, in his anxiety to answer it without reporting the resolution, had read it, he would have found that the letter was put in the RECORD not to criticize the Civil Service Commission, because it had nothing to do with the dropping of a former service man from his employment, but it was put in the RECORD to show that a department was dropping ex-service men whose records were good, notwithstanding the fact that Congress had said the departments should not do so.

The resolution I introduced was intended to find out why, in disregard of law, the departments were dropping former soldiers and sailors, honorably discharged, who were entitled to keep their places. That is all.

The Civil Service Commission could not prevent, I presume, this department from dropping the man. No reference was made in the statement which I gave touching the Civil Service Commission. I have said about all I care to say about that commission, and I have nothing more to say about it. I am satisfied that the commission is very senstive in this particular instance. I do say that the department which dropped this man in the reduction of forces did so in violation of law, and a resolution is pending before the Civil Service Committee, which I have no hopes of ever seeing reported, which would demand the reason why these things have been done.

That is all I know. I have no criticism in this particular case of the Civil Service Commission, although I presume it is amply subject to criticism on most grounds.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] may not have intended by the introduction of this letter into the RECORD to have criticized the Civil Service Commission, but the letter itself does severely criticize the Civil Service Commission, and hence the reply of the Civil Service Commission.

With reference to the resolution to which the Senator from Arkansas has more than once referred, in discussing which he has reflected somewhat upon the Civil Service Committee, all I have to say is that that resolution in regard to soldiers and sailors and marines who have been discharged or dropped from the civil service will receive due consideration and a report will be made upon the resolution. The report will probably call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to some features of the law in regard to the case which have escaped his notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter which has been read will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

PROTECTION OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER LEVEES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 309) appropriating $1,000,000 for the preservation, protection, and repair of levees under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Chair to lay the joint resolution from the House before the Senate, and that it be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That there be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $1,000,000 to be immediately available as an emergency fund to be expended by the Mississippi River Commission during the present flood in the Mississippi River for the purpose of preserving, protecting, and repairing the levees under its jurisdiction: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct $1,000,000 from the appropriation that shall first hereafter be made for the use of said Mississippi River Commission under the terms of the flood control act of March 1, 1917, and said $1,000,000 be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: Provided further, That any unexpended balance of the sum hereby appropriated remaining after the present flood emergency has passed may be expended by the Mississippi River Commission under the authority and subject to the provisions of the said flood control act.

Mr. WARREN. In order to make the record straight I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that I have consulted with every member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am authorized to report back the joint resolution favorably without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, for myself and my colleague, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], and for other Senators who represent a very large section of the country at present threatened with disaster from the overflow of the Mississippi River, I desire to express appreciation for the very prompt action taken by the two Houses of Congress to-day in making available the sum of $1,000,000 for use in maintaining the Mississsipi River levees and protecting against flood conditions.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. WARREN], fully appreciating the nature of the emergency, polled the members of the Committee on Appropriations, and every member of that committee very gladly, in view of the circumstances, consented to an immediate report of the joint resolution which has just been passed. The House of Representatives had pursued a similar course. This was very prompt action and it is very gratifying.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I add that the Secretary of War also, I understand, and the Chief of the Board of Army Engineers cooperated to the very limit in this matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator from Mississippi, because I had no intention of omitting mention of the very prompt and efficient manner in which the matter has been handled by the War Department.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure our people appreciate their efforts.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Secretary of War himself has been very prompt in the matter, and everyone charged with responsibility has been quick to act in anticipation of threatened loss of life and property.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, may I add one word? I do not wish to have General Dawes, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, omitted. He has been doing, as everyone has been doing, his utmost in this emergency. They are all entitled to full credit, and I hope it will be given to them. As one of the Representatives from Louisiana, I am delighted at the very prompt action taken by both the House and the Senate. I believe this appropriation will avert a very great disaster and save a very much larger sum than the amount appropriated.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday there was presented to the Senate the result of months of work by the Finance Committee of the Senate. The minority thought that the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] in presenting the tariff bill would submit a detailed analysis of its provisions, would point out wherein it differed from existing law as well as from former tariff bills, would analyze the various schedules, and indicate the results claimed by the majority which would follow such changes. It was supposed that he would justify such changes and show their effect upon the industrial and economic life of our country. The Senator's speech was notable because of its omissions and the beautiful complacency which characterized its exposition of tariff and economic questions.

The Senator from North Dakota became beatific in dealing with the corporations and trusts and manufacturing interests, who are so beneficially affected by the bill. His gentle words of admonition as to how they should proceed in business will be as welcome to them as an assessment upon one's holdings and will be as quickly disregarded as the law of supply and demand have been by violators of the Sherman antitrust law. The Senator meant well; he apparently felt that the bill would permit exploitation, but hoped that the selfish interests who will benefit by it will not rob the people too much. The Senator's cure for the evils in our present economic life will be ineffective. He places too much power in the hands of special interests and should know that they will oppressively use it. I was somewhat surprised at the naive faith of the Senator in the claims of those who had appeared before his committee and whose voices no doubt were persuasive in framing the schedules found in the pending measure. I can not understand his supreme and perfect confidence in the interests which have appeared before his committee pleading for extortionate tariff rates. I hope before the bill shall have been passed that the Senator from North Dakota, with his splendid ability, will show us precisely what the bill is, what it proposes to do, and what its effects will be upon the economic and industrial life of the people if it shall become a law.

Mr. President, later on I shall have something to say upon some of the schedules, particularly the chemical and dye schedule, but this morning I propose to address myself to another subject not quite cognate to the measure under consideration.

It would seem that the Senate does not take much interest in this tariff legislation. On the Democratic side we have few Senators this morning, and upon the Republican side the number is not much greater. I wonder, Mr. President, if the Republican majority believe they are going to put the bill through by force of numbers. They have been so in the habit of employing the big stick, or having it employed, that I presume they expect the speedy passage of the bill. Moreover, we are told there has been a marriage between the two important blocs, that the agricultural bloc and the manufacturing bloc are in happy accord. Each, it is assumed, has been rewarded, and has written into the bill the demand which must be met. Thus it is thought the bill will go through the Senate without the slightest difficulty. It is dangerous to have too much power. Defeat and humiliation often follow the triumphant hosts. The Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was the product of selfish greed and unrestrained party power. Should our friends not take warning from the experiences of the past?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understand the Senator is going to talk about Mexico.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. It is a very inconsequential matter and yet one which the Senator saw fit to dignify by a reference in his remarks. I think it worth while to call his attention to the fact that, while there are four Democratic Senators on the floor, there are 20 Republican Senators.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that four Democrats are worth, perhaps, more than 20 Republicans.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am not going to discuss that intimation, although there are many things that might be said with reference to it. I should, however, like to say to the Senator, not in any controversial spirit, but purely as a statement of fact——

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that I spoke jocularly in my last observation. I appreciate the importance and the learning and the wisdom of my Republican friends, especially my friend from Indiana.

Mr. OVERMAN. Since the suggestion has been made concerning the Senators present, let us have a quorum.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The suggestion of the Senator from Utah is complimentary, but I want——

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum, in view of the suggestion which has been made.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is very timely and very appropriate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Rawson
Ball	Gerry	Lodge	Robinson
Borah	Glass	McCumber	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gooding	McNary	Shortridge
Broussard	Hale	Moses	Simmons
Bursum	Harris	Myers	Smoot
Calder	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Capper	Heflin	Newberry	Sterling
Caraway	Johnson	Nicholson	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Kellogg	Oddie	Warren
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Keyes	Page	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	King	Phipps	Weller
Fletcher	Ladd	Poindexter	Williams
France	La Follette	Ransdell

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is unavoidably detained on official business.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CONDITIONS IN MEXICO.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I approach a discussion of what many call the Mexican problem with profound sympathy for most of the Mexican people. I entertain no antipathy toward Mexico or her people, although I confess to a feeling of just resentment against the military chieftains and corrupt politicians and other elements of the Mexican population who have for years conspired against the welfare of Mexico, and who have worked irreparable harm and injury not only to millions of the Mexican people, but to Americans as well as to citizens of various countries residing in or having property interests within the boundaries of Mexico.

During the eight years in which Mr. Wilson was President the Republican Party denounced his Mexican policy and insisted upon a course which would have inevitably led to war. Many fervid, and, indeed, perfervid, speeches were delivered in this Chamber and in the House of Representatives in which President Wilson was bitterly assailed and his policy of "watchful waiting" denounced in unmeasured terms. Republican orators and leaders often advocated intervention and the sending of military forces into Mexico for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of American citizens. In the presidential campaign of 1916, so aggressive and virulent were the Republican attacks upon the Democratic administration for its failure to intervene in Mexican affairs, that a sharp issue was presented to the country, and the people were called upon to choose whether they indorsed Mr. Wilson's policy of patience and forbearance or the bellicose and military plan advocated by Republicans, which would have involved the United States in a war with the Mexican people. During the campaign Democratic speakers frequently declared that Mr. Wilson had "kept our country out of war," and the Republicans, with that "bunting patriotism" which so often characterizes some Americans, condemned in bitter terms the foreign policies of the administration, and did not hesitate to denominate his Mexican policy as "pusillanimous and cowardly" in the extreme. The Republican jingoists clamored for war with Mexico when some Americans were killed and many were driven out of Mexico and their property destroyed or confiscated. Republican orators, as well as leaders in the Republican Party, insisted upon intervention, and urged that our military forces cross the Rio Grande and compel the Mexican Government to redress the wrongs committed against American citizens.

The present Secretary of the Interior, who was a distinguished and able Senator from New Mexico, upon many occasions criticized the President and denounced the policy of the Democratic administration in dealing with Mexican affairs. I supported President Wilson and opposed intervention, though I believed there was justification for the United States declaring war against Mexico, and feared that if Mexico persisted in her wayward and criminal course war would result. The attitude of the Mexican Government had not only been exasperating, but those in authority seemed to have deliberately sought to provoke the United States to embark upon an aggressive course in vindication of the rights of American citizens and, indeed, the honor of the Nation. But perhaps the great mass of the people of Mexico were not parties to the hostile and belligerent acts of the Mexican Government and the military chieftains and cabal who were in control. Indeed, many of them did not know of the acts of Mexican officials which were provocative of war. I believed that this great Republic could afford to submit to indignities at the hands of an ignorant people and of a week and incompetent government, though the same acts, if committed by a strong nation, would be regarded as a challenge which should be instantly met. I have thought that we could not apply to Mexico the same standards that should measure the conduct of progressive and highly civilized peoples. The great mass of the people of Mexico are illiterate. They are living in the darkness of past centuries. Millions of them are Indians speaking different languages and bound together by no national spirit.

One who reads the history of Mexico will be filled with compassion for the great bulk of her people. He will feel that neither the church nor the state has done its full duty in their behalf, and that selfish and corrupt politicians and brutal and despotic military chieftains have too often controlled the Republic and have had no concern for the millions of ignorant and unresponsive peons or for the progress and welfare of their country.

The governing class, both in the States and in the Federal Government, have uniformly exploited the people and have, in the main, sacrificed the interests of their country to promote their personal ends and to perpetuate themselves in authority and power. Proclaiming patriotism and national pride and deep devotion to their country, and a high sense of personal honor, the great majority of those who have held positions in Mexico have been either corrupt and dishonest or have intrigued and plotted for place and power. They have not hesitated to plunge their country into civil and internecine war and to rob and plunder the Mexican people as well as the nations of other countries who were seeking to promote the welfare of Mexico and her people.

Ignorant and brutal military chieftains have risen to positions of power through murder, assassination, and brigandage. They have driven from their own country patriotic and enlightened men and women who desired the welfare of their country and were striving to advance it to a firm position among the enlightened and civilized nations of the earth. Even now there are hundreds of thousands of Mexicans living in the United States and in other countries who have been driven from Mexico by the cruel and bloodthirsty officials who have exercised authority, Federal and State. Mexicans of high purpose and pure lives have been brutally murdered by military chieftains and by executive authority because they would not subscribe to revolutionary, unconstitutional, and degrading policies projected by ambitious and wholly unworthy leaders.

When I speak in criticism or condemnation of Mexico, let it be understood that I am not speaking of the great mass of the Mexican people, for whom, as I have said, I have not only sympathy but deep compassion. I grieve when I behold a class of malcontents, of intriguing politicians, of shiftless and shifty and wicked militarists, of quasi intellectuals, prostituting their powers for their own enrichment and for the exploitation of their country and who form groups and confederations warring against one another for the control of the State, with never a thought for the helpless, unfortunate, downtrodden, and oppressed masses upon whose prostrate forms must finally rest the awful consequences of their misdeeds and crimes. Such is Mexico. Such has it been for many years.

President Wilson, with that deep love for humanity which always found expression in his public utterances and in his official acts, believed that a new day was dawning for Mexico. He perceived the great gulf which separated the millions of ignorant persons from the military, professional, and trading and business classes. He perceived that there was an agrarian problem that must be solved if permanent progress was to result. I think he attributed to what have been called the higher classes in Mexico a patriotism and moral integrity which many of them did not possess. I think, perhaps, he attributed to the people generally a higher degree of intelligence and a stronger spirit of nationalism than they possessed. If he erred, it was on the side of mercy and generosity. It was because he abhorred war, particularly with a weak people. His generous and sympathetic course was misconstrued by the Mexican people, and many of them scoffed at his efforts to promote international amity and to advance the interests of the Mexican people.

Cowardly and cruel military, and, indeed, political, leaders sought to inflame the minds of the people against the Americans and our Government. They treated the forbearance and kindness and generosity of the American people and the administration as evidence of cowardice, and so we were regarded with contumely. Hundreds of American nationals who were rightfully in Mexico were murdered, their property confiscated or destroyed, and thousands compelled to flee to escape the persecutions, abuses, indignities, and in many instances death, with which the ignorant and infuriated populace in many districts, led by corrupt politicians and military chieftains, threatened them.

Perhaps Mr. Wilson was disappointed in his efforts to promote amity and peace between this Republic and the Mexican people. Perhaps he felt that the manifold evidences of his sympathy were not appreciated by the Mexican people.

Speaking for myself, I felt that Mexico did not respond to the genuine friendship which was exhibited in her behalf and the patent evidences of the desire of President Wilson and the American people to aid Mexico and her people. I believed that Carranza and his associates and the majority of the Mexican people who made pretensions to enlightenment and civilization exhibited the basest ingratitude toward the administration and the United States, and were guilty of perfidy, if not treachery, in their pro-German attitude and their bitter hostility to the United States when it and Great Britain, and Italy, and France, and other nations were fighting in the interests of civilization and world freedom.

The Republican Party, in the last presidential election, again denounced the policy of the Democratic administration in dealing with Mexico, and promised, if it came into power, to inaugurate a vigorous policy in dealing with Mexico, and, indeed, with all nations. It was declared that Americans would receive redress for the wrongs committed, for losses sustained, and that guaranties for future protection, both of life and property, would be exacted from Mexico. The Republicans have been in power for more than a year. There has been no change in the situation; indeed, conditions in Mexico perhaps are more chaotic and unsatisfactory now than before President Harding was inaugurated. Americans are still being murdered upon Mexican soil, the property of Americans is still being confiscated, and thousands of Americans who have property interests in Mexico are unable to secure redress. Americans who were driven from Mexico are afraid to return.

Many are dying in poverty, though they had large possessions in Mexico when they were expelled from that country. Notes are being written to the Mexican Government by our State Department and protests are being lodged with the executive authorities in Mexico against the confiscatory acts of the Federal Government of Mexico or by the various States. Obregon refuses to negotiate a treaty, the terms of which, though moderate and just, have been indicated by the Secretary of State. He indicates no purpose to reimburse American nationals for the wrongs and injuries inflicted upon them and to protect them in their personal or property rights within the Republic of Mexico.

Bolshevism is lifting its ugly head in some of the States of the Mexican Republic and some of Obregon's principal advisers are followers of the odious principles of the third internationale. American rights have not been vindicated and we are still in the blind alley which seems to be a cul-de-sac.

Our Republican friends who were so loud in their denunciation of Mr. Wilson, so boisterous in their Americanism and in their affirmation that a vigorous and bellicose policy toward Mexico would be pursued, are saying but little nowadays, but they must perceive how unjust were their aspersions and how partisan their criticisms.

I am not calling attention to their statements for the purpose of denouncing the present administration, but rather to invite their attention to the fact that Mexico has presented, and still does present, a problem complicated and most difficult of solution.

I referred to the fact that thousands of Americans were driven out of Mexico during the closing days of Mr. Taft's administration and during the incumbency of President Wilson. Mr. Henry Lane Wilson, in testifying before the Senate committee in 1920, stated that more than 660 Americans were murdered on Mexican soil and on the border; that it had cost our Government half a billion dollars to support the Carranza government, and he further stated that a million of the best Mexicans had left their own country and taken refuge in the United States; that 300,000 Mexicans had been killed, 100,000 had died from pestilence and starvation, and that during the Presidency of Carranza approximately 30,000 Americans left Mexico, and that the aggregate Americans who had fled from Mexico during the recent revolution amounted to 55,000. Thousands of Americans who were driven out of Mexico arrived in the United States penniless. They have been unable to return to Mexico, where all their possessions were, and thousands now in want are found along the Rio Grande and in Arizona and New Mexico. Nothing is being done to enforce their rights or to secure from Mexico reparations for their great wrongs to which they have been subjected.

Four days ago I received a series of resolutions recently adopted by a large number of persons who had been driven out of Mexico or who had property interests in Mexico. I might add, in passing, that several thousand American citizens went from my State to Mexico, some to engage in mining and stock raising, others to engage in agricultural pursuits. Thousands of acres of land were purchased from the Government and from private individuals, most of which was arid and sterile. These American citizens constructed dams and canals, built homes and towns, erected churches and schoolhouses and mills, and transformed desert wastes into fruitful fields and farms. Many of them had ranches and cattle, horses and sheep, as well as other property, real and personal, in various parts of Mexico. Thousands of them were driven from their homes, their personal property was confiscated, many of their homes destroyed, and a portion of their lands seized and parceled out among Mexicans who were placed in possession of the same. Most of the Americans were driven from Mexico and deprived of their property, and have been living in penury and want since the date of their expulsion. Death has come to some, but neither they nor those who survived have been recompensed to the extent of a single penny for the wrongs and outrages inflicted upon them. Several hundred of these persons returned to Utah, and they recently met and adopted a series of resolutions, a copy of which was forwarded to me and which I present to the Senate. The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions.

Whereas citizens of the State of Utah prior to 1910 were invited and encouraged by the late President, Porfirio Diaz, and his associates of the Republic of Mexico to colonize and invest capital in the lands, mines, and industries of said country, in accord with the provisions of the treaties between these two countries; and

Whereas hundreds of our citizens accepted said invitations and entered said country and invested their means in the industries thereof, and were very successful under the favorable administration of President Diaz; and

Whereas during the latter part of 1910 a revolution broke out in said country, President Diaz was banished, law and order ceased to be maintained, life and property became insecure, and hate, injury, and outrages to life and property of citizens of the United States, particularly, were inaugurated and acquiesced in by Mexican State and Federal officials, who treated our citizenship with the utmost contempt and committed affronts to us, our flag, and our country with impunity, forcing us out of Mexico with heavy losses of life and property; and

Whereas many of our citizens being thus robbed of all their earthly possessions returned to Utah destitute, discouraged, and dependent upon their former friends and charity for existence, filed claims years ago with the State Department at Washington for redress and damages thus sustained, and others are prepared to file such claims when the same will receive attention: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Association of Utah Claimants Against Mexico, assembled at Salt Lake City, Utah, this 8th day of April, A. D. 1922, That we urge and request the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and Congress to terminate forthwith the "watchful waiting" policy of the past, and that our rights as citizens of the United States for redress and reimbursement for our said losses according to authentic claims be enforced against said Republic without further delay.

Resolved further, That each member of this association enlist the services of their friends and political parties and candidates in making our present and future Senators and Representatives in Congress acquainted with the outrages committed against us and our rights and property as citizens of the United States by military forces and nationals of Mexico with the knowledge, and, in many cases, the consent of the officials of said Government.

Resolved further, That the president and secretary of this association officially sign and forward to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and our Senators and Congressmen copies of these resolutions.

I. C. THORESEN,
President of the Association of Utah Claimants Against Mexico.
G. M. RICHARDS,
Secretary of said Association.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understand that the Senator intends to speak at some length on the tariff, via Mexico. Does the Senator expect to state later on what course this Government should pursue with reference to Mexico? Does the Senator believe in intervention? Does he believe in the recognition of Obregon? What does he believe in as a means of improving or curing the existing situation?

Mr. KING. The Senator is anticipating.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am asking whether or not later on the Senator intends to address himself to that subject.

Mr. KING. Let me play the part of the Yankee and ask the Senator from Indiana, who is a seasoned statesman, one of the leaders of the Republican Party, what suggestion he made as to redress when Mr. Wilson was in power and when Americans were suffering damages? Did he advocate intervention then?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; I did on the stump and elsewhere.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator advocate intervention now?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; because I think it can be cured without it; but I am not making this speech. The Senator is making a speech on conditions in Mexico, and I am trying to find out what remedy he proposes, or whether his speech is just one of general castigation or animadversion on the policy of the present administration without suggesting a remedy for existing evils? Does the Senator believe in intervention; and if so, does he think it should be armed or peaceful? Does he believe in the recognition of Obregon, or what policy does he expect us to pursue in order to protect American lives, American rights, and American property in Mexico?

Mr. KING. My able friend from Indiana is somewhat like the impatient maiden who is unable, after reading the first chapter of a novel, to peruse the entire book, but hastily turns to the concluding chapter to learn the finale. The Senator is unwilling to permit me to develop my theme and state my views after I have presented certain facts which I regard as important, preliminary to the submission of any conclusions.

I shall not, however, as suggested by my friend, pursue the course adopted by him and other Republicans, when they were "castigating," to use his expression, Mr. Wilson and the Democratic administration; I shall not castigate the Republican Party, although the Lord knows they deserve it. Perhaps they need mercy more than they need castigation. Let me say, however, that I shall, before concluding, speak in commendation, in part at least, of the course pursued by the distinguished Secretary of State in dealing with the Mexican situation. While commending generally his Mexican policy, I shall express regret that he has not acted with somewhat greater firmness and insisted upon a settlement of the live questions which now divide the two nations.

The Senator asked me if I favored intervention. I promptly respond that I do not. As I have indicated, I opposed intervention at a time when he favored it. As I understand it, now he is opposed to intervention. In that respect we occupy the same position.

The Senator asked me what remedy I suggest. Later in my remarks I hope to submit some observations as to what policy should now be adopted in dealing with the Mexican problem. But lest the Senator may feel that I am not meeting squarely at the moment his questions, I am willing to state that I approve of the course of the President in not according recognition to the Obregon régime, and I think that under no circumstances should there be recognition until the plan suggested by Secretary Colby and the present Secretary of State be accepted by Mexico. In other words, I think that accompanying the act of recognition there should be a treaty between the two Republics by the terms of which provision will be made to compensate the families of the more than 700 American citizens who have been killed upon Mexican soil or along the border.

The Senator knows that many of these Americans who were murdered were men of ability and character. Many were mining men—metallurgists and engineers—and others whose earnings were of such a character as to make their lives in a pecuniary sense valuable. Lawyers know that when suits are brought to recover for the death of an individual by reason of the neglect or tort of the defendant the pecuniary value to the family of the deceased is an important issue in the case. Most of these Americans who were murdered left families, who should be compensated for the loss of their husbands, fathers, and protectors.

I repeat there should be as a condition precedent to recognition full provision made for the ascertainment of the damages due to the families of these deceased persons and assurances given of payment of the awards made. There should also be reparation in behalf of the thousands of Americans who have been assaulted or injured in their persons and damages for the loss of property, for which, in international law and in harmony with well-established principles of justice, Mexico would be liable.

It is possible that the Mexican Government is not responsible for all property which was destroyed or stolen, and perhaps it should not be held liable in damages for all Americans who have been killed upon Mexican soil. My contention is, however, that many were killed under such circumstances as that, under well-established principles of international law, the Government of Mexico must be held responsible in damages; and the same is true with respect to much if not all of the property which was expropriated or destroyed.

The hearings before the Senate subcommittee conclusively establish the fact that many of the crimes committed and wrongs perpetrated were with the connivance and, indeed, in many instances, with the consent of the Mexican Government or the executive and military authorities. Moreover, there was back of the military movements in Mexico a strong anti-American spirit and a widespread propaganda conducted by the executive and military commanders against the United States and all Americans within Mexico. Officials of the Government became agitators and inflamed the people against this Republic. There was a general purpose in view by many of the constituted authorities to drive all Americans from Mexico and confiscate their property. Therefore, perhaps the Mexican Government is legally and morally responsible for the wrongs committed against the United States and its citizens.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator permit another interruption?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does the Senator know whether any steps have been taken along the lines he suggests?

Mr. KING. My information is that no effective steps have been taken to bring about those results.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Suppose demands were made——

Mr. KING. I have not fully answered the Senator's question as to what I would suggest; but I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Let me ask this question right on that point: Suppose we make demands on Obregon? The Senator says, and doubtless truly, that many of those outrages were committed with the assent if not with the direct connivance of the Government. Suppose they declined to accede to our demands, or to acknowledge them in any way. Then where would we be? Does the Senator propose that this Government should go on pursuing the present policy?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Then what does the Senator expect the Government to do?

Mr. KING. If the Senator will be patient I will endeavor to answer his questions. But let me complete the other statement. The Senator asked me what course I would pursue, and I attempted to reply and said that reparation should be demanded for those who were killed and for whose death Mexico is responsible. Damages should also be demanded for injuries done to Americans, to their persons and feelings, growing out of assaults and maltreatment as well as imprisonment. The records show that hundreds of American citizens were subjected to great indignities at the hands of Mexican authorities, and under such conditions as clearly establish the responsibility of the Government itself for the torts and wrongs committed.

I suggest further that, contemporaneous with the negotiation of a treaty between the two Governments, and indeed as a part of the treaty, or a proper and necessary supplement thereto, provision should be made to compensate American citizens for the confiscation and destruction of property by them, real and personal, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, the responsibility for which is chargeable to the Mexican Government. In other words, I believe that our Government should take immediate steps to obtain redress for the wrongs which have been sustained by American citizens at the hands of the Mexican Government.

I do not, of course, expect Mexico to pay whatever the United States or American citizens demand shall be paid, but our Government should insist that Mexico adopt that course which civilized nations under like conditions would follow. American citizens have been outraged, and it is the duty of their Government to protect them. Mexico, not satisfied with past indignities and spoliations and outrages, is now pursuing a policy of expropriation and destruction of American property. Our Government should demand that Mexico, professing adherence to international law and that spirit of comity which exists among civilized and enlightened nations, should meet her just obligations; that where the damages or obligations are unliquidated, provision should be made by treaty for the erection of proper tribunals to pass upon the claims and demands, and to make awards consistent with justice and recognized principles of international law.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I entirely agree with the Senator as to that, but of what value to make demands? Why make a demand on the Mexican Government unless we intend in some way or other to back it up? Why make demands when they have been made over and over again in the years gone by?

Mr. KING. Oh, the Senator is just as impatient in this as he is to get his iniquitous tariff bill passed.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am very anxious about the tariff bill, or else I would not be asking the Senator with reference to something that is about as far away from it as heaven is from the Democratic Party.

Mr. KING. When the Senator speaks of heaven and the Democratic Party in the same breath, he puts them together. They are in the same category because Democracy leads to justice and justice leads to heaven, and if my friend will join the Democratic Party and help it establish the principles of justice, I can assure him of celestial rewards in the great hereafter.

But the Senator will not let me conclude my answer, so I will stop here and attempt to answer that point. The Senator says, "What would you do; would you continue to make demands?"

No. I think our Government would be not only justified, but that it would be its duty to proceed further. It should submit to the Mexican Government such claims and demands as would meet the conscience of civilized nations and be sanctioned by enlightened people everywhere. It should, among other things, ask for the appointment of an international tribunal to pass upon all claims which the nationals of the respective Governments might make, as well as claims which either Government might submit against the other. When such tribunal makes its awards a demand should be made that Mexico meet the same. Our Government should also demand that Mexico cease its confiscatory policy and its assaults upon and assassination of American citizens. If Mexico refused to accede to these requests or demands, then the President should submit the entire matter to Congress. Congress should then authorize the President to appoint an international tribunal, if jurists of ability and character would consent to act, and, if not, then Americans of ability and integrity, to whom would be submitted all claims by the United States and American citizens against Mexico, with authority to make such findings as the facts warrant. If awards are made by such tribunal and it finds that there is liability upon the part of Mexico, then our Government should notify Mexico of such findings and demand that payment be made or steps taken to compensate the claimants conformable to such awards.

If Mexico then refused to make payment or exhibited unwillingness to make any adjustment and stubbornly refused to discharge her international obligations, then it would appear that the only alternative remaining would be for the United States to seize one or more ports and collect import duties, applying the same pro rata upon the liquidation of the awards. If this course were taken, the United States would doubtless hold the ports until Mexico was brought to her senses and was willing to make rectification for her wrongs and meet the just and righteous demands of this Nation.

In my opinion, if our Government announced that it intended pursuing this policy, it would bring about improved conditions and prepare the way for the negotiation of a fair and just treaty, containing full provisions necessary to amicably adjust all controversies existing between the two Governments and their nationals.

I have hastily and imperfectly submitted these statements in reply to my friend, who tells me, sotto voce, that he is compelled to immediately leave the Chamber. Of course, I have only sketched, and that imperfectly, the plan which I think should be pursued, and doubtless I have omitted important conditions and qualifications, or unduly stressed some points which, upon examination of my statements, as they will appear in cold type, I might feel constrained to modify.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. In other words, in the last analysis—a much abused expression—the Senator favors war on Mexico if he can not get what he wants in any other way.

Mr. KING. I do not want the Senator to put those words into my mouth.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does not that mean war?

Mr. KING. No; I do not think it means war.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. When we blockade the ports of a nation, and when we scatter our troops along the border of that nation for the purpose of enforcing the collection of revenues, which we intend to keep, is not that war?

Mr. KING. It may or may not be war; that would be for Mexico to determine; but as I said a moment ago, and I am sure the Senator remembers that part of my sentence——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. KING. In which I stated that in my opinion if the administration would announce the policy which I indicated there would be improved conditions in Mexico. I believe there would be a reversal of the present policy of confiscation under article 27 of the new constitution, and under the numerous acts of confiscation, passed by Sonora, Chihuahua, Tabasco, Yucatan, and other Mexican States.

Let me say to the Senator that such a policy would receive the indorsement of tens of thousands of Mexicans who are patriotic and loyal to their country and who have been driven from Mexico by the revolutionary governments and by the military dictators and cruel executives who have controlled Mexico since the Diaz régime. These Mexicans of whom I speak desire that the most cordial relations should exist between the United States and their country. They are opposed to the Bolshevik schemes which were adopted by Carranza and which are being enforced by Obregon. They have been opposed to the murder of Americans and to the expropriation of their property. They long for the day to come when Mexicans and Americans and other nationals can live in peace in Mexico and devote their energies to the development of the resources of their country. They believe that wrongs have been done to Americans and to this Republic.

In my opinion the great mass of the Mexican people do not sympathize with the narrow, intolerant, and destructive policy which has guided those who have controlled the destinies of Mexico for a number of years. They and thousands of intellectuals, both in Mexico and beyond her borders, are not in sympathy with the political and economic policy which Obregon's government is executing. We all know that Obregon has not been an unwilling disciple of De la Huerta, who is a member of his cabinet—an important one, I may add—and who was a follower of the Rand school, in New York, and attempted upon his return to Mexico to establish a Bolshevik State in Sonora. Anyone who reads his proclamations and decrees when in authority in Sonora will recognize his Bolshevist propensities. I may add in passing that Obregon placed in his cabinet Calles, who is confessedly a Bolshevist and a follower of Lenin and Trotski.

Another prominent Bolshevist was in Obregon's cabinet, and only recently retired. It is difficult to believe that Mexico will be regenerated if controlled by men of this character. Mexico's regeneration is retarded because so many of her most illustrious citizens, men of merit and ability, have been driven from Mexico. In addition to the tens of thousands of intellectuals who have taken refuge in the United States there are over 475,000 Mexicans living in the United States, many of whom will never return. Within the boundaries of this great Republic they enjoy peace and prosperity and liberty. They have expatriated themselves, and perhaps in time many of them will take upon themselves the responsibilities of American citizenship.

I repeat that it is most unfortunate that so many men of high character and of great ability, lawyers, professors, writers, bankers, statesmen, and men whose learning and scholarship would give them a high place among the most advanced people of the world, have been driven from Mexico by the military chieftains, the cruel and merciless leaders of revolutions, the bigoted, intolerant, and tyrannous executives, who have and still control the Federal and State governments of Mexico. Mexico needs in this great crisis men whose wisdom and statesmanship, if accepted by the people, would place her upon the path of progress and sure advancement. These men of whom I speak, and who have been banished from Mexico, learned in the law, in international questions, in economic and industrial matters, are in France, Spain, South America, and in our land. What a glorious thing it would be for Mexico if an enlightened constitutional government were inaugurated. But it seems as though that is impossible and that petty military chieftains rise to power and men of honor and ability and patriotism are outlawed and driven from their native land.

Mr. President, if we are to judge the future by the past, it may be safely affirmed that Mexico will present for an indefinite period a most serious problem. For nearly 100 years she has taxed the patience and forbearance of this Republic and has been a diplomatic plague which still persists. By the forbearance of the United States Mexico has been given ample opportunity to put her house in order and to assume among the free States of the world that station of equality and independence generally accorded to civilized States. But looking back with the perspective of nearly 100 years, we witness to-day a recurrence of the same old symptoms of anarchy, brigandage, and disregard of municipal and international law which has almost universally characterized Mexican administration, except during the Diaz administration.

Professor Jones, in his work called "Mexico and Its Reconstruction," declares that—> for more than a half century Mexico has been a country in which civil dissension was seldom absent.

He refers to the—> contrasts and conflicts arising out of the native elements of the population—

And—

> the lack of communication between the various districts of the country. As a result, from a cultural standpoint, the Republic has been a collection of units rather than a single State; a situation, obviously, which makes a satisfactory solution of Mexican relations difficult in the extreme.

He declares that—> there must be created within the Republic a government that can establish order, that will respect individual rights, put the great resources of the nation again at the service of those living within its borders, and enable it to contribute its due share to the maintenance of the family of nations.

The true friends of Mexico will wish that a government may be established in Mexico which recognizes the rights of its own nationals as well as the rights of the nationals of other countries, and a government which will respect its treaties and the international usages of civilized and enlightened nations.

I stated that Mexico presented no new problem. Let me invite attention to some historical facts which demonstrate how serious has been that problem to the United States and how patient our Government has been in dealing with the same.

The independence of Mexico was recognized by the United States on January 1, 1825. At that time there was already an accumulation of claims against the Mexican Government for injuries inflicted upon the persons and property of American citizens, for which redress had been sought in vain. Under date of March 20, 1826, Henry Clay, who was then Secretary of State, in a letter addressed to Poinsett, the American minister, instructed him to demand redress for the forcible seizure of the schooner Fair America, in the course of which the Secretary said:

> Respect for the authorities of the United States alone forbids my characterizing it by the epithet which belongs to the transaction. I can not doubt that upon a representation which you are now requested to make to the Government of Mexico on behalf of Mr. Wilson, it will promptly order the restoration of his property with a just indemnity for its iniquitous seizure and detention.

The Mexican authorities in those days as to-day were adepts at delays and in the intervention of verbal excuse and circumlocution to avoid responsible consideration of the business in hand.

Thus the American chargé d'affaires, August 5, 1833, reported:

> When a delayed and apparently reluctant answer is wrung from the secretary we are merely told that the disorganized state of the political system precludes the General Government from exercising those powers with which they have been invested by the constitution, and we are admonished to forbear complaints and remonstrances until the restoration of order may enable the executive to discharge its functions and enforce the law; in the meanwhile, however, the interests of foreigners, their persons and property, are exposed to daily violation and outrage by every petty officer either of the general or of the State governments, and often without even a plausible pretext to excuse the delinquency.

The situation described finds a parallel in the relations between the two Republics during the past 25 years, except during the régime of Porfirio Diaz.

In a private letter to President Jackson, under date of September 14, 1827, the American chargé d'affaires said:

Since the present party (Santa Anna and Gomez Farias) came into power I have been able to do nothing. During the last two months I have not even received a reply to the many official notes addressed to the department of foreign affairs on affairs previously before it, as well as on many new cases that are daily occurring; the British minister informed me that he was similarly situated.

Senators will perceive the similarity of conditions then and now. The same difficulties existed in the days of President Jackson. Outrages were committed then; Americans were murdered; property was destroyed; diplomatic notes were written not only by the representatives of America but by representatives of Great Britain and other countries to the Mexican authorities, which dealt with the evils and wrongs then as they have dealt with them during the past 12 years.

During the following year, on June 24, 1834, the Secretary of State addressed the American chargé d'affaires as follows:

The President, dissatisfied with the continual delays which have taken place in adjusting the points at issue between the two governments, directs that you will take an early occasion, after the receipt of this communication, to bring them again before the Mexican Government and to obtain a prompt and definite answer.

The language of this note is somewhat reminiscent of the communications by our State Department addressed to the Mexican authorities during the past 10 or 15 years. Many communications were forwarded to the Mexican Government protesting against the injustices suffered by American citizens and the apparent disinclination of the Mexican Government to afford that protection to life and property which is due from a civilized state. Generally speaking, these communications were answered in diplomatic language, but with evasion and indirection. No sincere desire was exhibited upon the part of the Mexican officials to remove the causes which led our Government to make complaint or to pursue a course which the standards of international usage required of the Mexican Government.

Recurring to the note which I was reading, it proceeds:

You will state that the United States holds the Federal Government of Mexico alone accountable for such injuries to their citizens as merit national interposition; and that the requirement of the minister of foreign affairs in his note to you of the 24th of October last, that the claimants should present their demands in person at the Mexican treasury, is too unreasonable to be submitted to. Indeed, taken in connection with the refusal to examine any of the claims until all shall be submitted, it is tantamount to a denial of justice.

On December 17, 1835, Mr. Powhatan Ellis, the new chargé d'affaires, was appointed by President Jackson. The instructions given him, under date of January 29, 1836, referring to the pending claims, used this language:

Provision for their payment is pertinaciously withheld, and the justice of most of them has not been acknowledged. * * * Though the President is willing to look with indulgent consideration upon the almost incessant commotions in Mexico which, by weakening the authority of the federal government, may have encouraged the perpetration of the acts complained of, and by exhausting its resources have perhaps made it impossible to grant immediate relief to the injured, he thinks that they afford no sufficient apology for refusing or declining thus long to examine the claims.

Mr. President, the situation depicted in these notes must have been a severe trial to the stern and implacable Andrew Jackson, but even he pleaded and appealed to the Mexican people to right the wrongs which they had done and to pursue a course of honor and justice. There is a striking similarity between conditions then and those which still prevail in Mexico, and if one were not optimistic he would declare that it will be a long and tragic course which Mexico must pursue before she can assume an honorable station among the civilized States of the world.

Under date of April 30, 1836, Mr. Ellis, referring to the attitude of the Mexican Government, reported:

They look upon us as either too imbecile or afraid to vindicate our just rights, and hence the continual injuries inflicted upon the persons and property of citizens of the United States. So long, then, as these impressions prevail here I am deprived of the power of rendering but little service to my countrymen * * * I would respectfully suggest the propriety of pursuing a different policy in our intercourse with the Mexican States. They ought to be made to understand that the seizure and condemnation of the property and the imprisonment of the American citizens, without in some instances even the color of law to warrant it, will be arrested by a Government whose uniform policy has been to resist violence and aggression from all foreign power.

Under date of July 20, 1836, the Secretary of State sent another communication to the American chargé d'affaires in regard to an American schooner stranded near Tabasco, in which he said:

If, contrary to the present hope, no satisfactory answer shall be given to this just and reasonable demand within three weeks, you will inform the Mexican Government that unless redress is afforded without unnecessary delay your further residence in Mexico will be useless. If this state of things shall continue longer, you will give formal notice to the Mexican Government that unless a satisfactory answer shall be given within a fortnight you are instructed to ask for your passports; and, at the end of that time, if you do not receive such answer, it is the President's direction that you demand your passports and return to the United States, bringing with you the archives of the legation.

Pursuant to these instructions, Ellis presented the American demands in this language:

The undersigned, therefore, in compliance with instructions from the President of the United States, demands that full reparation be made to all persons who have sustained injury from the several cases now set forth; that all private claims of citizens of the United States on this Government be promptly and properly examined and suitable redress afforded; and that due satisfaction be given for the numerous insults offered to the officers and flag of the United States as heretofore represented.

After the usual delay the Mexican foreign office sent back a meaningless and evasive response. After several weeks waiting, Ellis advised the Mexican foreign office that his longer residence as representative of the Government of the United States in Mexico would be useless. After further vacillation and asking for more time for the examination of claims which had been pending for many years, the Mexican foreign office replied that the Mexican courts were open for the claimants and that the grievances complained of were the subject of diplomatic action.

Senators will perceive that American citizens were subjected to the same indignities in those days as they have been during the administrations of Madero, Carranza, and Obregon. They were imprisoned and despoiled of their property then as they have been during the past 12 years. Protests made by our Government against the wanton and willful conduct of the Mexicans toward American citizens brought no relief and failed to change the policy of the Mexican Government.

Returning to the historical matters which I am presenting, Mr. Ellis, failing to accomplish his object, left the City of Mexico on December 27, 1836, and returned to Washington, where he reported personally to President Jackson.

President Jackson, in his message of December 7, 1835, had taken rather a temperate view of the difficulties in Mexico. He said:

Revolution succeeds revolution, injuries are committed upon foreigners engaged in lawful pursuits, much time elapses before a government sufficiently stable is erected to justify expectation of redress, ministers are sent and received, and before the discussions of past injuries are fairly begun, fresh troubles arise; but too frequently new injuries are added to the old, to be discussed together with the existing Government after it has proved its ability to sustain the assaults made upon it, or with its successor, if overthrown. If this unhappy condition of things continues much longer, other nations will be under the painful necessity of deciding whether justice to their suffering citizens does not require a prompt redress of injuries by their own power, without waiting for the establishment of a government competent and enduring enough to discuss and make satisfaction for them.

In his next annual message of December 5, 1836, before the return of Ellis, President Jackson, referring again to the Mexican claims, used this language:

The just and long-standing claims of our citizens * * * are yet sources of dissatisfaction and complaint. No danger is apprehended, however, that they will not be peaceably, though tardily, acknowledged and paid * * * unless the irritating effect of her struggle with Texas should unfortunately make her immediate neighbor Mexico an exception. * * * The ancient complaints of injustice made on behalf of our citizens are disregarded, and new causes of dissatisfaction had arisen, some of them of a character requiring prompt remonstrance and ample and immediate redress. I trust, however, by tempering firmness with courtesy and acting with great forbearance upon every incident that has occurred or that may happen, to do and to obtain justice, and thus avoid the necessity of again bringing this subject to the view of Congress.

The patient and friendly efforts of President Jackson, to induce Mexico to change her course, were of no avail.

In the following February, as I have already stated, Mr. Ellis returned to the United States and reported the status of our affairs with Mexico to President Jackson, who, on February 6, made it the subject of a special message to Congress, in which he said:

At the beginning of this session Congress was informed that our claims upon Mexico had not been adjusted, but that notwithstanding the irritating effect upon her councils of the movements in Texas I hoped, by great forbearance, to avoid the necessity of again bringing the subject of them to your notice. That hope has been disappointed. Having in vain urged upon that Government the justice of those claims and my indispensable obligation to insist that there should be "no further delay in the acknowledgment, if not the redress, of the injuries complained of," my duty requires that the whole subject should be presented, as it now is, for the action of Congress, whose exclusive right it is to decide on the further measures of redress to be employed. The length of time since some of the injuries have been committed, the repeated and unavailing applications for redress, the wanton character of some of the outrages upon the property and persons of our citizens, upon the officers and flag of the United States, independent of recent insults to this Government and people by the late extraordinary Mexican minister, would justify in the eyes of all nations immediate war. That remedy, however, should not be used by just and generous nations, confiding in their strength, for injuries committed, if it can be honorably avoided; and it has occurred to me that, considering the present embarrassed condition of that country, we should act with both wisdom and moderation by giving to Mexico one more opportunity to atone for the past before we take redress into our own hands. To avoid all misconception on the part of Mexico, as well as to protect our own national character from reproach, this opportunity should be given with the avowed design and full preparation to take immediate satisfaction if it should not be obtained on a repetition of the demand for it. To this end I recommend that an act be passed authorizing reprisals, and the use of the naval force of the United States by the Executive against Mexico to enforce them, in the event of a refusal by the Mexican Government to come to an amicable adjustment of the matters in controversy between us upon another demand thereof made from on board one of our vessels of war on the coast of Mexico.

The documents herewith transmitted, with those accompanying my message in answer to a call of the House of Representatives of the 17th ultimo, will enable Congress to judge of the propriety of the course heretofore pursued and to decide upon the necessity of that now recommended.

If these views should fail to meet the concurrence of Congress, and that body be able to find in the condition of the affairs between the two countries, as disclosed by the accompanying documents, with those referred to, any well-grounded reasons to hope that an adjustment of the controversy between them can be effected without a resort to the measures I have felt it my duty to recommend, they may be assured of my cooperation in any other course that shall be deemed honorable and proper.

President Jackson was unable to secure redress for the wrongs committed against American citizens. Mexico continued her acts of spoliation and treated with the utmost disdain and contempt the pacific and pleading efforts of our Government to maintain friendly relations.

On May 27, 1837, Martin Van Buren in the meantime having become President of the United States, and it being deemed inadvisable to resume regular diplomatic relations with Mexico, the Secretary of State dispatched a special messenger, Robert Greenhow, to Mexico with instructions to deliver to the minister of foreign affairs a diplomatic package containing a letter from the Secretary and a categorical statement of pending American claims, and to obtain a written acknowledgment of its receipt. In his letter to the minister of foreign affairs of Mexico the Secretary of State said:

The direction of the President of the United States has made it the duty of the undersigned, the Secretary of State of the United States, to address the minister of foreign affairs of the Mexican Republic for the purpose of inviting for the last time the serious attention of the Government of that country to the numerous, various, and long-standing complaints of injuries to the citizens and insults to the officers, flag, and Government of the United States by Mexican authorities, and to make a solemn and final demand of satisfaction for them.

I pause to direct the attention of Senators to the indictment contained in the foregoing communication against the Mexican Government. This strong State paper points out the continued misconduct of the Mexican Government and its insults to the flag and to the Government if the United States. But then, as now, the protests of our Government were unheeded and the outrages and indignities continued.

Recurring again to this subject, in his annual message of December 5, 1837, President Van Buren said:

A sincere believer in the wisdom of the pacific policy by which the United States has always been governed in their intercourse with foreign nations, it was my particular desire, from the proximity of the Mexican Republic and well-known occurrences on our frontier, to be instrumental in obviating all existing difficulties with that Government and in restoring to the intercourse between the two Republics that liberal and friendly character by which they should always be distinguished. I regret, therefore, the more deeply to have found in the recent communications of that Government so little reason to hope that any future reference of mine for the accomplishment of these ends would be successful, although the larger number, and many of them aggravated cases of personal wrongs, have been now for years before the Mexican Government, and some of the causes of national complaint, and those of the most offensive character, admitted of immediate, simple, and satisfactory replies, it is only within a few days past that any specific communication in answer to our last demand, made five months ago, had been received from the Mexican minister. * * * On a careful and deliberate examination of their contents, as considering the spirit manifested by the Mexican Government, it has become my painful duty to return the subject as it now stands to Congress, to whom it belongs, to decide upon the time, the mode, and the measure of redress.

It was the view of Congress that any affirmative action by our Government would have to be that of war. Facing this eventuality, a convention was finally signed on September 11, 1838, to settle the American claims by arbitration. Mexico, however, true to her dilatory character, did not ratify this convention and it was necessary to make a new convention in 1840 before the arbitration could proceed. The commissioners of Mexico and the United States could only agree on the amount of $450,000, but the umpire, appointed by the King of Prussia, awarded $2,026,149.68, and it must be remembered that these claims had accrued within the first 10 years after the recognition of the independence of Mexico by the United States.

Senators will note that the award made by the umpire appointed by the King of Prussia embraced but a few claims which had arisen during the first 10 years following the independence of Mexico. The numerous claims arising during nearly two decades, following this 10-year period, were not considered, and Mexico refused to meet these claims or to compensate for the wrongs done by her to American nationals and to the American Government during this period of nearly 20 years.

But the mere liquidation of these claims did not assure their payment by Mexico. It seemed that the only way by which payment could or would be obtained was by the cession of territory. To this effect Mr. Thompson, the American minister to Mexico, wrote Webster, Secretary of State, under date of April 29, 1842:

I believe that this Government would cede to us Texas and the Californias, and I am thoroughly satisfied that that is all we shall ever get for the claims of our merchants on this country. As to Texas, I regard it of very little value compared to California, the richest, the most beautiful, and the most healthy country in the world. Our Atlantic border secures us a commercial ascendancy there, with the acquisition of upper California we should have the same ascendancy on the Pacific. * * * It is a country in which slavery is not necessary, and therefore, if that is made an objection, let there be another compromise. France and England both have their eyes upon it.

Great Britain was approached on this subject, and Lord Ashburton replied that England would make no objection to it. In 1845 John Slidell was appointed minister to Mexico, and in his instructions from Buchanan, Secretary of State, is the following:

Under these circumstances it is the desire of the President that you shall use your best efforts to obtain a cession of that Province from Mexico to the United States. Should you accomplish this object you will render immense service to your country and establish an enviable reputation for yourself. * * * Should you, after consulting the Mexican authorities on the subject, discover a prospect of success the President would not hesitate to give, in addition to the assumption of the just claims of our citizens on Mexico, $25,000,000 for the cession.

In his first annual message to Congress on December 2, 1845, the President reviewed the situation as to Mexican claims and said:

The independence of Texas is a fact conceded by Mexico herself, and she had no right or authority to prescribe restrictions as to the form of government which Texas might afterwards choose to assume. But though Mexico can not complain of the United States on account of the annexation of Texas, it is to be regretted that serious causes of misunderstanding between the two countries continue to exist, growing out of unredressed injuries inflicted by the Mexican authorities and people on the persons and property of citizens of the United States through a long series of years. Mexico has admitted these injuries but has neglected and refused to repair them. Such was the character of the wrongs and such the insults repeatedly offered to American citizens and the American flag by Mexico, in palpable violation of the laws of nations and the treaty between the two countries of the 5th of April, 1831, that they have been repeatedly brought to the notice of Congress by my predecessors. As early as the 6th day of February, 1837, the President of the United States in a message to Congress declared that "the length of time since some of the injuries have been committed, the repeated and unavailing application for redress, the wanton character of some of the outrages upon the property and persons of our citizens, upon the officers and flag of the United States, independent of recent insults to this Government and people by the late extraordinary minister of Mexico, would justify in the eyes of all nations immediate war." * * * Since these proceedings, more than eight years have elapsed, during which, in addition to the wrongs then complained of, others of an aggravated character have been committed on the persons and property of our citizens.

A special agent was sent to Mexico in the summer of 1838 with full authority to make another and final demand for redress. The demand was made; the Mexican Government promised to repair the wrongs of which we complained, and after much delay a treaty of indemnity with that view was concluded between the two powers on the 11th of April, 1839, and was duly ratified by both Governments. By this treaty a joint commission was created to adjudicate and decide on the claims of American citizens on the Government of Mexico. The commission was organized at Washington on the 25th day of August, 1840. Their time was limited to 18 months, at the expiration of which they had adjudicated and decided claims amounting to $2,026,139.68 in favor of citizens of the United States against the Mexican Government, leaving a large amount of claims undecided. Of the latter the American commissioners had decided in favor of our citizens claims amounting to $928,627.88, which were left unacted on by the umpire authorized by the treaty. Still further claims, amounting to between three and four millions of dollars, were submitted to the board too late to be considered and were left undisposed of. The sum of $2,026,139.68 decided by the board was a liquidated and ascertained debt due by Mexico to the claimants and there was no justifiable reason for delaying its payment according to the terms of the treaty. It was not, however, paid. Mexico applied for further indulgence, and, in that spirit of liberality and forbearance which has ever marked the policy of the United States toward that Republic, the request was granted, and on the 30th of January, 1843, a new treaty was concluded. By this treaty it was provided that the interest due on the awards in favor of claimants under the convention of the 11th of April, 1839, should be paid on the 30th of April, 1843, and that—

"The principal of the said awards and the interest accruing thereon shall be paid in five years, in equal installments every three months, the said term of five years to commence on the 30th day of April, 1843, aforesaid."

It was postponed practically five years.

The interest due to the 30th day of April, 1843, and the first three of the twenty installments have been paid. Seventeen of these installments remain unpaid, seven of which are now due.

The claims which were left undecided by the joint commission, amounting to more than $3,000,000, together with other claims for spoliations on the property of our citizens, were subsequently presented to the Mexican Government for payment, and were so far recognized that a treaty providing for their examination and settlement by a joint commission was concluded and signed at Mexico on the 20th day of November, 1843. This treaty was ratified by the United States with certain amendments to which no just exception could have been taken, but it has not yet received the ratification of the Mexican Government. In the meantime, our citizens, who suffered great losses—and some of whom have been reduced from affluence to bankruptcy—are without remedy unless their rights be enforced by their Government. Such a continued and unprovoked series of wrongs could never have been tolerated by the United States had they been committed by one of the principal nations of Europe. * * * We have, therefore, borne the repeated wrongs she has committed with great patience, in the hope that a returning sense of justice would ultimately guide our councils and that we might, if possible, honorably avoid any hostile collision with her. Without the previous authority of Congress the Executive possessed no power to adopt or enforce adequate remedies for the injuries we had suffered, or to do more than to be prepared to repel the threatened aggression on the part of Mexico.

Not only did the succeeding months not bring any adjustment of our difficulties with Mexico, but on May 11, 1846, President Polk in a special message advised Congress that a state of war existed with Mexico because of the aggression of Mexican forces upon American territory and the shedding of American blood in Texas. The President referred to "the long-continued and unredressed wrongs and injuries committted by the Mexican Government on citizens of the United States in their persons and property," as briefly set forth in his annual message of the preceding December.

The President further said:

In communicating to Congress a succinct statement of the injuries which we have suffered from Mexico, and which have been accumulating during a period of more than 20 years, every expression that could tend to inflame the people of Mexico or defeat or delay a pacific result was carefully avoided. An envoy of the United States repaired to Mexico with full powers to adjust every existing difference. But though present on the Mexican soil, by agreement between the two Governments, invested with full powers, and bearing evidence of the most friendly dispositions, his mission has been unavailing. The Mexican Government not only refused to receive him or listen to his propositions but after a long-continued series of menaces have at last invaded our territory and shed the blood of our fellow citizens on our own soil. * * * Thus the Government of Mexico, though solemnly pledged by official acts in October last, to receive and accredit an American envoy, violated their plighted faith and refused the offer of a peaceful adjustment of our difficulties. Not only was the offer rejected but the indignity of its rejection was enhanced by the manifest breach of faith in refusing to admit the envoy who came, because they had bound themselves to receive him, nor can it be said that the offer was fruitless from the want of opportunity of discussing it; our envoy was present on their own soil. Nor can it be ascribed to a want of sufficient powers; our envoy had full powers to adjust every question of difference. Nor was there room for complaint that our propositions for settlement were unreasonable; permission was not even given to our envoy to make any proposition whatever. Nor can it be objected that we, on our part, would not listen to any reasonable terms of their suggestion; the Mexican Government refused all negotiations and had made no proposition of any kind. * * * The grievous wrongs perpetrated by Mexico upon our citizens throughout a long period of years remain unredressed, the solemn treaties pledging her good faith for redress have been disregarded. A government either unable or unwilling to enforce the execution of such treaties fails to perform one of its plainest duties. * * * Our commerce with Mexico has been almost annihilated.

It was formerly highly beneficial to both nations, but our merchants have been deterred from prosecuting it by a system of outrage and extortion which the Mexican authorities have pursued against them, whilst their appeals through their own Government for indemnity have been made in vain. Our forbearance has gone to such an extreme as to be mistaken in its character. Had we acted with vigor in repelling the insults and redressing the injuries inflicted by Mexico at the commencement, we should doubtless have escaped all the difficulties in which we are now involved. * * * In the meantime we have tried every effort at reconciliation. The cup of forbearance had been exhausted even before the recent information from the frontier of the Del Norde. But now, after reiterated menaces, Mexico has passed the boundary of the United States, has invaded our territory and shed American blood upon American soil. She has proclaimed that hostilities have commenced and that the two nations are now at war. As war exists, and notwithstanding all our efforts to avoid it, exists by the act of Mexico herself, we are called upon by every consideration of duty and patriotism to vindicate with decision the honor, the rights, and the interests of our country. * * * The most energetic and prompt measures and the immediate appearance in arms of a large overpowering force are recommended to Congress as the most certain and efficient means of bringing the existing collision with Mexico to a speedy and successful termination. In making these recommendations I deem it proper to declare that it is my anxious desire not only to terminate hostilities speedily but to bring all matters in dispute between this Government and Mexico to an early and amicable adjustment; and in this view I shall be prepared to renew negotiations whenever Mexico shall be ready to receive propositions or to make propositions of her own.

At that time there were outstanding against Mexico liquidated claims in the sum of $2,026,139.68 and unliquidated claims in the sum of $8,491,603, making a total of outstanding claims of $10,517,742.68, together with the interest thereon. These claims had accumulated in the 20 years succeeding the recognition of the independence of Mexico by the United States. The result is well known. Santa Anna, the Mexican President, who had provoked the war, was decisively defeated at Buena Vista by the forces of Gen. Zachary Taylor on February 22 and 23, 1847.

Later General Scott captured the city of Mexico, and the war ended. A treaty of peace was signed at Guadalupe Hidalgo on February 2, 1848, and subsequently ratified by the two Governments. The independence of Texas had been achieved in 1836, and the outstanding dispute as to the Texas boundary was definitely fixed at the Rio Grande. California, independent of the American occupation, had declared its independence of Mexico, and its separation from that country was inevitable without any intervention on the part of the United States. The new boundary of Mexico followed the Rio Grande to the southern boundary of New Mexico near El Paso, thence by the line of the south boundary of New Mexico and the Gila River to its junction with the Colorado and thence westward to the Pacific Ocean. For the cession of New Mexico, barren and unoccupied as it was, and of California, which would have been independent of Mexico without the United States, the United States paid Mexico $15,000,000 in gold—a greater sum than was paid France for the cession of the imperial domain of Louisiana. No money indemnity was exacted from Mexico covering the American cost and losses in the war and as part of the settlement the United States assumed and paid in addition thereto outstanding claims of its own citizens against Mexico for illegal outrages and spoliations in the sum of more than $11,000,000.

The result was that American honor received a tardy vindication by a last resort to force that the principles of American liberty and law, of order and progress, were extended over the Territories of New Mexico and California for the assurance of the wealth of these territories and the welfare of their inhabitants, whether of Mexican or American antecedents. California was admitted into the Union in 1850 and Arizona and New Mexico were admitted into the Union in 1912. It goes without saying that the good people of Mexican antecedents within these States are infinitely better off with respect to their lives, the enjoyment of liberty, and the occupation and use of their lawful possessions than they would be under the present Mexican régime, and that the States of Arizona and New Mexico have a much more satisfactory status from every standpoint as members of the American Union than they could possibly have as members of the Mexican confederation.

Mr. President, in referring to the benefits derived by the inhabitants of those States, now a part of the Union, but which at one time constituted a part of Mexico, I have no intention of conveying the thought that the United States should annex a single foot of Mexico's territory. I have merely stated a fact which is easily demonstrable if one looks at the growth and progress of that great domain now a part of the United States, and which was ceded by Mexico under the terms of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. In the very nature of things this last domain could not have remained a part of Mexico unless the latter kept pace with the civilization, development, and liberal thought of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. That great territory was destined to be inhabited by a progressive and civilized people. California has more wealth than all Mexico. Notwithstanding Mexico's failure to discharge her duties as a civilized State and despite the wrongs which she has committed in respect to American citizens, I am opposed to any policy which contemplates the annexation of any Mexican territory. Our Government has no lust for territory. It seeks no conquest. It has no imperialistic ambitions. We will soon withdraw from the Philippine Islands, and that archipelago will be governed by the people who inhabit it and to whom it belongs. And we will not retain control over Santo Domingo or Haiti, but our military occupation will soon terminate, as it should, and the people of those States will be permitted to establish such governments as they desire.

This Republic, more than any other nation, must be the outstanding figure demanding justice for weak peoples and for all races. Because of the wealth and power of the United States, it must scrupulously regard the rights of all peoples and respect the sovereignty and integrity of the lowliest of nations. This Republic must help by sympathy and in every proper way the oppressed in all lands.

It must exhibit the most disinterested friendship in behalf of all people and regard with genuine sympathy the efforts and aspirations of peoples who are struggling for freedom and advancement, nor must we with smug complacency and with contempt and disdain look upon the culture and racial characteristics of other peoples.

I have sometimes thought we have been intolerant of racial differences and have ascribed to ourselves virtues which we may not claim. Mexico has no reason to fear this Republic. All that we desire is that Mexico shall do her duty to her own people and to other nations. We have no desire to interfere with her internal affairs or to superimpose upon her a form of government not desired by the Mexican people. We have a right to demand that she shall pursue a course of justice toward American citizens who have interests in Mexico. We ask no greater rights for American citizens in Mexico than we accord to Mexican citizens who have interests within the United States.

I have no disposition to exploit the distress of Mexico in the 30 years following the Mexican peace until the advent of Porfirio Diaz in 1877. These years were but a recurrence of the revolutions and disorders which had characterized the history of Mexico from the beginning. Dictator after dictator seized political power by violence and in turn himself came to a violent end, so that the history of Mexico from 1810 until 1877 was a history of successions of revolution, disorders, and dictatorships following each other as year succeeded year.

With the accession of Diaz to political power a new era opened for that country. There was continued peace with the United States and all the world. Commerce flourished and expanded. Americans entered the country and built thousands of miles of railroads, opened the forests and the mines, constructed great smelters, built public works, redeemed great plantations from jungle and desert, and by their efforts increased the wealth of Mexico a thousandfold and the welfare of the Mexican people to an unprecedented degree. The mines of Mexico developed by Americans had in many instances been properties that had been abandoned by Spaniards and Mexicans as incapable of profitable operation. They were in all cases private properties, the legal titles of which were obtained from the legal owners and were not dependent since upon concessions or favors from the Mexican Government.

The same is true of the forest and the oil lands upon which Americans developed the great oil production of Mexico. These were all private lands purchased by Americans from the legal owners and with the legitimate use, occupation, development, and exploitation of which the Mexican Government had no right to interfere. The rents, issues, and profits of these lands belonged to their American owners without concession or favor from the Mexican Government. The lands had for centuries been in the possession of Mexican citizens who were unable, because of lack of knowledge, lack of enterprise, and lack of capital, to exploit or develop their potential uses and productiveness. The passing of these lands into the hands of Americans and their consequent development and improvement was a great benefit to Mexico and to the Mexican people. There was nothing illegal or impolitic or detrimental about it. The whole history of Americans in Mexico has been one of benefit to that country. Americans have not impoverished Mexico. There is no Mexican who is the poorer because of the presence or property of Americans in that country.

I call attention later to the fact that thousands of Americans have small landed interests in Mexico. They have converted barren deserts into fruitful fields and thus added to the wealth of Mexico. Thousands of Mexicans have received profitable employment at the hands of Americans at wages much in excess of those formerly paid, or paid by Mexican employers, and it may be truthfully said that where Mexicans have been employed by Americans they have been treated better by their American employers than they were by their Mexican taskmasters. The wages paid in Mexico have steadily risen since the advent of Americans, and particularly since they have become interested in the development of mines, railroads, and other important enterprises. It is quite likely that lands have been acquired from the Government or from Mexican citizens at relatively small prices, but no American has acquired lands that might not have been obtained by others, including Mexicans themselves, under the same conditions and at the same values.

I have referred to the fact that thousands of Mexicans have taken up their residence in the United States, and many have become naturalized citizens. There have been no obstacles interposed to the acquisition by Mexicans of property in the United States. In the States of California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas, as well as other Western States, thousands of Mexicans own real estate and other property, and are protected in their enjoyment of the same to the same extent as are Americans. Their rights are vindicated as quickly by the courts as are the rights of American citizens. They rejoice in the blessings of peace and liberty under the flag of this Republic. American citizens desire only the same protection upon Mexican soil as is granted to Mexicans upon American soil.

It was suggested to me this morning, when I remarked that I expected during the day to speak upon conditions in Mexico, that Americans should remain at home and not make investments in other lands.

Well, Mr. President, that would seem to be the policy of our Republican friends, because the tariff bill reported by them and which is now before us seeks to cut off our trade with all nations. The Fordney-McCumber bill is calculated to bring about economic isolation and to commit the American people to the greed and avarice of domestic producers and manufacturers. While boasting of the greatness of America and its importance as a world power, they seek to cripple its influence and to drive its commerce from the seas. The schedules found in the bill range from 150 per cent to 1,000 per cent above the rates found in the Payne-Aldrich law, and Republican orators shudder with fear when the suggestion is made that there is a possibility of the products of other lands being brought to our shores for consumption by the American people.

But let me analyze for a moment this suggestion that Americans should stay at home. If that be a sound principle, it is equally applicable to foreigners and they should not come to the United States or make investments in our country, and if that view is to prevail, then each country should withdraw from all intercourse with all other lands and erect impassable barriers so that there may be no migration or immigration, no imports of commodities, and no exports of surplus products. That would lead to a condition of Nirvanna, sought by East Indians—rest, stagnation, inanimateness. But the world is vibrant with a broad and generous spirit of internationalism. We send our thoughts and our intellectual wealth to other lands and receive in return the intellectual riches produced beyond the seas. We more and more appreciate that we belong to a glorious cosmogony which is bound together by ethical and moral and spiritual ties which in their development bring us closer together industrially and economically and confirm the thought of great teachers and philosophers that humanity is governed by the same laws and united by indestructible ties.

Millions of American citizens were born in other lands, but are now a part of this Republic and have made contributions to the progress and development of our country. Hundreds of millions of foreign capital found investment in the United States, in mines and smelters and railroads and mills and factories and great enterprises which added to the wealth of the Nation and the prosperity of the people. There may be investment without robbery and exploitation. Who shall say that Holland and Belgium and other nations who invested millions in the United States robbed and oppressed the American people?

Americans have invested in Europe more than $7,000,000,000, and European nations owe our Government eleven billions. We therefore are interested in other nations. It ought not to be said that our interest is only that of creditors. Is it to be the policy that Americans may not invest in other lands? Is it morally wrong to trade with China and Japan and the nations of Europe? Is it in contravention of the principles of justice and righteousness that our overflowing wealth should not in part be used to aid in the development of other countries? Is it to be the future policy of this Republic that we will make no investments of capital beyond the limits of the United States?

I concede that there have been many instances in the history of the world where capital has sought undue advantages when invested in impoverished countries. I have no doubt hard bargains have been driven between capitalists and bankrupt Governments, and undoubtedly there are instances where foreigners have sought to interfere with the governments in which they had investments and to instigate internal strife, if not revolution. These things, of course, are to be condemned. They should not be tolerated. They are not in harmony with that true and genuine international spirit which should bind peoples and nations together in amity. There are buccaneers and profiteers within every land, and there are international buccaneers and pirates who attempt to prey upon weak and defenseless peoples. But these odious instances, which are exceptions, must not be regarded as the rule nor the basis for future relations among peoples and nations.

Americans are investing in Canada. They have invested hundreds of millions in Mexico and have holdings in many other countries. If we are to become a great factor in international trade and commerce, we must make capital investments in other countries. Germany's phenomenal growth is due in part to her large investments in other countries. Great Britain has sent her sons into every land and clime, and they have been advance agents of British goods and products.

I am not prepared to indorse a policy that forbids Americans from making investments in other countries, nor am I willing to approve a policy which prohibits foreign investments being made in the United States. Indeed, I would like to see reciprocal investments and treaties entered into which would guarantee private property of nationals from seizure in the event of war between nations. Our country has always contended for the immunity of private property from seizure or confiscation when international conflicts arose. One may be truly nationalistic and devoted to country and yet promote the intimate relations which do and must exist between races and peoples. Devotion to one's family broadens one's sympathies and increases affection and love for humanity. We can be Americans in all that the term implies, loving our country with a devotion that leads to the sacrifice of life itself, and yet feel the spirit of world union and international concord and amity.

Of course, our Government can warn Americans against going to other lands or acquiring property therein, although we might deny its power and authority so to do, and it can refuse to protect them or to vindicate their rights against wanton attacks by other nations. Such a course, however, would be universally regarded as cowardly and unworthy of a self-respecting and independent nation.

The question, may I add at this point, will soon be presented to the Government, and it will have to determine it, whether Americans will be protected in their persons and in their property against wanton and malicious assaults and the expropriating policies of nations in which such Americans have investments or may temporarily reside.

If it is to be the policy not to protect citizens of the United States when they are beyond its shores, and if they are to visit other lands or make investments therein at their peril, then announcement of that policy should be made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before the Senator proceeds along that line of thought, I wish to ask him with reference to the situation in Mexico. He spoke about the rights of our nationals, and so forth. What is the situation to-day? Can the Senator tell me whether or not there are prospects of recognizing the Government of Mexico and how far proceedings have progressed in that direction? What have we to look forward to in that connection? Without violating any confidences or any State secrets or anything of that sort, if the Senator can enlighten us on the subject, I would like for him to do so.

Mr. KING. I was diverted by the suggestion of Americans remaining at home, and I return to a discussion of the Mexican situation. I intended before concluding my remarks to refer to some of the matters involved in the questions propounded by the Senator from Florida.

Replying briefly to his questions, I think I am accurate in my statement when I say that the situation in Mexico to-day is wholly unsatisfactory, not only to the Mexican people but to all foreigners, and particularly those who have interests in Mexico. As I view the situation, conditions have improved, if at all, but little since Obregon seized the reins of power. On the surface at times there seems to be some improvement, but fundamentally conditions are bad, and in my opinion there is no promise of any immediate reforms. There is still brigandage, rapine, and murder and the confiscation of property, both that of Mexicans as well as of foreigners. As I have already said, thousands of the best people of Mexico have sought refuge in the United States and in other countries and dare not return to their homes. Brutal and ignorant soldiers and venal and corrupt politicians control many of the States as well as the Federal Government.

Communists control a number of the States and their influence is powerful in the affairs of the Mexican Government. Poverty and distress exist among the great mass of the people. Disease and pestilence have carried hundreds of thousands to an untimely death. Indeed, it seems as if there is a dark and deadly pall over the entire land. The property of Americans is still being stolen and confiscated. Nothing is being done by the Mexican Government to right the wrongs committed in the past or to make reparations for the hideous crimes and the confiscations which have taken place.

I receive many letters from American citizens inviting attention to the anarchy and brigandage existing in Mexico and to their inability to obtain any redress for the outrages to which they have been subjected. Our own Government seems to be powerless to protect Americans or to secure for them any compensation for the property of which they have been despoiled. Valuable plantations which have been developed by Americans and upon which they have expended large sums have been destroyed, houses and mills have been burned, peaceful Mexican employees have been driven from homes which were built by their American employers, and lands that have been developed have grown up to weeds and underbrush.

A friend of mine advised me by letter, which I received this morning, that he desired to return to Mexico to try and save his real estate, but dared not do so. He spent 18 years in developing this property, and he and his father expended thereon perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars.

They took wild and sterile lands and converted them into cane fields and producing farms and plantations. They built commodious houses and erected suitable structures for hundreds of employees. They built a schoolhouse and mills and other extensive improvements. They were driven from their lands a number of years ago. Their buildings were burned, their cattle and horses and all personal property were stolen or destroyed, and their fine fields and farms and plantations have reverted to their original state. He was notified by the Government that he must pay immediately $58,000 or the real estate would be confiscated. He was driven out by the Carranza government and he has been afforded no protection by the Obregon government.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I remind the Senator in that connection that because the Greeks in a certain riot attacked the dwelling of one English subject and ransacked the house, destroying the furniture, the British Government compelled the Greek Government to pay that man fourfold, sent warships into the Greek harbor, and would have gone to war if the money had not been paid.

Mr. KING. And the Senator will remember what happened to China. Various nations combined and imposed upon China indemnities and conditions which I think were unjust and too oppressive.

Recently my attention was called to the action of the Mexican Government in ordering the confiscation of 100,000 acres of land upon which Americans had lived and upon which they had placed valuable improvements. Many of the Americans had been driven out of Mexico, but some had returned, and, as I understand, were endeavoring to rebuild their homes and restore the cultivated land to its former productivity. The act of confiscation was an executive order and made no provision for compensation to the owners. The State Department, at my request, made representations to the Mexican Government, and it was finally restored to the owners; but within the past few weeks, I have been advised, another order has been issued which results in the confiscation of a portion of this tract of land.

The hearings conducted by the Senate committee in 1920 show that Americans have sustained damages to their properties in Mexico amounting to at least $500,000,000. Real estate is now being taken under the form of law, but no compensation is awarded to the owners. Industrially perhaps Mexico is in as serious a situation now as ever before, and the illegal and confiscatory decrees, both of States and the Federal Government, are obstacles to the rehabilitation of the country.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If what the Senator from Utah says is true—and I have no doubt in the world that it is—have we not now at least as strong a cause for war against Mexico as we had against Germany?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Germany wronged American citizens, but Germany did not do the damage to American property that Mexico has done, nor did she kill as many American citizens as has Mexico. So if the standard be life and property, and those be put in the scale as determining whether there is cause for war, then I am inclined to the view that we have as great cause for war against Mexico as we had against Germany.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I ask the Senator from Utah whether he remembers the "olive-branch" speech which our ambassador, Mr. Gerard, made to the Kaiser's ministers in Berlin on the night of January 28, 1917; and I will also ask him to state, if he can, what causes of war arose after that speech was made?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I esteem my friend from Georgia, and pay tribute to his historical knowledge. I have some recollection of the speech referred to; but my good friend, I am sure, will pardon me if I do not digress too far from the subject which I am attempting to discuss. Already I have been led into digressions, so that there will be no continuity in my remarks and no concise or logical presentation of matters under discussion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if I may, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. He has referred to certain destruction of property and life in Mexico and he has also referred to the Obregon government. I desire to ask whether or not that destruction has taken place through the operations of irresponsible groups of people here and there——

Mr. KING. No——

Mr. FLETCHER. Or whether all of the destruction to which he refers may be attributed to the Government of Mexico as it exists—in other words, the Obregon government—and whether or not that government is responsible for these things which have happened?

Mr. KING. In 1917, when Carranza was in power, a constitution was adopted which contained provisions authorizing the expropriation of private property. The constitution has been declared by many to be communistic, or at least to evidence a spirit of Bolshevism upon the part of those who drafted it. Under this constitution, and particularly since Obregon became President, hundreds of thousands of acres of land have been confiscated, not alone by the Federal Government but by a number of the States constituting the Mexican Republic.

As I have heretofore stated, many Mexicans have suffered through the application of this constitution, and their property has been taken from them, as the property of Americans and other aliens have been taken. These acts of spoliation can not be denominated judicial. Indeed, they are forcible seizures and confiscations of privately owned property. Obregon's government has confiscated large areas, and State governments have also seized and disposed of vast tracts of land, the title to which no one could question. Let me say to the Senator that under this constitution Americans and, for that matter, foreigners are denied the right to acquire any property; that is, land, streams, mines, and so forth, within a hundred kilometers of the northern and southern boundaries of Mexico, and within 50 kilometers of the seashore.

It is within these prohibited areas that most of the real property owned by Americans is situated. If the Senator from Florida had acquired by his toil and efforts a tract of land within 62½ miles of the northern boundary of Mexico, or within 31¼ miles of the Gulf of Mexico, or the Gulf of California, he could not, under the provisions of this constitution, transmit it to his children or dispose of it to a citizen of the United States. Indeed, if permitted to sell at all, the sale could be made to a Mexican only.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, has the Mexican Government manifested no disposition to get away from that harsh and absurd provision of the Mexican constitution?

Mr. KING. As I interpret the actions of the Obregon government, I am compelled to answer in the negative.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had understood that they would probably change that provision of the constitution.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator refers to the interpretation placed upon article 27 of the constitution, which is construed to be retroactive and which deprives persons of property which they lawfully own and the title to which can not be challenged. The Senator will recall that Carranza attempted, under the retroactive provisions of this constitution, to seize the oil lands owned by Americans and others. These lands were acquired in good faith many years ago, and under laws and a constitution which recognized private ownership in lands and a complete and indefeasible title thereto. Our Government has insisted that the constitution should not be given a retroactive interpretation. What will finally be done by the Mexican Government, no one can determine. The courts have held that the constitution was retroactive, but in the Texas case it was decided in favor of the private owner of the property. However, that decision is not final, or at least it constitutes no precedent and may not be relied upon by any owner of property or regarded as any assurance that the validity of his title may not at any moment be assailed.

I repeat, the Mexican Government is constantly seizing private property. In some instances it pretends to divide it among the peons. However, as I am advised, in most instances where they have been placed in possession they have not been satisfied and have evinced no great interest in retaining or holding the lands parceled out to them.

The Senator asked me what the prospects were of recognizing the Government of Mexico and what progress had been made in that direction. I do not think I can give any satisfactory answer to the Senator, but he will recall that Secretary Colby and Secretary Hughes have indicated to Mexico upon what conditions recognition would be accorded the Obregon régime. The suggestions contained in the notes referred to were such as any fair and honest government should promptly accede to. Indeed, many think the conditions named did not sufficiently provide for the protection of Americans or require sufficient assurance that citizens of the United States would be recompensed for the injuries sustained and for which the Mexican Government, upon principles of justice, should be held accountable.

Mr. President, when interrupted by the Senator from Florida I was speaking, by way of digression, of the policy of the Republicans to cut off our trade with other nations. I was combating the thought that Americans should not make investments abroad and that a policy of national isolation should be adopted by this Republic. That view belongs to the Dark Ages and the days of the troglodytes. Our prosperity has resulted from trade and commerce. Great Britain's supremacy for so many centuries grew out of her world commerce, and Germany, when she began to trade with all nations, became a powerful factor in the industrial and financial world.

We have built a mighty fleet that our products may be carried to all lands. Our ships will rot while tied to our wharves if we follow the reactionary policies of those who now control the Republican Party. President Harding is demanding an enormous ship subsidy and we will be asked to appropriate tens of millions of dollars annually from the Treasury to meet the expenses of our merchant marine.

Why build ships and why retain them if we have no commerce? The world is moving forward not backward. Antediluvian policies do not meet the present-day situation, and fossilized leaders in the political arena must give place to men of vision and enterprise, who properly visualize the world's problems and the responsibilities of great nations. We must send argosies to all lands and bring back the treasures of those beyond the seas. Young men of genius and courage will go into other lands. They will seek the oil fields of South America, of Asia, and of far-off lands. They will find markets for our surplus products and be messengers of the American agriculturists and business men and the great industries whose success largely depends upon foreign markets.

Recently we passed a bill permitting the formation of corporations to engage in business in far-off China. It was defended by the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], as well as other Senators, and the avowed purpose was to enable American business men to secure a fair share of China's trade. It was contended that we were not obtaining our share of the oriental trade and would be unable to unless corporations were formed in which the Chinese could participate.

We must have an outlet for our surplus products. With our inexhaustible resources, particularly those comprising the primary and fundamental products, our prosperity will be arrested unless we can secure a large share of the world's commerce. Shall we penalize Americans who are endeavoring to carry the American flag to the ports of the world? Shall we announce that neither they nor their property will receive governmental protection in foreign lands or upon the high seas? Shall we say to Americans, "You did wrong in building railroads and smelters, mills, and electric plants, and waterworks in Mexico and in turning the streams out upon the deserts and causing the latter to blossom as the rose"? Shall we say to the more than 475,000 Mexicans who are living in the United States, not to speak of the several hundred thousand who are refugees, that they have no right upon American soil and must return to Mexico? Shall we say to Americans who had real and personal property in Mexico of the value of more than $1,000,000,000, as found by the Senate committee, that they must abandon Mexico and their property? Shall we say to the widows and children whose husbands and fathers have been ruthlessly murdered in Mexico that the dead were trespassers and that no reparation can be exacted for their foul and cowardly assassination? These questions, sooner or later, this Government must determine.

Mr. President, I do not want my position misunderstood. I am not advocating or defending the exploitation of any country or the adoption of any imperialistic policy, but I am contending in favor of a broad and liberal international policy which encourages international trade and commerce, which brings the peoples of all nations into closer relations, which not only justifies but approves of legitimate and proper investments being made by the nationals of all countries outside the boundaries of their own States. An American is no less a patriotic American because he builds an electric light plant in Canada or in Mexico, nor does a Mexican lose his citizenship or his right to protection from his Government because he acquires property in the United States or in Guatemala.

I am told that a former Secretary of State declared that Americans should keep out of Mexico and should make no investments therein. If he did, I do not approve of his position. I repeat that the narrow and provincial spirit of the past, which locked persons within their own country, is not the spirit which should guide the nations to-day. Knowledge is bringing the people together; ignorance divides. Our great philosophers and teachers recognized the unity and solidarity of the human race, and the efforts of great statesmen and prophets and leaders should be directed toward world peace and fellowship.

The United States clings to the Monroe doctrine as a national policy. Without discussing the reason for this doctrine or its limits and implications, I most earnestly submit that, in any aspect of the case, it is the duty of the United States to seek the most cordial and friendly relations in dealing with the Latin American Republics. Our Nation should pursue a course that will secure their confidence, respect, and, indeed, affection in all our dealings with them; diplomatic, official, or otherwise. It should not be forgotten that by reason of propinquity, as well as other reasons, this Nation feels a special interest in the Republics to the south of it.

While this is not germane to the subject under consideration, permit me to say that I have felt that American business men have not cultivated as they might have done the peoples of Latin America, nor have they adopted the wisest course to secure a larger and more enduring trade. Inquiry will confirm the statement so often made by our ministers and consular agents that European business houses have pursued a course in their dealings with South and Central America which has resulted in giving to them much of the trade and commerce arising therein which the United States might have secured.

European business houses, in the development of their foreign trade, have sent representatives to various countries, where they resided for limited or indefinite periods. They thus came into contact with the people and constituted a binding link between them and their own countries. Germans and Britishers and representatives of European countries before the war could be found in large numbers in practically all the Latin-American Republics. They pushed the trade and commerce of their respective countries. They identified themselves to a greater or less degree with the communities to which they went and thus secured for the business enterprises which they represented much of the commerce to which we were entitled and which we could have obtained if we had sought it in a proper and effective manner.

I return to the matter which I was discussing before the last interruption, namely, the interests of Americans in Mexico. At the overthrow of the Diaz government in May, 1911, there were 75,000 Americans resident in that country, not including transients and visitors. There were 2,000 Americans engaged in the railway, 5,000 engaged in mining, 8,000 engaged in other lines of business or residing in the country for reasons of health or diversion. There were 4,000 Americans engaged in agriculture in the American colonies of Chihuahua alone, and perhaps 15,000 more in other parts of Mexico.

There have always been more Mexicans in the United States than Americans in Mexico, but the relatively few Americans in Mexico have exercised an interest in the commerce, industry, and economy of the country of much greater proportions than would be indicated by their numbers. Those who may be interested in the activities of Americans in Mexico and who desire to learn the conditions which have existed in Mexico for a number of years past should acquaint themselves with the report of the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee appointed to investigate conditions in Mexico.

Pursuant to a resolution which I had the honor of offering in the Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, this subcommittee, consisting of Senators Albert B. Fall, of New Mexico, Frank B. Brandegee, of Connecticut, and Marcus A. Smith, of Arizona, was named. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate the matter of damages and outrages suffered by citizens of the United States in the Republic of Mexico, including the number of citizens of the United States who have been killed or have suffered personal outrages in Mexico at the time Porfirio Diaz retired from the Presidency of Mexico, outrages, the quantity of damages suffered on account of the destruction, confiscation, and larceny of personal property and the confiscation and deprivation of the use of lands and the destruction of improvements thereon; the number of citizens of the United States residing in Mexico at the time Porfirio Diaz retired from the presidency of Mexico, and the number of citizens of the United States at present residing in Mexico, and the nature and amount of their present holdings and properties in said country; and in general any and all acts of the Government of Mexico and its citizens in derogation of the rights of the United States or of its citizens; and for this purpose to sit at any time or place during the sessions of Congress or during recess and with authority to subpœna such witnesses and documents as may be necessary, and to make a report of its findings in the premises to the Senate; and the said committee shall further investigate and report to the Senate what, if any, measures should be taken to prevent a recurrence of such outrages.

The subcommittee conducted a most thorough and searching examination extending over a number of months. Scores of witnesses, both Mexicans and Americans, were examined, and many documents of importance obtained and made a part of the record. The record consists of more than 3,200 pages of closely printed matter, and was submitted to the Senate, accompanied by the report of the subcommittee, in May, 1920. The facts presented to the committee conclusively establish that Mexico failed in the discharge of her international obligations and robbed and pillaged and murdered American citizens. These pages constitute a strong indictment of Mexico and the Mexican Governments.

The testimony established, and the committee so find, that between 1910 and 1920, 461 Americans were killed in Mexico, and 126 along the border but within the United States. In addition, a large number were wounded and subjected to cruel and brutal treatment. Since that time a number of Americans have been murdered in Mexico. Perhaps the number of Americans who were killed in Mexico during the past 15 years will never be accurately known.

The committee report that the value of all property in Mexico at the outbreak of the Madero revolution exceeded the amount reported by Marion Letcher, American consul at Chihuahua, and which was filed with the State Department. That statement is as follows:

Valuations.

Class.	American.	English.	French.	Mexican.	All other.
Railway stocks	$235,464,000	$81,237,800	.....	$125,440,000	$75,000
Railway bonds	408,926,000	87,680,000	$17,000,000	12,275,000	38,535,380
Bank stocks	7,850,000	5,000,000	31,000,000	31,950,000	3,250,000
Bank deposits	22,700,000	.....	.....	161,963,042	18,560,000
Mines	223,000,000	43,600,000	5,000,000	7,500,000	7,830,000
Smelters	26,500,000	.....	.....	7,200,000	3,000,000
National bonds	52,000,000	67,000,000	60,000,000	21,000,000	.....
Timberlands	8,100,000	10,300,000	.....	5,600,000	750,000
Ranches	3,150,000	2,700,000	.....	14,000,000	.....
Farms	960,000	760,000	.....	47,000,000	1,250,000
Live stock	9,000,000	.....	.....	47,450,000	3,800,000
Houses and personal	4,500,000	680,000	.....	127,020,000	2,760,000
Cotton mills	.....	450,000	19,000,000	6,000,000	4,750,000
Soap factories	1,200,000	.....	.....	2,780,000	3,600,000
Tobacco factories	.....	.....	3,238,000	4,712,000	895,000
Breweries	600,000	.....	178,000	2,822,000	1,250,000
Factories	9,600,000	2,780,000	.....	3,270,200	3,000,000
Public utilities	760,000	8,000,000	.....	5,155,000	275,000
Stores:
Wholesale	2,700,000	110,000	7,000,000	2,800,000	14,270,000
Retail	1,780,000	30,000	680,000	71,235,000	2,175,000
Oil business	15,000,000	10,000,000	.....	650,000	.....
Rubber industry	15,000,000	.....	.....	4,500,000	2,500,000
Professional	3,600,000	850,000	.....	1,560,000	1,100,000
Insurance	4,000,000	.....	.....	2,000,000	3,500,000
Theaters	20,000	.....	.....	1,575,000	500,000
Hotels	260,000	.....	.....	1,730,000	710,000
Institutions	1,200,000	125,000	350,000	74,000,000	200,000
Total	1,057,770,000	321,302,800	143,446,000	792,187,242	118,535,380

NOTE.—From the testimony taken and other evidence in the possession of the committee, the committee reports that the total amount of American investments in Mexico in 1911 were more nearly $1,500,000,000 than the total set forth in the column above, $1,057,770,000.

The committee report that from the testimony taken, and other evidence which came to them, they find that the total amount of American investments in Mexico in 1911 was approximately $1,500,000,000. However, referring to the above report, the committee state:

The total wealth of Mexico, as it appears in this table, was $2,434,241,422, of which Americans owned $1,057,770,000; English, $321,302,800; and the Mexicans, $793,187,242. The figures given in the table as to British ownership should, from the best information in my possession, be increased from $321,000,000 to at least $800,000,000. The figures for American investment in mines should be increased very largely.

The committee further state that the American investments are in tax-paying and labor-employing operations. An examination of the report will show that millions have been invested in railroads, mines, factories, oil, rubber-producing property, and so forth. Seventy-eight per cent of the mines were owned by the Americans and 72 per cent of the smelters. There were 16,000 miles of railroads (national), in which American and English capital was invested to the extent of about 88 per cent.

The committee further state that that part of Mr. Letcher's report dealing with the American investments in ranches, timberlands, farms, houses, lots, and personal property is incorrect, and say that the testimony before their committee shows that more than 3,000 American families, of an average of five members each, owned their own homes either in colonies or in separate locations and were engaged in agriculture.

They further find that the actual average loss to such families has been $30,000,000, not taking into consideration the value of the land or the houses and other improvements which have not been destroyed.

The committee also find that in addition to the thirty millions lost by the smaller agriculturists who have been driven out of Mexico, and but few of whom have been able to return, the losses to the railroads have been eighty millions through the destruction of rolling stock and injury to the actual corpus of the property.

In addition, the committee find that the nonnational railroads have suffered damage to the extent of $60,000,000, so that it would require one hundred and forty millions to place the 24,000 kilometers of railways in Mexico in the condition in which they were found in 1911.

From the evidence taken by the committee it is apparent that the amount of damages sustained by Americans, which I have said was at least $500,000,000, has greatly increased since then. It is difficult, and, indeed, impossible at this time, to determine the aggregate, because many of the owners have been unable to return to Mexico and have not been advised of the status of their property.

As I have indicated, many of the great properties of Americans in Mexico have been abandoned under the compulsion of brigands masquerading in the uniform of soldiers of the country and of the various governments, de facto and de jure, which have controlled the Republic. These properties have been overrun by military leaders and their armies, and everything which could be carried away has been appropriated by the Government or its military forces or marauding and thieving Mexicans. A categorical narration of the outrages to which Americans have been subjected would make no impression upon the political authorities of Mexico.

Unfortunately, because of the venality and corruption of many public men, their ears are closed to any appeals for relief, and their sense of morality or justice is so unresponsive that there would seem to be no hope of a favorable response to the appeals for a rectification of these wrongs. Many of the Mexican courts are corrupt and impotent, and afford no protection either to Mexicans or to aliens. Proof of assassination of Mexican officials, or of aliens, excites no indignation and brings no punishment.

Senators are familiar with the callous indifference exhibited by Huerta when it was incontrovertibly established that he caused the assassination of Madero and Suarez, the vice president. It has been repeatedly charged that Carranza was assassinated, pursuant to orders of Obregon. I recall reading some time ago in the La Tribuna, an illustrated Spanish weekly, published in New York, a charge by Emeterio de La Garza that Carranza was assassinated. His letter is almost equivalent to an indictment of Obregon himself. Carranza's daughter charged openly that Obregon was responsible for the murder of her father, and the officer in command of the troops has in effect declared that he was obeying the orders of Obregon. And yet this situation, which should scourge from place and power any person so charged, is regarded indifferently by those in control in Mexico and the groups to which they belong.

Ybanez, who visited Mexico within a recent period, describes Obregon. He is not a lovely figure, and in but a few countries in the world could such a person rule, even for a day.

Secretary Lansing, in a remarkable note dated June 20, 1916, addressed to the Secretary of Foreign Relations of the de facto Government of Mexico, submits an indictment of the then Government of Mexico which shows how little progress had been made from the days when Andrew Jackson and other American Presidents were endeavoring to protect Americans from outrages by Mexican authorities. Mr. Lansing in his note declares that the lives of citizens of the United States have been—barbarously taken, and the murderers have neither been apprehended nor brought to justice. It would be difficult to find in the annals of the history of Mexico conditions more deplorable than those which have existed there during these recent years of civil war.

He refers to American garrisons which have been attacked at night, and the killing of American soldiers, the robbing of American ranches, the wrecking of trains, and the plundering of American citizens. He refers to the attacks on Brownsville and to other places on American soil, and declares that these attacks on American territory were—participated in by the supporters of Carranza and that his soldiers took part in looting, burning, and killing.

Secretary Lansing declares that notwithstanding representations made and the promise by the Mexican Government to prevent further wanton attacks, a passenger train was wrecked and persons killed, and that—the Mexican Government was so far indifferent to the atrocities that the leaders were not only received but protected and encouraged by the Government.

Reference is made to the—barbarous slaughter of inoffensive Americans, and that the Government of Mexico made no effectual attempt to frustrate hostile designs against Americans.

Reference is also made to the recognition by the United States of the Carranza government, but that, notwithstanding this evidence of its desire for friendly relations—the Government of the United States has waited in vain for protection for American citizens and for the Mexican Government to discharge international obligations toward citizens of the United States.

The efforts of Mr. Wilson to secure protection for citizens of the United States, who were interested in Mexico, were unavailing. Helpless men and women were killed and American citizens suffered unspeakable indignities. We know the names of more than 600 Americans who have been the victims of murder and hundreds who have been subjected to personal outrages in Mexico by the Mexican authorities or Mexican nationals, besides thousands who were exiled from their homes and possessions and who have suffered poverty and distress untold. Many have gone to their graves without a shroud to cover them, having been robbed of their possessions by the Mexican Government, or as a result of its indifference to its international obligations.

Claims on behalf of individual American citizens for debts, personal outrages, and spoliation in the sum of $65,000,000 have been filed with the State Department, and besides this the damage suffered by railroad, mining, and oil corporations, by stock ranches, coffee, sugar, and rubber plantations, factories, banks, power plants, irrigation systems, and so forth, are estimated at more than $500,000,000.

The Senate committee above referred to reported that the railroads of Mexico had suffered a loss conservatively estimated at $80,000,000 through destruction of railroad stock, the burning of bridges and railroad stations, and the tearing up of sidings and track. The committee states:

Power lines have been cut; power plants destroyed; irrigation works dynamited; canals cut; factories burned; railroad and mining contractors and subcontractors' supplies, tools, stock, and equipment destroyed; banks, trust companies, investment companies, money exchanges, etc., looted of cash and put out of business; brokers, commission men, general agents, wholesale and retail merchants have lost their investments and as well their books of trade, implements of their profession, and their stocks of merchandise, etc. Those who have tended to continue business by going back to their locations when temporary peace appeared to justify their return have been held up and compelled to pay blackmail to every new bandit and tribute to every old one in their community.

An eyewitness, describing the condition in the agricultural colonies in Chihuahua, said:

The stores were broken into and looted of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of merchandise. Private homes were treated in the same manner. Live stock was appropriated until almost every available thing was carried away or destroyed. At Colonia Diaz the better part of the residences and public buildings were burned.

Senators will recall that in the closing days of Mr. Taft's administration it was suggested that the threatening condition in Mexico justified, if it did not demand, that citizens of the United States depart from Mexico. Following this suggestion, many Americans returned to the United States. They were compelled to abandon their possessions, and upon reaching American soil were wholly without means of support. Appropriations were made by Congress to grant temporary relief and to feed for a limited period many of those who had been driven from Mexico. All personal belongings of those who were compelled to leave were appropriated by Mexican military authorities, or in some instances by guerrilla bands. Houses were burned and destroyed by Mexicans and a determination manifest to not only drive Americans from Mexico but to deprive them of all their property and possessions found therein.

If time permitted I would show the connection between those who committed crimes and offenses against citizens of the United States and the Mexican Government and examine the authorities and the writers in international law in support of the proposition that the Mexican Government is responsible for such offenses and outrages and must respond in damages therefor.

Theodore Roosevelt, in a speech made at Detroit on May 19, 1916, spoke of the indignities suffered by our people in Mexico in these words:

We have tamely submitted to the murder of our men and the rape of our women. We have permitted foreigners to be plundered in Mexico and our own people to be plundered in Mexico; and murder has been added to plunder. Many of our troops have been shot. While we have been nominally at peace with Mexico, the Mexicans have killed more American citizens that the Spaniards have killed in the entire Spanish War. Moreover, when the Spanish War was through, it was through; and Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines were started on a career of peace and prosperity such as had never been known in all their history. But in Mexico, after all the bloodshed, the trouble has only begun, and we are no nearer a solution than we were three years and a quarter ago.

On the 18th of September, 1912, a Mexican general, in threatening death to a small party of Americans at San Jose, declared:

Your President Howard Taft is a vile dog, a low-down coward. Your Nation is rotten. * * * We are going to run all the Americans out of Mexico. We will kill those who do not run before us. The plan of our revolution is simply to run the American dogs out of this country, confiscate their property, and divide it among Mexicans. * * * Mexico is for the Mexicans, and the United States for the gringoes. * * * Now, we are going to kill them or run them out of the country. We have executed their men, we have ravished their women, we have insulted their men and their women in every possible way to force them to take up arms and fight us. They do not fight because they are cowards and afraid of us. Their own Government despises them and abandons them and dares not protect them and orders them to run away and to escape. In Colonia Dublan and all the other American colonies in Chihuahua we have taken all the homes of Americans, killing some of them, and we have outraged their women, seized their lands and their houses, and all of their other property, and we force them to flee from the country with nothing but the clothes they had on. But they do not wish to fight and run like dogs. We will not let them return. We will kill all who try to return to their lands. We divided their lands and their property among Mexicans and now they have nothing to return to Mexico for. We are going to do the same in Colonia Morelos, Colonia San Jose, and Colonia Oaxaca. We are going to divide all their property among the Mexicans, among those who will swear to kill every gringo that returns here.

And the soldiers shouted in response—

Muera los gringoes (murder the gringoes) and "Chinga."

We have in these words a reflex of the animus of the so-called Mexican revolution, and vile and cowardly and contemptible as these declarations are, they were spoken without shame in Mexico and were blinked and indeed condoned and connived at by those in authority in that country. It has been said that one of the purposes of the revolutionary leaders was to drive Americans from Mexico and to confiscate their property. The protection of American property in Mexico was not of the slightest concern to any of the 101 generals who were operating in that country. Plunder and brigandage was their principal passion and occupation, and the incapacity of the country to sustain progressive and unlimited brigandage is the one thing that diminished this wicked business. But the field of the brigands has only been transferred from that of the country to that of the Mexican courts and the chambers of legislation and the offices of executives, and we now have confiscation under the guise of law, as distinguished from the spoliation under the guise of the uniform of the Mexican "generals." It is vain for the Government of Mexico to attempt to evade the responsibility for the damages done by their marauding military commands, because not only did the Government wink at and directly connive at and condone, not to say encourage, such unlawful outrages and larcenies, but the Government, in the so-called constitution of Queretaro, January 31, 1917, has confirmed and attempted to legalize the anti-American program which, as many believe, has been the motive and the mainspring of the murders, arsons, larcenies, spoliations, and outrages to which Americans have been subjected in that country for the last 10 years. The Queretaro constitution was designed to make Carranza dictator of Mexico. He was given power to expel any American from Mexico by his arbitrary order, without hearing and without recourse to law.

Under the Queretaro constitution the Government of Mexico was given the right to expropriate private property without indemnification for reasons which the Government regarded as of public utility. And among these reasons was the division of large landed estates. There is hardly any land owned by Americans in Mexico that is not for sale in whole or in part at reasonable prices and which can not be obtained by honest men without the arbitrary and confiscatory intervention of the Mexican Government. The Queretaro constitution seeks to invest in the Government all metalliferous minerals, mineral deposits, petroleum, coal, and natural gas, as well as of rivers, lakes, and streams. These provisions, I concede, may legally be applied to lands within the public domain of Mexico and may well operate to interdict the alienation by the Government of such species of property within its domain. The mining and oil lands owned by Americans in Mexico, however, have not been acquired from the Government, and it is not believed that any considerable area of mining or oil lands are within the public domain of Mexico. The purpose of this provision was to confiscate the oil measures and the mines which had been discovered and developed by Americans upon their own private lands, and was a part of the anti-American program. The Queretaro constitution provides that only Mexicans may acquire ownership in lands, waters, or their appurtenances or obtain concessions to develop mines or mineral fuel. This also is a parcel of the shortsighted and spiteful anti-American program. It need not be said that there will not be any notable exploitation and development of oil or mining properties if no concessions are to be granted to Americans, especially if it were the rule that no mines or oil properties could be developed without a concession from the Government. In our own country we have been so anxious to have the metalliferous minerals extracted from the veins, lodes, and deposits that we have freely given such minerals to any person who, on the public domain, might discover, locate, and extract them. But metalliferous minerals and deposits of whatsoever nature within the lands of a private owner are an intrinsic part of his property and not subject to any restrictions as to their extraction, separation, use, and sale by the owner.

The foolish policy announced by the Mexican Government of impeding the extraction of minerals from private lands is not only confiscatory and illegal but is contrary to every dictate of sound policy. The Queretaro constitution undertakes to enact that no American shall under any conditions acquire the lands within a hundred kilometers of the American frontier and within 50 kilometers of the seacoast. This is also part of the vindictive anti-American program. The interdicted area comprises the great part of the American-owned lands in Mexico. It is a part of this scheme that Americans shall not be permitted to sell their lands to other Americans and that such lands shall not pass by inheritance or devise to their American heirs.

This is but another example of the anti-American malice which found expression in this impossible socialistic constitution. And this seems to be the only result of the Mexican revolution—the enactment of futile, nugatory, and impolitic decrees against foreigners and the inauguration of impossible and destructive socialistic schemes; and for this we have forborne and suffered upon the theory that revolution was the way of liberty and that there was no other way for a democratic readjustment of Mexican affairs and politics.

But we may have expected as much in view of the fact that Madero was a socialistic zealot, that Carranza was only a captious casuist dominated by anti-American malice and Mexican vanity, and that the other leaders of the revolution were all to a greater or lesser extent affected with the virus and fallacies of a European socialism and bolshevism.

Salvador Alvarado became governor of Yucatan during the days of Carranza. Yucatan at that time was a rich State and her people were prosperous and giving evidence of cultural development. He attempted to convert their State into a soviet government and imposed upon the people a cruel and relentless despotism, such as Lenin and Trotski imposed upon Russia four years ago. Bolshevism has invaded the States of Tobasco, San Luis Potosi, as well as other political subdivisions of Mexico, with most disastrous consequences. Alvarado, Villareal, De la Huerta, Calles, and other communists influence, if they do not control, Obregon and are spreading the poison of their pernicious economic policies throughout the entire Republic. The fallacies and pernicious policies adopted by Obregon and the rulers of Mexico have not only brought Mexico, but great States like Yucatan, Campeche, Pueblo, and Sonora, to the verge of economic ruin and poverty.

If time permitted, I would call attention to statements made by Obregon indicating his communistic views and his hatred of America and Americans. He shared with Carranza the latter's pro-German views and his antipathy toward the United States. Senators will remember that Carranza hoped to unite the Central American States and to become an ally, secret or open, of Germany. Testimony offered before the subcommittee of the Senate furnishes interesting information in regard to this conspiracy as well as the uncompromising attitude of Obregon toward the United States.

It has been said by some that Obregon has seen a new light and that he is intent upon leading Mexico back into the comity of civilized States and is resolved that Mexico shall keep her international obligations and progress with firm step and upon sound principles into a position of stability and national self-reliance. I wish that were true. However this may be, we must face the facts that the Obregon government has inherited all the liabilities and responsibilities which had been fastened upon Mexico by the imprudent, improvident, and illegal acts and neglects of his predecessors in the government of that country.

Our business with the Mexican Government is of a great deal more importance than the mere resumption of diplomatic relations. Our Government refrains from the use of force for the protection and vindication of American life and American rights on the theory that Mexico should have liberty of action and responsibility for the events which adversely affect American rights and interests.

And we expect that Mexico shall make indemnification for the damages which have been visited upon our people and their property in that country. It has been said that the United States might easily have occupied Chihuahua and all of northern Mexico down to the latitude of the mouth of the Rio Grande and thus have avoided untold suffering and unspeakable outrages which have been perpetrated almost within sight and in many cases within one or two days' marches of the frontier. And the claim has been made that the United States could thus have protected many thousands of Americans in their lives and peace and in the possession, use, and occupation of their lands, and relieved them of insufferable outrages as well as have vindicated its dignity and commanded the respect of the Mexican people.

However, as I have indicated, I did not advocate such a policy, nor do I now. But Mexico's treatment of citizens of the United States has not only resulted in the injuries and wrongs to which I have referred but it has imposed upon the United States a very heavy financial burden.

Yesterday I telephoned to the War Department and asked for information as to the cost of maintaining American troops on the Mexican border and in Mexico since 1911. I am in receipt of a communication from Robert C. Davis, Acting Adjutant General, in which he states that—

There are no exact figures available as to these costs, but it is believed that the nearest approximation to such costs can be made by assuming that that part of the expenditures under "Military Establishment, support of the Army and National Guard" for each year, which was devoted to troops on the border, was proportional to the strength of the troops on the border. These figures are as follows:

Then follows a table which I ask to insert in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Fiscal year.	Active Army,[1] June 30.	Troops on border on June 30.	Per cent of troops on border.	Expenditures for "Support of the Army and National Guard."	Per cent for troops on border.	Amount for troops on border.
1911	80,300	[4] 19,000	23.7	$100,251,142.44	23.7	$23,759,520
1912	88,000	7,000	8.0	96,677,086.82	8.0	7,734,230
1913	92,000	[5] 16,000	17.4	98,641,559.12	17.4	17,163,630
1914	98,000	[6] 25,000	25.5	105,686,730.94	25.5	26,950,120
1915	106,000	[5] 24,000	22.6	106,732,218.30	22.6	24,121,480
1916	[2] 260,000	[2] 150,000	57.7	116,222,492.49	57.7	67,066,150
1917	[3] 418,000	[2] 125,000	29.9	1,882,691,868.08	29.9	562,924,890
1918	.....	.....	.....	4,209,611,619.35	.....	.....
1919	.....	.....	.....	5,926,201,274.62	.....	.....
1920	.....	.....	.....	620,648,766.51	.....	.....
1921	227,000	15,800	7.0	501,120,687.17	7.0	35,073,450

[1] Includes Regular Army, Philippine Scouts, National Guard in Federal service, reserves on active duty, and emergency officers.
[2] Includes National Guard in Federal service.
[3] Includes National Guard in Federal service and Reserve Corps.
[4] Includes Maneuver Division.
[5] Includes Second Division at Texas City.
[6] Includes Second Division and troops at Vera Cruz, except marines.

Mr. KING. Briefly, the table shows this:

In 1911 we had 19,000 troops on the border, or we had to maintain on the Mexican border 23.7 per cent of all of our Army. The cost was $23,759,520.

In 1912 only 8 per cent of our troops were on the border, and the cost that year, under these figures, was nearly $8,000,000.

In 1913, 17.4 per cent of our troops were on the border, at a cost of more than $17,000,000.

In 1914, 25.5 per cent of all the American troops were on the border, at a cost of $26,950,120.

In 1915, 22.6 per cent of the Army was maintained on the border, at a cost of more than $24,000,000.

In 1916, 57.7 per cent of all the Army of the United States were on the Mexican border, at a cost of $67,066,150.

In 1917, 29.9 per cent of our troops were upon the border, at a cost of $562,924,890.

I have not the figures for 1918, 1919, and 1920; but during 1921, 7 per cent of our Army, or 15,800 troops, were upon the Mexican border, at a cost of $35,078,450. It is somewhat paradoxical that during that period, when we were presumed to be at peace with Mexico, we were compelled to keep 15,800 troops along the international boundary for the protection of the lives and property of Americans. In 1916 we had 150,000 troops on the border. In 1917 we had 125,000 troops on the border. Aside from the years 1918, 1919, and 1920—and I have not the costs for those years—we have expended for the maintenance of military forces along the border $762,798,470.

Mr. President, there is another interesting item here:

No amounts are given for the fiscal years 1918, 1919, and 1920, due to the fact that there are no reliable figures as to what troops were regarded as on border duty. For example, one division which was organized with a view to its use on the border was later diverted to France.

The Acting Adjutant General further states:

The total cost of the expeditionary forces engaged in the punitive expedition under General Pershing was approximately $59,000,000, including regular maintenance, cost of subsistence, and equipment of the troops involved.

The total, as shown in the table above, as the cost for maintenance of troops on the border, not including the years 1918, 1919, and 1920, amounts to $762,798,470. It is quite apparent, if we were furnished the costs for those years the aggregate amount would approximate $1,000,000,000. Thus it appears that to protect our territory from Mexican invasion and to protect American citizens and their property within the confines of the United States our Government has been compelled to maintain thousands of military forces along its southern border, at a cost of approximately $1,000,000,000, for the years 1911 to 1921, inclusive. But there was no protection for citizens of the United States in Mexico, nor was their property therein immune from seizure and confiscation.

Recurring to the Mexican constitution of 1917 and its confiscatory provisions I have been asked upon a number of occasions whether I denied the right of the Mexican people to adopt that or any other constitution which they desired. I have uniformly replied that I believed in the right of peoples to determine the form of government under which they live. It is for them to determine whether they shall have a monarchy, an oligarchy, a communistic form of government, or an enlightened and progressive republic. I concede the right of the Mexican people to frame such organic law as they desire, even though it may be reactionary or communistic, nor has the United States or any other government the right to superimpose upon the Mexican people a government which they do not approve.

The Mexican people, if they wish, may deny the rights of aliens to enter Mexico or to acquire property therein. In my opinion, however, the Mexican people have not legally adopted the 1917 constitution nor do they approve of many of its provisions. Undoubtedly the Bolshevist element of which Carranza and Obregon and De la Huerta and Calles were the representatives approved of the terms of the constitution and hoped thereunder to despoil Americans and other foreigners of their possessions in Mexico.

The intellectuals and the patriotic Mexicans have disapproved of the communistic provisions of the Queretaro constitution, and perhaps millions of the people of Mexico are either unfamiliar with its terms or are so apathetic as a result of years of revolution and oppression that they are indifferent to their situation or the political forms under which they are forced to exist.

I desire to insert into the RECORD at this point an excerpt from an "Essay on the reconstruction of Mexico," which, as I understand, was written by a number of distinguished Mexicans in collaboration, among them being Mr. Manuel Calero, who was secretary of foreign affairs and at one time ambassador to the United States; Mr. Francisco S. Caravajal, who was at one time chief justice of the Federal supreme court; and Mr. Jorge Vera Estanol, at one time secretary of public instruction. The excerpt is from chapter 4 on "The naturalization and civil status of aliens," and is as follows:

Article 27 of the Queretaro constitution embodies the principle that aliens may not own real estate, nor be granted concessions covering waters, mines, and the like, except by the grace of executive authority, after the interested party has made formal waiver of the right to invoke the protection of his government.

While it is true that certain countries do not grant aliens the right to acquire real estate, we are, nevertheless, of the opinion that Mexico should return to the liberal system that prevailed under the constitution of 1857. Having due regard for the cultural and economic situation of our native population, coupled with the facts of its sparseness, it appears advisable to encourage the establishment of foreigners in Mexico. Experience has shown them to be elements of moral progress and factors in the development of public and private wealth.

Provisions fixing the civil capacity of aliens have no place in the political constitution of the Republic. They belong in general statutes, in special laws on naturalization, and in international treaties. In the absence of express treaty stipulations, Mexico must accept, in general terms, the principle of equality of civil capacity of Mexicans and aliens, excepting limitations required by the principle of reciprocity, and such other limitations as arise out of the needs of domestic safety or of insurance against international complications.

With regard to foreign corporations, we believe that the incapacities placed on them by the Queretaro constitution, in provisions similarly incongruous in a constitution, reveal in the framers a mistaken appreciation of the present-day needs of the country. We are not opposed in principle to the establishment of the incapacities in so far as they are confined to the ownership of real property, but at the same time we believe that the legislator should mitigate the severity of his theories when the great interests of the nation so demand. The position in which Mexico now finds herself as the result of the internecine strife and the condition of the world money market caused by the European war compel the Mexican statesmen to adopt a generous policy which shall attract to the country capital to develop our resources and contribute to the moral and economic betterment of our downtrodden people. In harmony with this policy, it is necessary to return to the former system and to permit foreign companies to enjoy the same rights they enjoyed before the Queretaro constitution as the most practical method of inducing foreign capital to engage in Mexican enterprises. At a later date, when the political equilibrium has been restored, when the methods of government admit of no question as to their probity, when, in a word, we have conquered the confidence abroad which we once enjoyed, the time will have come slowly to force foreign capital to operate in Mexico within the forms of association prescribed by Mexican law; but everything which at the present moment is done in this regard will affect adversely the economic progress of Mexico.

There is no doubt but what the constitution of 1917 never received the approval of but an insignificant fraction of the Mexican people. Carranza before he was controlled by his anti-American animus and by his Bolshevik associates, and before he became military dictator, declared that he intended to restore the constitution of 1857, which, I may add, was a reasonably progressive and liberal organic act. Under it, as well as by the provisions of laws enacted by the Mexican Federal Congress, real property had been acquired, including all forms of mineral lands, by Mexicans, Americans, and citizens of various countries, and the titles held by the owners were recognized as valid and as granting indefeasible rights to the same.

Senators know that during Diaz's régime the Federal Government of Mexico and the courts recognized the fee simple title under which not only Mexicans but aliens had acquired land, agricultural and mineral.

Foreigners were invited by Diaz to make investments in Mexico and to acquire lands and engage in mining operations. They were guaranteed protection by the constitution and by the law, as well as by proclamations of the President of the Republic. Carranza, in order to secure adherence to his revolutionary movement, contended that the constitution of 1857 had been abrogated and he purposed restoring it. However, when success was achieved he renounced his intention to restore the constitution and the rights of the people and forced upon Mexico the constitution of 1917. By decree of December 12, 1914, he provided that those only could vote upon the question of its adoption who had demonstrated their adhesion to the constitutionalists' cause, meaning, of course, his revolutionary cause.

Speaking of the animus of Carranza and the purpose of his Bolshevist confederates to confiscate the property of Americans, I desire to briefly refer to the testimony of Mr. W. W. Canada, former American consul at Vera Cruz. His statements will be found in the committee's hearings. In substance Mr. Canada stated that at a banquet given to Carranza in October, 1914, Mr. Luis Cabrera, who held a cabinet position under Carranza, stated that they, speaking of the Carranza régime, "were going to drive Americans out and take their property and not allow them to buy any more." The evidence, in my opinion, is conclusive that the communistic element in Mexico prepared and forced upon Mexico the 1917 constitution. Many of its objectionable features are denounced by the patriotic and enlightened elements in Mexico, as well as by thousands of the intelligent Mexicans who had been banished from their country, and its enforcement is condemned by many honorable and patriotic Mexicans who dare to express their views.

In the issue of May 21, 1921, of the El Informador, of Guadalajara, the following statement is made editorially:

> Right at this moment, when the Government, as well as the workingmen, should dedicate all their efforts to reconstruction of what has been destroyed, to repair the damages of the past, and to better general conditions, the Government is trying to disorganize the agricultural industry of the country, dividing the farms in common amongst the villages, which will result in the destruction of cultivation and abandonment of the lands, leaving the real farmers with only an absurdly small plot of land to cultivate in order to allot the lands to those who have never been and never will be farmers. The result of this ridiculous policy is beginning to show its effects in the increased prices of cereals, cattle, etc., and the people are leaving the farms on account of the suspension of work and the paralysis of agriculture. Nobody will lend money on mortgage on these properties, and all of the disillusioned ranchers are preparing to reduce, and in some cases entirely stop, planting for the coming season.
>
> But, as though this did not signify in itself the complete ruin of the country, the tendency to deposit savings in banks of other countries, principally in the United States, is well known, and when they sell their interests or make money, this also goes to American banks. And our ablest men are taking this precaution in order to be able to leave the country where everything is against them and where they have no guaranties.

One of the leading newspapers published in the city of Mexico is the El Universal. Its editor, Mr. Palavicini, has frequently criticized the Obregon government and the Mexican Congress—> as incompetent, divided against itself, and wasting its time in personalities and petty matters, forgetful of the needs of the nation.

Referring to the radical constitution of 1917, he states:

> The right to property has disappeared in Mexico, and no landowner considers his titles valid. Land is now of no value in Mexico and there is no agricultural credit. If there is no guaranty for the possession of land, what hope is there for any citizen of fair legislation and justice? What incentive is there to work and save? If this is a communist State, then we should amend our laws to conform. The department of agriculture is Mexico's greatest deterrent to amicable foreign relations, and the department of commerce and industry is of the same type.

It is known to everyone that this statement of this distinguished Mexican editor is true; that private property is being confiscated, either under direct constitutional sanction or by taxation, and, indeed, by direct seizure. Many of the States of Mexico have under executive decree or legislative enactments entered upon the seizure and confiscation of private property. Measures have been enacted in an adroit and subtle way intended to facilitate, under the guise of law, the expropriation of private property. Estates of Mexicans are being taken from them and no compensation awarded. Worthless State bonds have been promised in some instances for valuable properties forcibly taken from their owners.

As stated, I concede the right of the Mexican people to adopt such constitution as they may desire, but they have no right to rob, under the guise of law or otherwise, citizens of the United States or nationals of other countries of property which they had lawfully acquired in Mexico. It would be as immoral and illegal to take the property of aliens by force as it would be to take it under the guise of a federal constitution or legislative enactments. Undoubtedly, Mexico has the right to provide that the title to all mineral deposits within lands belonging to the Government shall be reserved and that purchasers shall acquire no right to such deposits. But I deny the right of Mexico, by constitutional provision, legislative enactment, or executive decree, to deprive either Mexicans or aliens of property, either real or personal, which they own. I admit that the Mexican Government would have the right to condemn private property, either of Mexicans or aliens, for public use upon giving just compensation therefor.

Nations may adopt many policies with respect to the acquisition and ownership of property by aliens which are inexpedient and unwise, but upon the question of expediency such nations are to be the exclusive judges. But among civilized peoples governments have no right to confiscate the property of aliens who have acquired the same under treaty rights or under the sanction of international law. Neither the United States nor any State of the Union would have the right to seize or confiscate property owned by Mexicans within the United States, nor would the Federal Government or any State have the right to enact retroactive laws for the purpose of depriving Mexicans of their property rights in this country.

Undoubtedly a nation has the technical right to forbid aliens from entering or residing therein. I am assuming, of course, that no treaty obligation is violated. Such law might be inexpedient and unwise; and a Government has the technical right to expel, in the absence of treaty, any alien from its borders without cause or hearing. But such a course would be not only impolitic but inconsistent with the liberal and enlightened spirit which is obtaining in the world to-day.

Article 33 of the Mexican constitution of 1917 gives to the executive exclusive right to expel forthwith, and without judicial process, any foreigner whose presence he may deem inexpedient. Of course, this is a despotic power to confer upon the chief executive and can not be defended in morals. Under this same constitution only Mexicans by birth or naturalization and Mexican companies have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters, and other appurtenances, or to obtain concessions to develop mines, waters, or mineral fuels in the Republic of Mexico. It is provided, however, that the nation may grant this right to foreigners provided they agree before the department of foreign affairs to be considered Mexicans in respect to such property and not to invoke the protection of their Governments in respect to the same, under penalty of forfeiture. The same article of the constitution contains the provision which I have referred to which prohibits, within a zone of 100 kilometers from the frontiers and 50 kilometers from the seacoast, any foreigner, under any conditions whatever, from acquiring direct ownership of lands and waters. I have conceded the right of Mexico to adopt a constitution containing these oppressive and impolitic provisions, but I have denied her right to give retroactivity to the same.

Much could be said in condemnation of the provision requiring an alien to waive protection at the hands of his own government in order to avail himself of the right to acquire property. Of course, it is obvious that the provisions of the constitution constitute a cloud upon the title of properties owned by Americans. Carranza and other officials have attempted to deprive the owners of oil lands of their holdings, and have insisted that under the provisions of article 27 of the constitution the petroleum deposits belonged to the State. Americans are forbidden to sell their farms or their real estate holdings to any persons other than Mexicans, and the latter have no need to purchase from the owners, because the Federal Government or the States are rapidly confiscating the same. As a matter of fact, the federal constitution and the organic law of the States of the Mexican union are deliberately framed to effectuate the confiscation of foreign investments by taxation or direct seizure or under constitutional sanction or the forms of law.

If time permitted, I should call attention in detail to the provisions of the constitution of 1917, as well as to executive decrees and to State enactments and decrees which fully sustain the statements which I have made. So oppressive has become the conduct of the political authorities of Mexico that not only are aliens being robbed and plundered but, as I have stated, Mexicans as well.

The following protest to the National Congress and to the President of Mexico was sent on April 7, 1921, by a number of Mexican landowners who resided in Jalisco:

AN APPEAL TO PUBLIC OPINION.

It is not our desire to write at length with regard to the prejudicial effect which this nefarious national agrarian commission is causing to the Nation and to the landowners. Such commissions are nothing more than partisan centers where laws, reason, and justice are mocked.

This atrocious work will be judged by public opinion as soon as the deep and serious damage which has been done is known, and history will in time establish the responsibility. Suffice it to say that in every case it has been a work of destruction and never of construction.

It is useless to contend that the agrarian law at least be correctly applied. Not even this can be obtained, and obstinate authorities, blinded by prejudice, have threatened the social order by attacking it at its foundation and seemingly with a desire to destroy it for their own personal benefit and pleasure.

The local agrarian commission are inventing fantastic plans of taxation, confiscating large and small properties, and sugar, mescal, and orange plantations, which have cost their legitimate owners years of toil and the investment of considerable capital. The Federal tribunals, deaf to all appeals, follow an invariable line of conduct in every case against the landowners. Should the landowner invoke in his behalf the same doctrines which have been applied to the benefit of others, he finds out that these same doctrines are never interpreted in his favor. The authorities only favor those they wish to favor, and to accomplish this end they do not hesitate to override justice and reason.

AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION OF JALISCO,
By A. G. ARCE, Director.

Obregon is making frantic efforts to obtain recognition at the hands of this Government. Various persons in the employ of the Mexican Government have been extensively canvassing the United States to develop sentiment favorable to a de jure recognition of the Obregon régime. A former State Senator from Arizona has visited the legislatures of a number of our States and secured the adoption of resolutions asking for recognition. Notwithstanding the character of Obregon, his hatred of our Government and the American people, and his communistic views, it might perhaps be wise to accord recognition to the present Mexican Government, provided certain conditions were complied with.

Secretary Hughes, on the 7th of June last, declared that—the fundamental question confronting the United States is the safeguarding of property rights against confiscation.

He stated that—

Mexico was free to adopt any policy which she pleases with respect to her public lands—

But was—not free to destroy, without compensation, valid titles obtained by American citizens under Mexican laws.

The Secretary further declared:

A confiscatory policy strikes not only at the interests of particular individuals but at the foundations of international intercourse, for it is only on the basis of the security of property validly possessed under the laws existing at the time of its acquisition that commercial transactions between the peoples of two countries and the conduct of activities in helpful cooperation are possible.

This question should not be confused with any matter of personalities or of the recognition of any particular administration. Whenever Mexico is ready to give assurances that she will perform her fundamental obligation in the protection both of persons and of rights of property validly acquired, there will be no obstacles to the most advantageous relations between the two peoples.

This question is vital because of the provisions inserted in the Mexican constitution promulgated in 1917. If these provisions are to be put into effect retroactively the properties of American citizens will be confiscated on a great scale. This would constitute an international wrong of the gravest character and this Government could not submit to its accomplishment. If it be said that this wrong is not intended, and that the constitution of Mexico of 1917 will not be construed to permit, or enforced so as to effect, confiscation, then it is important that this should be made clear by guaranties in proper form. The provisions of the constitution and the executive decrees which have been formulated with confiscatory purposes make it obviously necessary that the purposes of Mexico should be definitely set forth.

Accordingly this Government has proposed a treaty of amity and commerce with Mexico, in which Mexico will agree to safeguard the rights of property which attached before the constitution of 1917 was promulgated. The question, it will be observed, is not one of a particular administration but of the agreement of the nation in proper form, which has become necessary as an international matter because of the provisions of its domestic legislation. If Mexico does not contemplate a confiscatory policy, the Government of the United States can conceive of no possible objection to the treaty.

The proposed treaty also contains the conventional stipulations as to commerce and reciprocal rights in both countries. It also provides for the conclusion of a convention for the settlement of claims for losses of life and property, which, of course, means the prompt establishment of a suitable claims commission in which both countries would be represented, in order to effect a just settlement. There is also a provision for a just settlement of boundary matters.

The question of recognition is a subordinate one; but there will be no difficulty as to this, for if General Obregon is ready to negotiate a proper treaty, it is drawn so as to be negotiated with him, and the making of the treaty in proper form will accomplish the recognition of the Government that makes it. In short, when it appears that there is a government in Mexico willing to bind itself to the discharge of primary international obligations, concurrently with that act its recognition will take place. This Government desires immediate and cordial relations of mutual helpfulness, and simply wishes that the basis of international intercourse should be properly maintained.

Accordingly, on the 27th of May last, Mr. Summerlin, American chargé d'affaires at Mexico City, presented to General Obregon a proposed treaty covering the matters to which reference has been made. The matter is now in the course of negotiations, and it is to be hoped that when the nature of the precise question is fully appreciated the obstacles which have stood in the way of a satisfactory settlement will disappear.

It will be observed that no conditions are suggested by the able Secretary of State which should not be promptly complied with by Obregon if he were animated by a proper spirit and with a desire to observe the principles that should govern nations desiring justice.

Carranza sought recognition, and finally obtained it. We had the right to believe that the generous treatment accorded Mexico by Mr. Wilson would inspire Carranza and those in authority to adopt a policy of justice and fair treatment to American citizens. His course, however, following recognition was reprehensible in the highest degree. He persisted in his bigoted and intolerant and dishonest course and executed his oppressive and confiscatory policies. He was unworthy his high position, and did not deserve either de facto or de jure recognition at the hands of the United States. He treated with scorn and contumely the pacific efforts of our Government to establish cordial relations and to promote international fellowship and good will. There is no assurance that Obregon, if recognition were accorded to his Government, would pursue a different course or make reparations for the wrongs done to citizens of the United States.

There is no promise that American rights will be respected or that protection will be accorded to American citizens. At the present time neither the lives nor the property of citizens of the United States are safe in Mexico, nor is the Obregon government willing, if we are to judge by its refusal to enter into the treaty suggested by Secretary Hughes, to give any guaranties that Mexico will shape its course in harmony with those policies which govern enlightened and civilized nations.

An important question suggests itself in considering the question of recognition of the Obregon government. Senators will remember that several months ago a trade agreement was entered into between Great Britain and the soviet régime at Moscow. Some timbers were sold by the Russian owners before the soviet government was formed, but later a decree of confiscation was entered by the soviet régime and the timber was exported and sold by it in Great Britain. Thereupon the owner instituted proper proceedings to recover the property, and the question arose in the English courts as to whether the trade agreement constituted recognition, and if so, whether the owner could maintain his action. The lower court found for the plaintiff, holding that the soviet régime had not been recognized, and that the owner of the property could therefore recover. Upon appeal the judgment of the lower court was reversed. The appellate court held that the trade agreement was tantamount to a recognition of the soviet régime, and its acts were therefore validated, and its seizure of the property and subsequent sale could not be questioned, and that therefore the vendee obtained a valid title.

The same principle was announced in the case of Oetjen v. Central Leather Co. (246 U. S. 297), wherein it was held that the recognition by the United States of the Carranza government validated the confiscatory acts of Villa when acting as a military commander under the orders of Carranza. Villa had seized the property in question in the State of Coahuila, and upon its being brought into the United States the Mexican owner brought an action in replevin upon the ground that the property had been unlawfully seized and confiscated. The Supreme Court of the United States, in view of the recognition of the Carranza government, felt compelled to deny the plaintiff relief, holding that—

Recognition by the political department of the United States of a government which originates in revolution or revolt as being the de jure government of the country in which it is established is retroactive in effect, and validates all the actions and conduct of the government so recognized from the commencement of its existence.

Before the United States recognizes the Obregon régime it should canvass the results of such recognition and be entirely satisfied as to the effect of such act upon the confiscatory decrees and proceedings of the Mexican Government. Can this Government afford to ratify these illegal seizures and the countless acts of robbery and spoliation committed by State and National authorities in Mexico? I can not comprehend how we could justify before the bar of public opinion a course which would involve the recognition of Obregon without effective safeguards and conditions which would protect American citizens. In my opinion it would be highly improper for President Harding to give recognition to Obregon until the controversies between the two Governments are adjusted and until American citizens are fully protected and their rights guaranteed and assured.

We can not afford to be put in the attitude of legalizing the robberies and the acts of pillage committed by the Mexican Government. American citizens, if the Obregon régime were recognized without adequate steps being taken for the protection of their persons and property rights, could with much justice demand that the United States make good to them the losses which they had sustained by reason of the trespasses and robberies committed by the Mexican Government or the political subdivisions of the Mexican Republic.

Under our form of government the States have no right to enter into diplomatic relations with Mexico or seek reparation for the wrongs committed against Americans residing within their borders. It is the duty of the National Government to throw around citizens of the United States its shield of protection and power. American citizenship is not a mere shadow, a tenuous, intangible thing. Citizens owe allegiance to the Government, but the Government owes a duty to protect its citizens. A Roman citizen did not appeal in vain to the Cæsars. Shall the appeals of American citizens to their President and the constituted authorities of their National Government fall upon deaf ears?

I submit that before the Obregon régime or any other government in Mexico is recognized, not only assurances but unequivocal and satisfactory guaranties be given that such government is willing to fulfill its international obligations and is competent to maintain law and order within its own borders.

Writers upon international law point out with great clearness the conditions which may be exacted precedent to either a de facto or de jure recognition of a government.

Mr. Seward, writing to Mr. Foster in 1877, stated that in view of the difficulties on the Rio Grande he should—> wait before recognizing General Diaz as President of Mexico until it shall be assured that his election is approved by the Mexican people and that his administration is possessed of stability to endure and of disposition to comply with the rules of international comity and the obligations of treaties.

As I stated a few moments ago, recognition of Carranza was accorded, and subsequent events demonstrated that perhaps such a course was unwise. Carranza by proclamation declared that the—> constitutionalist government shall afford to foreigners residing in Mexico all the guaranties to which they are entitled by our laws and shall amply protect their lives, their freedom, and the enjoyment of their rights of property.

And his representative, Arredondo, in his note to Secretary Lansing, gave assurances that the Carranza government would afford guaranties to foreigners and would observe its international obligations and protect the lives and property, in accordance with the practice established by civilized nations, of all aliens.

Following these protestations the Carranza government was recognized, but in no respect did it observe its solemn assurances. It failed to pay its international debts or to protect its own citizens or the lives and property of foreigners.

Mr. President, the time is come when there should be a reckoning with Mexico and when Mexico and the Mexican people must be made to understand that restitution and reparation must be made for the murder of Americans and the citizens of other lands, for the ransoms that have been exacted and the kidnaping, torture, and imprisonment of innocent men, for the outrages committed upon women and children, for the arsons and larceny and destruction of property, and for the vicious anti-American policy pursued by the Government.

The fact that the demand that Mexico pay her debts and make restitution and reparation for her offenses and the offenses of her people may be offensive to the Mexican Government and the vanity of those Mexicans who assume to speak for the country, does not invalidate the claim for the rendition of that which is due or afford any reason why our demands may be denied or ignored. Offenses are not to be paid in offenses but by reparation and restitution.

And this is the business that we have presently to settle with Mexico, and it must have precedence over any question of the resumption of diplomatic relations with the Government of that country. We do not question the legality of the present Mexican Government. Prudence, indeed, might dictate that we wait a seemly time until the stability of the Government should be firmly demonstrated, but that is not the reason that we are waiting. We are waiting for an adjustment of American grievances against that country, the confirmation of American rights in that country, a proper indemnification for the damages our people have suffered, and a settlement of all outstanding controversies so that we may look forward to a day of better relations of amity and of peace.

The Republic of Mexico has recently celebrated the hundredth anniversary of its political independence. As I have shown, the United States recognized the new Republic January 1, 1825, and ever since has recognized the existence of Mexico as an independent nation. The real situation is therefore not the failure on the part of the United States to recognize the present Government of Mexico but rather the withholding by the United States of diplomatic relations with the present Obregon government. We all know perfectly well that Obregon is President of Mexico and there will never by any disposition on the part of the United States to question the legality of the Obregon government or interfere with its jurisdiction or powers in Mexico. That is not the question.

The question is one of the resumption of diplomatic relations and for reasons which are to the Government of the United States sufficient, we have not seen fit, or have not regarded it as advantageous or politic, to enter into regular diplomatic relations with the present Government of Mexico. There have been, however, informal exchanges and correspondence which are perhaps tantamount to a de facto recognition of the existence of the present Obregon government and of its authority in Mexico. The impediment to the resumption of diplomatic relations consists of outstanding differences and unsatisfactory conditions which this Government desires to have rectified both as to indemnification for past wrongs and assurances as to the future which this Government regards as imperative to any just resumption of relations and of the continuance of amity and peace with Mexico. There is no desire to impose upon Mexico humiliating conditions or to make unreasonable exactions, but only to apply to the outstanding controversies the principles of international obligation and morality which Mexico herself professes to recognize and respect.

We had ample evidence of the tenacity of Mexico as to the technical forms and niceties of diplomatic correspondence, all of which has been accompanied by a profound disdain of the substantial duties and moral precepts of international law and custom. We have grown tired of deference to diplomatic forms and discussion, and the necessities of the case now require that we get behind these formalities at the substance of the facts and the essence of Mexico's national duty and responsibility under the facts of the existing situation.

The ratification of a treaty of amity with Mexico and including the settlement of all outstanding controversies will constitute a resumption of diplomatic relations and a formal recognition of the Obregon government. This treaty, which is really necessary to the amity and good relations of the United States and Mexico, should as primary and irreducible conditions—

First. Stipulate that the native or natural-born citizens of the respective parties shall enjoy within the territories of the other party the right to acquire and hold without reservation or limitation estates in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, including the natural resources and appurtenances that go with the free tenure of land, with full rights of occupation, use, and enjoyment, together with the rent issues and profits thereof, and including the inalienable rights of inheritance, testamentary devolution, and contractual disposition.

Second. That the title and possession of lands in Mexico which at the resignation of the Diaz government on May 10, 1911, was vested in citizens of the United States, shall be recognized and confirmed notwithstanding any facts in court or in pais which have intervened in the meantime; that in all cases American citizens shall be restored to the possession, use, and occupation of such lands and protected in such rights.

Third. That in cases where lands, tenements, or hereditaments were actually occupied and subjected to profitable use by citizens of the United States at the fall of the Diaz government, or subsequent thereto, and such citizens of the United States had been constrained to leave Mexico or their tenants had abandoned or been expelled from such lands, that the annual use, value, or proper rent for such lands shall be ascertained and that Mexico shall indemnify such citizens of the United States in an amount equal to the use value of the same during the period of dispossession and disuse.

Fourth. That in all cases where buildings, appurtenances, fixtures, or other improvements have been destroyed or damaged the cost of the restoration or reparation for such damages at the present time shall be ascertained and that Mexico shall indemnify such citizens on account of such restorations and reparation.

Fifth. That in all cases where chattels or personal property have been appropriated, carried away, destroyed, or damaged the value of such property or the damages thereto shall be ascertained and that Mexico shall indemnify the owners of the same accordingly.

Sixth. That in all cases where American citizens have suffered death or have been subjected to detention, imprisonment, insult, abuse, batteries, wounds, suffering, or other outrages of a personal nature that Mexico shall make proper and adequate indemnification as well as apology and regret for such wrongs.

Seventh. That citizens of the United States shall be confirmed in all rights, easements, franchises, concessions, liberties, privileges, or other rights of an incorporeal nature with which they were invested at the fall of the Diaz government.

Eighth. That the Government of Mexico shall make expression of its intention of taking adequate measures in the future to prevent a recurrence of the wrongs for which indemnification is provided to be made in the treaty.

Mr. President, I would not have undertaken to discuss this vexed and vexatious question except for the fact that the efforts to secure recognition for Obregon are so persistent, and so many statements are made which I regard as inaccurate, attributing to the Obregon régime a willingness to do justice to our Government and to those who have been wronged at the hands of the Mexican Government. I repeat what I stated at the outset, that Mexico presents a problem—one which is serious and difficult of solution. To speak dogmatically of what should be done may be highly imprudent and unwise. That conditions, as they exist, should continue indefinitely can not be tolerated. If Mexico refuses to make reparation to citizens of the United States and persists in her policy of spoliation and robbery, and denies to Americans protection of their persons, then the United States, by every principle of national honor, must take the necessary steps to protect the lives of its citizens as well as their rights. This is necessary in vindication of its rights and honor as a nation. Undoubtedly there is a sentiment in Mexico that the United States will resent no affront, nor will it interpose to protect its citizens. Mexico must be taught that it may go too far; indeed, that the time has now arrived when it must adopt a course toward the United States and its citizens that is demanded of civilized nations and those States which claim a standing among the enlightened nations of the world.

I am not here to denounce the present administration or to embarrass it in any way in dealing with a question which presents perplexing and difficult angles.

But we have a practical question to deal with, and the time has come to deal with it in a practical way. In my opinion, there should be no recognition of Obregon or any government in Mexico until assurances and guaranties such as I have indicated have been given. I am sure those upon this side of the Chamber will support the administration in any policy that will conform to the standards of international justice and comity and vindicate the rights of American citizens and the honor of this Republic.

ADDRESS OF SENATOR MOSES IN NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on last evening in the city of New York the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] made a very important address. I notice from the New York Times of this morning that in introducing the Senator from New Hampshire, George Henry Payne referred to him "as a man whom the country would like to see in the White House." Because of that introduction, and because of the remarks made on that occasion, I think the article appearing in the New York Times of this morning should be read into the RECORD, and I ask that it may be read at the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

MOSES DENOUNCES CONGRESS COWARDS—APPEALS TO WOMEN TO "THROW A SCARE" INTO THEM TO AID TAX REFORM—ATTACKS THE FARM BLOC—CALLS THE BONUS "AN OUTRAGE" AND SAYS "NOISY MINORITIES" CONTROL OUR DESTINY—WANTS STATES LET ALONE—ONCE "THE LAND OF THE FREE," AMERICA NOW "THE REGION OF THE REGULATED."

Nothing short of a thorough revision of our system of taxation will enable this country to return to "normalcy" and American business to prosper anew, United States Senator GEORGE H. MOSES, of New Hampshire, told some 300 women who assembled yesterday afternoon at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, 1100 Fifth Avenue. They had come at the invitation of the committee of American business men. Senator MOSES, a follower of the late Colonel Roosevelt, urged his feminine audience to throw a big scare into Congress in the interest of necessary reform.

Senator MOSES denounced Congress as cowardly. He insisted that far too large a proportion kept their eyes constantly on the ballot box. As a result, Senator MOSES said, this country was now ruled by well-organized, aggressive, and noisy minorities, of which he singled out as the noisiest and consequently most powerful the so-called "farm bloc."

"That bloc, composed of 19 lawyers, 1 editor, 1 well driver, and 1 manufacturer of sewer pipes," Senator MOSES said, "is now, through sheer terrorization of cowardly Members of Congress, able to control the economic destiny of the United States."

CALLS BONUS "AN OUTRAGE."

In pointing his object lesson, Senator MOSES made passing reference to the Republican Senate caucus held in Washington yesterday.

"Every Senator who comes up for reelection this year and attended that caucus voted in favor of the bonus bill, which will saddle more than $4,000,000,000 in taxes on the already overburdened taxpayer," he said. "I was one of the nine Republican Senators voting against that outrage. All these things take place because of the cowardice of men in public life in America at this moment." He then appealed to his women hearers to "throw a scare into as many cowardly Congressmen as have been terrorized by any other group. And I implore you to go out and try it for the good of your country."

The women applauded this appeal with unwonted vigor. Then one woman arose and asked a little timidly:

"Will a frightened Congressman be better than a Congressman who is not frightened?"

"On the contrary," Senator MOSES said in flashing back his answer. "I prefer the other kind. But if we must have the kind we now have in Congress, I would rather have them scared into doing the right than into doing the wrong thing."

Senator MOSES admitted that while he personally had benefited by direct primaries and the election of United States Senators by popular vote, he had reached the conclusion that they did not make for good government.

"It has been said," he remarked, "that a country deserves the sort of government it gets. But when I look on the performances of some of my colleagues and listen to their ravings, I can not help but wonder why my country should have had visited upon it such an awful affliction.

"As a result of the sort of government we have, our statute books are cluttered up with legislation wholly socialistic, and, in my opinion, entirely mischievous in deference to the desires of minorities aggressive enough to make themselves felt and become the masters of legislative bodies.

THE LAND OF THE REGULATED.

"There was a time when this was the land of the free; now it is the region of the regulated," said Senator MOSES. "With Congress meddling in the business of the States more and more, the House of Representatives has become as parochial as the House of Commons ever was. Nothing is left to the initiative or the determination of the individual any longer.

"A man goes to work. The fare he pays on the trolley car is fixed by a commission. When he gets to the factory his hours are fixed by the statute and his wages and the amount of work he is permitted to produce by the even more dictatorial rules of a labor union. If he goes to the movies in the evening, the picture he sees has been censored by a commission whose good taste generally is in doubt. And the chances are he sleeps in a bed made up according to directions in a pamphlet issued by some department of the Federal Government."

Senator MOSES criticized "the so-called dollar-for-dollar system under which the Federal Government contributes one dollar for some State purpose, such as road building, for every dollar raised by the State itself."

"For the building of roads," he continued, "the Federal Government had already spent under this plan some $350,000,000, and $1,250,000,000 more will be spent. This will work special hardships to the taxpayers of New York."

In introducing Senator MOSES, Secretary George Henry Payne had referred to him as a man whom the country would like to see in the White House.

"In regard to that flattering allusion to the future, I must enter a disclaimer," said Senator MOSES in beginning his speech. "I have no hopes and no ambitions. There are too many candidates now. In the Senate alone there are not less than 95 of them. The nomination of Mr. Harding while a Member of the United States Senate has played irreparable havoc with the morale of that body."

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that that article be dedicated to the next Republican campaign textbook.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 309) appropriating $1,000,000 for the preservation, protection, and repair of levees under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission, and it was subsequently signed by the Vice President.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the tariff bill.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment of the Committee on Finance——

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from North Dakota wish to proceed with the consideration of the bill at this time? If so, I shall have to make a speech upon another subject.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota, I am sure, realizes the situation confronting us. The pending tariff bill was reported out of the Committee on Finance only a few days ago, and the minority members of that committee have since been working day and night in order to prepare themselves for the consideration of the bill. The minority members of the committee were not permitted to be in conference with the majority members. There is no desire on the part of any Senator on this side of the aisle unnecessarily to delay the consideration of the bill at all. On the contrary, it is the desire on this side of the Chamber to cooperate with Senators on the other side of the aisle and to get the bill out of the way as soon as we can, of course, after full and free discussion. The ranking member of the minority of the committee, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], is now in his office working with experts and other minority members of the Committee on Finance, as the Senator from North Dakota knows, in order to prepare for the discussion of the bill. Under those circumstances I was wondering if the Senator from North Dakota would not consent to the Senate adjourning over until Monday, in order to give minority Senators further time to prepare for the consideration of the bill? I am sure time will be saved in the consideration of the tariff bill if my suggestion is followed, and that the consideration of the measure will thereby be expedited.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I certainly join with the Senator from Mississippi in the desire to facilitate the passage of this bill. I do not wish to do anything or to say anything that would delay discussion. My expectation was that we should proceed with the discussion of the bill to-day and perhaps dispose of some of the committee amendments. If I felt that an adjournment over until Monday would facilitate the passage of the bill, I should gladly agree to that. However, while the able speech made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was most interesting—and I think he was nearly four and a half hours in delivering that enlightening address—somehow I failed to connect it with the pending tariff bill.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from North Dakota will permit me to interrupt him, I desire to say that if the Senator had been here he would have discovered that about an hour of my address was devoted to a discussion of the effects of the high tariff bill which has been reported to the Senate. I commented upon the purpose of the Republicans to become troglodytes and to cut off all trade with other nations. I called attention to the manifest effects of the bill. I am sorry the Senator was not present, because had he been here he would have found that I was discussing the tariff bill a part of the time.

Mr. McCUMBER. After listening for about two and a half hours to the Senator, I concluded that he was not coming back to the tariff bill at all, and consequently I must have missed the hour's discussion upon the tariff bill to which he refers; but I shall read with pleasure what the Senator said, if I find it in the RECORD to-morrow.

Mr. KING. The Senator will later find it in the RECORD; but, perhaps, not to-morrow morning.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, if it is desired to consider other business to-morrow—for instance, the calendar—we might take it up for consideration; but will not the Senator from North Dakota withhold the discussion of the tariff bill until Monday? I am informed by the Senators on the subcommittee that in all probability they will be ready on Monday to begin the discussion of the tariff bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator from Mississippi think that, should we adjourn over, we would have a continuous discussion of the tariff bill then until disposed of, or would we spend a great deal of time in the discussion of many questions outside of the tariff?

Mr. HARRISON. There are many questions outside of the tariff which probably would be discussed, but there will be a disposition on this side to try to facilitate the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota pardon me for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If either one of the two theories which seem to rest within the Senator's mind be true it would still follow that we should make time by doing what my colleague [Mr. HARRISON] suggests. If, as the Senator seems to think, some of the Senators on this side are trying to consume time, he must know that they are trying to do so in order that Democratic Senators on the Finance Committee, who are studying and trying to analyze the bill, may be prepared to proceed with the discussion, so that it may be carried on in a continuous manner. If, upon the other hand, it is merely one of those chronic habits of the Senate which has been illustrated of some Senator talking about something which is not before the Senate at the time, that can not be helped either; but if the object is to give minority Senators the time to study and analyze the bill—and frankly I am partially of that opinion myself—it would not be at all helped by other Senators speaking upon something else to-morrow. I am satisfied that by Monday morning it will be possible for the Senators on this side of the Chamber to proceed with the discussion of the bill.

It will be remembered that I requested the senior Democratic Senator upon the committee not to place me upon the subcommittee which is carrying forward this work, because I did not feel well enough to assume the immense amount of intense and quick labor that I saw would be necessary in order to be ready within a reasonable time; and so my place was taken by another Senator, who is now cooperating with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

In all candor, I really think that it would be better all around and less time would be wasted and less time misconsumed, and discussion would begin under better auspices and would proceed upon the bill more continuously, if my colleague's request be acceded to, than if we get into a sort of a bad disposition with one another at the very beginning.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not ask for an adjournment over to-morrow. I promised the other day, in open session, that we would devote some time to the calendar. If the Senator wants to let the matter of the tariff go over until Monday we could take up the calendar under Rule VIII to-morrow by unanimous consent, and probably finish it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why could we not take up the calendar for an hour now, and then adjourn immediately after that?

Mr. CURTIS. It is half-past 4 now.

Mr. SMOOT. We shall have to meet to-morrow anyway.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am very much impressed with the expressions of good faith and good purpose to hurry the discussion and final passage of this bill through the Senate. We have been engaged on it in committee for a long time, I will admit; but it required very long and careful consideration. Conditions were so abnormal that we had nothing of the past to guide us to any great extent, and every schedule and every item was fought most bitterly by those having opposing views upon it.

When the Senator from North Carolina made a suggestion for further time the other day, when we reported the bill, his first suggestion was for 10 days. Afterwards some of his colleagues thought that was too short a time, but we accepted that finally as the basis for the time which would be necessary. The Senate committee has had at its disposal two of probably the most thoroughly equipped experts in the country upon tariff matters, and I had hoped very much that we could go on with the bill to-day, but I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas to dispose of other matters to-morrow and let us all get ready to go right on with the tariff bill on Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that I think myself we ought to run through the calendar and clear the calendar of the bills to which there is no objection. I think the calendar ought to be disposed of, as far as possible, before we begin the daily discussion of the tariff bill. Why not have it understood, then, that we will recess to-day until to-morrow, and take up the calendar at that time, and go through with it, and consider bills to which there is no objection?

Mr. LODGE. Do not limit it to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, we will not get very far with the consideration of unobjected bills, because if one bill to which there is objection is taken up that will settle it for the day. I do not know whether it is best to limit it or not, but I really think that there are so many bills here to which there is no objection that they ought to be gotten off the calendar.

Mr. KING. May I say that I understand that there will be an effort to take up certain pension bills to-morrow. If that is the desire, they will have to be discussed, and I shall have to be here and discuss them. I prefer that we should take up just the unobjected matters. I want to say further that I expect to discuss the chemical schedule. That is the first schedule, and I am ready to go on this afternoon, but I could not go very far; and if I shall have to be here to-morrow to discuss the pension bills it will not give me the opportunity which I should like to examine the chemical schedule. The Senators of the majority have had the advantage of weeks of study, and have had the assistance of experts. Some of us have had neither.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest that we agree by unanimous consent to take up the calendar to-morrow, beginning at the first of it and go through the calendar, and dispose of unobjected bills. Then, if there is any time left, I suggest that it be devoted to the consideration of other bills which may be taken up on motion.

Mr. KING. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from North Dakota that while his statement made a few moments ago was technically correct—I did consent to the 10 days—before that I had asked for a longer time, and it became evident that I could not get it when I said I would try to content myself with 10 days and do the best I could to get ready.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. And I have been doing that. I do not know what may have been said by the junior Senator from Utah before I came into the Chamber, but I judge from what the Senator from North Dakota has stated that something was said about the facilitation of the consideration of this bill. I want to say again—I said it, I think, yesterday—that I think, so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned—I am sure so far as the minority of the committee is concerned—we have not the slightest disposition to resort to any dilatory tactics whatever in connection with the consideration of this bill. We are anxious that it shall be considered and disposed of as soon and as speedily as possible consistent with a proper discussion of the important questions which it involves. I assure the Senator from North Dakota that I shall cooperate with him fully within those limitations.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator. I think we shall have no trouble in speeding up as rapidly as possible.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, April 22, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 21 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

A. R. Noble, of Anniston, Ala., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 19, with headquarters at Mobile, Ala., in place of Joseph H. Lyons.

APPOINTMENT IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Wilbur Oscar Manchester, of New York, to be aid, with the relative rank of ensign in the Navy, in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, vice A. G. Katz, promoted.

APPOINTMENT IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

GENERAL OFFICER.

Col. Paul Bernard Malone, Infantry, to be brigadier general from April 27, 1922, vice Brig. Gen. Charles Gould Treat, who is to be retired from active service April 26, 1922.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

To be captains.

First Lieut. Ernest Andrew Thompson, Signal Corps, from February 22, 1922.

First Lieut. William Andrew Gray, Air Service, from February 22, 1922.

First Lieut. Franz Joseph Jonitz, Quartermaster Corps, from February 24, 1922.

First Lieut. William Valery Andrews, Air Service, from February 24, 1922.

First Lieut. George Stetekluh, Quartermaster Corps, from February 25, 1922.

First Lieut. Frank Marion Barrell, Quartermaster Corps, from February 28, 1922.

First Lieut. Stanton Higgins, Cavalry, from February 28, 1922.

First Lieut. Holden Spear, Quartermaster Corps, from February 28, 1922.

First Lieut. Frank Merrill Bartlett, Air Service, from March 2, 1922.

First Lieut. Benson Glenwood Scott, Field Artillery, from March 2, 1922.

First Lieut. Redding Francis Perry, Cavalry, from March 2, 1922.

First Lieut. Walter Arthur Metts, jr., Field Artillery, from March 5, 1922.

First Lieut. Frank Camm, Field Artillery, from March 6, 1922.

First Lieut. Robert Morgan Burrowes, Infantry, from March 7, 1922.

First Lieut. Richard Oscar Bassett, jr., Infantry, from March 9, 1922, subject to examination required by law.

First Lieut. Percy Stuart Lowe, Coast Artillery Corps, from March 12, 1922.

First Lieut. Lewis Alonzo Murray, Corps of Engineers, from March 14, 1922.

First Lieut. Rene Edward deRussy, Coast Artillery Corps, from March 23, 1922.

First Lieut. Marion Gardner Putnam, Air Service, from March 27, 1922.

First Lieut. Clyde Grady, Infantry, from March 29, 1922.

First Lieut. Walter Drake Williams, Air Service, from March 29, 1922.

First Lieut. William Henry Payne, Quartermaster Corps, from April 1, 1922.

First Lieut. Thomas Tilson Conway, Infantry, from April 2, 1922.

First Lieut. Edgar Ambrose Jarman, Infantry, from April 4, 1922.

First Lieut. Regeon Victor Love, Coast Artillery Corps, from April 5, 1922.

First Lieut. Svening Johannes Bang, Cavalry, from April 6, 1922.

First Lieut. Allan Sheldon Willis, Infantry, from April 6, 1922.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Charles E. Brooks to be postmaster at Fort Deposit, Ala., in place of C. E. Brooks. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

ARKANSAS.

Carl J. Lauderdale to be postmaster at Stamps, Ark., in place of A. P. Massey, resigned.

CALIFORNIA.

George A. Weishar to be postmaster at Hanford, Calif., in place of F. V. Dewey, resigned.

COLORADO.

Pearle L. Gabbett to be postmaster at Orchard, Colo. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

CONNECTICUT.

Mary H. Newton to be postmaster at Uncasville, Conn., in place of M. E. Tooker, resigned.

GEORGIA.

Awtrey C. Moore to be postmaster at Powder Springs, Ga. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Stevens R. Owen to be postmaster at Gordon, Ga., in place of J. A. Stokes. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1922.

Charles H. Travis to be postmaster at Senoia, Ga., in place of B. A. Nolan. Incumbent's commission expired May 2, 1921.

ILLINOIS.

Charles H. Collins to be postmaster at Casey, Ill., in place of Ross Lee. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Charles E. Van Buren to be postmaster at Victoria, Ill., in place of M. B. Sloan. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1921.

IOWA.

James V. Frew to be postmaster at Hiteman, Iowa, in place of W. H. Frew. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

KANSAS.

John L. Lee to be postmaster at Atlanta, Kans. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Francis B. Brungardt to be postmaster at Victoria, Kans. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

KENTUCKY.

Melvin C. Bray to be postmaster at Hindman, Ky. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Grant North to be postmaster at Hustonville, Ky. Office became presidential April 1, 1920.

Allen E. Bell to be postmaster at Moreland, Ky. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Phoebe Howard to be postmaster at Salyersville, Ky. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Harvey B. Ogden to be postmaster at Worthville, Ky. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

Marvin L. Whitnell to be postmaster at Murray, Ky., in place of E. C. K. Robertson, removed.

Samuel C. Hedden to be postmaster at Shelbyville, Ky., in place of O. D. Todd. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Henry Hall to be postmaster at Waynesburg, Ky., in place of Cora Singleton, resigned.

MARYLAND.

Charles R. Day to be postmaster at Marion Station, Md., in place of E. A. Lankford, removed.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Helen K. Hoxie to be postmaster at Sunderland, Mass. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

William F. Searle to be postmaster at Peabody, Mass., in place of D. J. Dullea. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

MICHIGAN.

John H. Boehm to be postmaster at Fountain, Mich. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

MISSOURI.

Jessie F. Huff to be postmaster at Des Arc, Mo. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

NEW MEXICO.

Ernest A. Hannah to be postmaster at Artesia, N. Mex., in place of G. U. McCrary, resigned.

NEW YORK.

John A. Rapelye to be postmaster at Flushing, N. Y., in place of A. J. Kennedy. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Henry C. Windeknecht to be postmaster at Rensselaer, N. Y., in place of W. I. Williams. Incumbent's commission expired March 22, 1920.

Joseph W. Kratoville to be postmaster at Riverhead, N. Y., in place of O. E. Griswold, resigned.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Martin H. Weber to be postmaster at New Leipzig, N. Dak., in place of A. E. Briggs, resigned.

OHIO.

George S. Laskey to be postmaster at Custar, Ohio. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Ruth G. McWilliams to be postmaster at Grand Rapids, Ohio, in place of W. J. Connolly. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Everett F. Funk to be postmaster at Warsaw, Ohio, in place of R. E. Clark, resigned.

OKLAHOMA.

Cosmo Falconer to be postmaster at Cheyenne, Okla., in place of W. P. Madden. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Robert R. Sutton to be postmaster at Claremore, Okla., in place of A. L. Kates. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Hiram H. Snow to be postmaster at Sand Springs, Okla., in place of V. A. Schiefelbusch, resigned.

OREGON.

Ora S. Banister to be postmaster at Paisley, Oreg. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Ralph V. Parthemore to be postmaster at High Spire, Pa. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

William B. Baker to be postmaster at Claysburg, Pa., in place of C. E. Burket. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Zola K. Rodkey to be postmaster at Spangler, Pa., in place of J. B. Esch. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1922.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Susan E. Endicott to be postmaster at Hill City, S. Dak., in place of E. E. Blight; appointee failed to qualify.

TENNESSEE.

Clyde A. Jamison to be postmaster at Millington, Tenn., in place of V. E. Williams, resigned.

Claris E. Akin to be postmaster at Rutherford, Tenn., in place of L. W. Davidson. Incumbent's commission expired August 26, 1920.

TEXAS.

Velma Scott to be postmaster at Graford, Tex. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

John C. Beever to be postmaster at Perryton, Tex. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Herman C. Feist to be postmaster at Rowena, Tex. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Joseph D. Powell to be postmaster at Archer City, Tex., in place of H. L. Robertson, deceased.

Wyatt O. Selkirk to be postmaster at Blessing, Tex., in place of J. H. Logan, resigned.

Roy B. Nichols to be postmaster at Houston, Tex., in place of T. W. House. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Thomas B. White to be postmaster at Rogers, Tex., in place of B. T. Gardner. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

UTAH.

Claude C. McGee to be postmaster at Lewiston, Utah, in place of J. M. Anderson, deceased.

VERMONT.

William H. Startup to be postmaster at Proctor, Vt., in place of J. L. Welsh, resigned.

VIRGINIA.

Mary P. Moon to be postmaster at Cartersville, Va. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

WASHINGTON.

Amy E. Ide to be postmaster at Outlook, Wash. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Daniel M. Shakley to be postmaster at Hollidays Cove, W. Va. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Winnie O. Law to be postmaster at Mount Clare, W. Va. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

WISCONSIN.

Leslie H. Thayer to be postmaster at Birchwood, Wis. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

John A. Mathys to be postmaster at Casco, Wis. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Oliver R. Weinandy to be postmaster at Cochrane, Wis. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 21 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

James D. Segars, Carbon Hill.

ILLINOIS.

May S. Williams, Hanover.
Herman W. Behrens, Kampsville.
Paul P. Shutt, Paris.
Walter A. Foster, Steward.
John J. Barton, Sublette.

KANSAS.

Robert B. Slavens, Lecompton.

MICHIGAN.

Wynne C. Garvin, Millington.

MINNESOTA.

Alton E. Martin, Woodlake.

NEBRASKA.

Henry J. Steinhausen, Creighton.
Ray H. Surber, Davenport.
Earl R. Lewis, Humphrey.
James E. Scott, Osmond.
James D. Finley, Sargent.

NEW YORK.

May M. Ferry, Edwards.
Arthur H. Wyatt, Huletts Landing.
Raymond C. Green, Sanquoit.

OKLAHOMA.

Guy E. Reece, Braggs.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Elwood S. Rothermel, Fleetwood.
Elwood M. Stover, Kulpsville.
Mabel M. Myer, Ronks.

WASHINGTON.

John L. Harris, Kelso.
William R. Wells, Mount Vernon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 21, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we approach Thee not with protest but with willing submission. We do not murmur nor complain, for Thy gracious providences are so manifold. O may they preserve in us the high instinct to live at our best. We beseech Thee to keep the power of our moral resistance unbroken. Bless us each day with the right attitude of mind toward life, with its urgent duties and its countless mercies. Ever keep before us our country's need. May our past be our inspiration, the present the call of opportunity, and in the discharge of every obligation direct us to do the best we know and give the best we have. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. LEWIS HENRY, who has been elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the thirty-seventh district of New York, be allowed to take the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimouse consent that Mr. HENRY, recently elected a Member from the State of New York, whose certificate of election has not yet been received by the Clerk, be allowed to take the oath of office. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to Senate Concurrent Resolution 21 providing for printing as a Senate document with an index the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as reported to the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1075. An act giving permanent rank to district superintendents of the Coast Guard on the retired list;

S. 1405. An act for the relief of William Collie Nobors; and

S. 2885. An act to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1075. An act giving permanent rank to district superintendents of the Coast Guard on the retired list; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 1405. An act for the relief of William Collie Nabors; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2885. An act to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—PARRILLO v. KUNZ.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House transmitting testimony, papers, and documents relating to the contested-election case of Parrillo against Kunz, which was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1 and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—GOLUMBIEWSKI v. RAINEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House transmitting testimony, papers, and documents relating to the contested-election case of Golumbiewski against Rainey, which was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 2 and ordered printed.

MONTHLY PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2158) to provide for the monthly payment of pensions, with Senate amendments thereto, and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not that a bill that should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in order to agree to the Senate amendments? Is not that a charge on the Treasury?

The SPEAKER. The rule does not require that every bill which must be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when it comes back from the Senate with a Senate amendment thereto, must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate amendment, unless the Senate amendments require such consideration. The Chair is informed that these amendments do not require such consideration. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk reported the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI FLOOD DISASTER.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 309.

Be it resolved, etc., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be immediately available as an emergency fund to be expended by the Mississippi River Commission during the present flood in the Mississippi River, for the purpose of preserving, protecting, and repairing the levees under its jurisdiction: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct $1,000,000 from the appropriation that shall first hereafter be made for the use of said Mississippi River Commission under the terms of the flood control act of March 1, 1917, said $1,000,000 to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: And provided, That any unexpended balance of the sum hereby appropriated, remaining after present flood emergency has passed, may be expended by the Mississippi River Commission under the authority and subject to the provisions of the said flood control act.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in that connection I ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 21, 1922.

Hon. M. B. MADDEN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The Mississippi River is in extreme flood, the water being higher at many places than ever known before, and the condition is such that the levees protecting extensive tracts of the States of Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana are seriously threatened.

The water of the river is above the tops of the levees in some places for 20 miles at a stretch, and it is only by the utmost vigor and watchfulness on the part of the people that these levees are not overtopped or breached. The loss of life and property, should a break in the levees occur, would be incalculable and would amount to a national disaster.

The funds under the control of the Mississippi River Commission have been practically exhausted, and breaks in the levees at various points are certain to occur unless funds are immediately provided to keep up the work now being carried on. It is known that the local levee boards and parties interested have already made as great sacrifice in the fight against the water as they have been able and can not furnish funds longer.

I therefore most urgently recommend the passage of the joint resolution, copy of which is inclosed, which makes immediately available the sum of $1,000,000 from the pending appropriation for the Mississippi River. This amounts to nothing more than an advance of funds for the purpose, and I urge its adoption at the earliest possible moment.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think it is proper that I should explain the situation. Under the flood control act of 1917 appropriations are authorized to be placed at the disposal of the Mississippi River Commission. The bill for the Military Establishment recently passed by the House carries an appropriation for this purpose amounting to $6,670,000, to be available after the 1st of July next. This resolution provides that out of that $6,670,000, $1,000,000 shall be taken. It may be that the Senate in the consideration of the military bill will deduct the million dollars, but if the Senate should fail to do that, then the power is in the Secretary of the Treasury to take it out of that bill. So that in the consideration of the resolution before us we are not appropriating any money but are simply making available for immediate use the $1,000,000 which would be at the disposal of the Mississippi River Commission after the 1st of July in any event. I hope the resolution will be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this million dollars that is to be expended to be used for any different work than the $6,670,000 which is carried in the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Exactly the same.

Mr. WALSH. Are we making any headway in this work on the Mississippi to overcome these annual or biennial floods?

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that great progress is being made, that sooner or later the danger will be obviated by the construction of such levees as are adequate.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, it is apparent that there must be no delay in this, if this money is to be of some use, that it ought to be had to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any delay.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If progress had not been made in this work, the flood would now cover the entire valley, would it not?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not any doubt about that.

Mr. GARNER. The loss of life and property would be tremendous?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, this being the day set aside for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar, I ask unanimous consent that the House take up unobjected bills upon the Private Calendar and consider them in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that unobjected bills on the Private Calendar be taken up in order in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the first bill.

LUKE RATIGAN.

The first business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2614) for the relief of Luke Ratigan.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this bill. It was objected to once before, and I would like to know something in regard to it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, Luke Ratigan is a man who is 80 years of age at the present time. He was formerly in the revenue service at San Francisco. I want to say frankly that he was a very faithful employee, and one day the commander of the vessel on which he was acting attempted to jump overboard—tried to commit suicide. Luke Ratigan, an oiler on the vessel, jumped and caught him and saved him. They wrestled around the deck for quite a little while. His back was badly strained in the struggle. He had been appointed an oiler only a few weeks before and was acting in that capacity. Then he was put temporarily in the appraiser's building, so as to be able to regain his strength. While he was feeding the furnaces a crazy man came down there, attacked him, and tried to blow up the furnaces. Ratigan held the man until relief could come to him. The man was arrested and sent to the insane asylum. Ratigan had to resign from the higher position of oiler and serve in the lower position of fireman because he had defended the property of the United States. That is all there is in the matter, and I certainly hope the House will allow this bill to pass. It will give him a rating a little higher than he would get otherwise.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Luke Ratigan, of San Francisco, Calif., was employed in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service as fireman for a period of over 25 years; and

Whereas the said Luke Ratigan, while in the discharge of his duty in said service and in the saving of human life, received physical injuries which compelled him to relinquish the position of a petty officer, to which he had just been promoted, and continue in the said United States Revenue-Cutter Service at the lower rating; and

Whereas by act of Congress approved January 28, 1915, the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service were combined as the Coast Guard: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Luke Ratigan on the retired list of petty officers of the Coast Guard with the retired pay and allowances of a petty officer in said Coast Guard.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Luke Ratigan on the retired list of the Coast Guard as an oiler, first class, retired, at the rate of pay he would be entitled to receive had he held the rating of oiler, first class, when retired."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DR. O. H. TITTMANN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6245) for the relief of Dr. O. H. Tittmann, former superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EDWARD J. SCHAEFER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1723) authorizing the payment of compensation to Edward J. Schaefer for the death of Ruth Stone Schaefer through an unlawful shot fired by a soldier in the service of the United States at Camp Alexander, Va.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to this measure before. I do not know whether there are any other facts connected with the incident which have been developed, and unless there are I shall feel constrained again to object.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I have never had a chance to explain. It seems to me a very meritorious bill.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, the gentleman and I have a sharp difference of opinion right there——

Mr. MACGREGOR. Usually.

Mr. WALSH. And I am afraid anything further he might say to elucidate the measure would probably not be very convincing. I suggest that the gentleman make a brief statement, if he desires, and I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, in July, 1919, Mr. Schaefer and his wife in an automobile went into Camp Alexander, Va. While they were upon one of the roads of that camp one of the sentries shot at the automobile. The shot went through the back of the automobile and killed Mrs. Schaefer. Now, it appears from the Inspector General's report that this sentry had never fired an Army rifle before in his life. He had never been instructed as to guard duty. Ball ammunition was issued to this sentry instead of guard ammunition. There were no signs posted with reference to the entry of people into this camp. No warning had been given or restrictions made in reference to people going into this camp. These people and many other people had for months before that been going into this camp. It was in time of peace, it was not in time of war, and this sentry, not properly instructed by the officers, without having been properly instructed as to the use of firearms or as to the time to use them, not properly instructed in guard duty, fired the shot which resulted in the death of this woman, a young woman less than 30 years of age, leaving two children, one 8 and one 3 years old. I think that under those circumstances the United States Government, having placed a man on duty at that camp in such a negligent manner, should make reparation to some extent for depriving this man of his wife and those children of their mother.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. On what theory of law or otherwise do you ask the United States to make reparation?

Mr. MACGREGOR. My theory is that the Government placed this man there. Of course, there is no legal obligation.

Mr. MILLER. On what theory do you claim the Government should pay for the loss of this very estimable lady, even though the Government did place this man on guard duty?

Mr. MACGREGOR. We do it in many, many other cases. We have done it in the cases of military drivers of trucks running down people in the streets of our cities. We have recompensed them for the injuries received. We have recompensed other governments for the killing of their subjects by men of our Navy. Now, certainly in such a case as this, which is far greater than doing some slight injury to some individual by an automobile truck, we should go to that length in recompensing this family for the loss of the mother and wife.

Mr. SNELL. How long had this man that did the shooting been a member of the United States Army?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I think for two or three months.

Mr. SNELL. He knew nothing whatever about the care——

Mr. MACGREGOR. Never fired an Army rifle before, and never had been instructed.

Mr. BARBOUR. Did the guard warn these people that they could not travel on this particular road?

Mr. MACGREGOR. He claims he called to them; but the fact is that they did not hear any calling or warning to stop.

Mr. BARBOUR. And then he just deliberately shot at them?

Mr. MANN. He shot at the wheel.

Mr. BARBOUR. Shot at the automobile?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. He took the chances of hitting the occupants?

Mr. MANN. Surely.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I think there ought to be some recompense to these people. If you will allow, on page 5 of the report of the Inspector General you will see the conclusions:

> It is believed that the shooting and killing of Mrs. E. J. Schaefer * * * would probably not have occurred had the military authorities at Camp Alexander exercised due diligence to prevent indiscriminate shooting on the part of the guards and military police, nor is it believed that had guard ammunition been issued Mrs. Schaefer would have met her death.

And he states with reference to this particular sentry:

> Though he had never fired any Army rifle, nor been taught the proper use of the same, he was issued ball ammunition and prior to going on post on the tour of guard above referred to loaded his rifle with the same. Private Nichols had been on duty at Camp Alexander two and one-half months before the occurrence of the fatal affair in which he figured. His company commander and his commanding officer both professed ignorance, to a greater or lesser degree, of exactly what instruction he had received in the handling of a rifle. The administration of the Headquarters Company and of Companies H and I, Twelfth Infantry, to which organizations Private Nichols had at various times belonged, appeared to be lax and recruit instruction in preparation for guard duty indifferently prosecuted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H. R. 1723) authorizing the payment of compensation to Edward J. Schaefer for the death of Ruth Stone Schaefer through an unlawful shot fired by a soldier in the service of the United States at Camp Alexander, Va.
>
> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to Edward J. Schaefer the sum of $50,000 as compensation for the death of his wife, Ruth Stone Schaefer, who was unlawfully shot by a soldier in the service of the United States at Camp Alexander, Va., on July 7, 1919.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

> In line 6, page 1, strike out "$50,000 as compensation" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000 in full settlement of damages."
>
> Line 2, page 2, strike out the words "unlawfully" and insert in lieu thereof the word "accidentally."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of Edward J. Schaefer."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MACGREGOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FRED H. GALLUP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6966) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup major of Field Artillery in the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H. R. 6966) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup major of Field Artillery in the United States Army.
>
> Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Fred H. Gallup, formerly a captain of Field Artillery, whose nomination as major of Field Artillery was confirmed by the Senate in June, 1916, a major of Field Artillery, to take rank at the foot of the list of majors of Field Artillery, and that no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act, and there shall be no increase in the total number of majors of Field Artillery now authorized by law by reason of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DICKINSON a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TORAHACHI URATAKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1077) to authorize the payment of $5,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject, killed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, on November 25, 1915.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to this bill without some explanation. There have been a number of bills that have gone through without explanation, and I shall object to this bill unless there is some explanation by the party who introduced the measure or the committee who made the report. Hearing none, I object.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve that for a moment?

Mr. MILLER. If there is any explanation coming.

Mr. MANN. This is a case where there was a Japanese subject killed by the War Department. Of course, the Government has no liability. The practice of the Government has been for a number of years, where Congress would make compensation for the death of an American citizen without admitting liability to the Government, as a matter of grace, on the recommendation of the State Department, to make the appropriation to pay for the death of a foreign citizen. It has been done in a good many cases. I think probably it is the proper thing to do. We obtain the same consideration from foreign Governments for citizens of the United States who are killed under such circumstances abroad.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Why is it that S. 1077 is for $5,000 and S. 1078 for $2,000. They seem to be very much alike to me.

Mr. MANN. I presume for the reason that the State Department has recommended $5,000 in one case and $2,000 in another. The gentleman might ask me why a moment ago we passed a bill to pay $5,000 for the death of somebody, when there might be a bill on the calendar to pay $151 for the death of somebody else.

Mr. BEGG. I did not mean that. What are the extenuating circumstances in one case that warrant $5,000 and in the other case only $2,000. It seems to me if they are parallel cases equity would say to give them both $5,000 or both $2,000.

Mr. MANN. The $5,000 is not excessive, and in the other case they ask for only $2,000, and they are satisfied with that amount.

Mr. BEGG. Then I am satisfied.

Mr. MANN. I think it is desirable to do these things graciously. It undoubtedly would be done sooner or later. We have quite a long line of precedents for this thing. It is a matter of friendly intercourse between our Government and foreign governments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, the explanation of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is not full. I know nothing, and I doubt if any other Member of the House knows, of the circumstances under which this citizen of Japan lost his life, whether it was by his own negligence or by what other means, and in the absence of advice on that point I shall take it to be my duty to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TATSUJI SAITO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1078) to authorize the payment of $2,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Tatsuji Saito, a Japanese subject, killed at Camp Geronimo, Mexico, May 15, 1916.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. On the same ground, I shall object to this one unless there is a fuller explanation of the circumstances under which this death occurred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

J. W. LA BARE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4845) for the relief of J. W. La Bare.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, J. W. Le Bare, late of Company B, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 23d day of February, 1865: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting after the word "no" in line 10 the word "pension."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: On page 1, line 10, after the word "no" insert the word "pension."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ALBERT HAMILTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5820) to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to place Albert Hamilton, formerly first lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, on the retired list of the Marine Corps, with the rank and retired pay of a first lieutenant of the Marine Corps: Provided, That in computing his pay credit shall be given for all his continuous service in the Marine Corps: Provided further, That no pay shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With a committee amendment as follows:

On page 1, line 10, after the word "act," insert: "And provided further, That the retired pay allowed the said Albert Hamilton pursuant to this act shall be in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title of the bill just passed so as to read: "On the retired list of the United States Navy," rather than "on the retired list of the Marine Corps."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed, and move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MANN. You put it in the title and leave it unchanged in the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Navy Department has made that request in the report.

Mr. MANN. Why put it in the title and not in the bill itself? Why not recite the fact when the bill provides to put the man on the retired list of the Marine Corps? I was wondering why they did not also put it in the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Secretary of the Navy——

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is expert advice. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I withdraw my request.

Mr. MADDEN. It was argued the other day that the Marine Corps was not in the Navy. I want to inquire now if it has been changed? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CORNELIUS DUGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1290) for the relief of Cornelius Dugan.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint Cornelius Dugan, who served with distinction as chief gunner in the United States Navy during the War of the Rebellion, a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy, and to retire him and place him on the retired list of the Navy as a lieutenant commander with the retired pay and allowances of that grade.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the President is hereby authorized to advance on the retired list of the Navy, to the rank of lieutenant commander, Cornelius Dugan, who served with credit in the United States Navy during the Civil War and the war with the German Government: Provided, That the said Cornelius Dugan shall not in consequence of such advancement be entitled to any increase in the pay which he is now receiving as a retired officer of the Navy."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DARROW, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LIEUT. COL. HENRY C. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5210) for the relief of Lieut. Col. Henry C. Davis.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that at one time the Navy Department recommended that this bill be not passed. I think perhaps it had better go over. I ask that it be passed over.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this bill will be passed over.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

ALVAH B. DOBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5768) to amend and correct the military record of Alvah B. Doble.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this form of bill is very unusual. Has anybody on the Committee on Military Affairs examined the form?

Mr. MILLER. I have examined the form, and it should be amended after the word "That," in line 3 of the bill, so as to read——

Mr. MANN. And not provide that the Secretary of War is directed to issue an honorable discharge as of that date.

Mr. MILLER. That should be eliminated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Alvah B. Doble shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private of Company F, Seventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, as of the date of January 28, 1863; and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to said Alvah B. Doble an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill in line 3, after the word "that," by inserting the words "in the construction of the pension laws."

Mr. McKENZIE. Should not the word "administration" be used instead of "construction."

Mr. MILLER. I will accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: In line 3, after the word "that," insert "in the administration of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment, in lines 6, 7, and 8, to strike out the words "and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to said Alvah B. Doble an honorable discharge as of that date."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, may I direct the attention of the gentleman from Washington to the language of the proviso? The proviso usually reads that no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MILLER. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to that effect?

Mr. MILLER. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, in line 9, after the word "no," insert the word "pension" and a comma, and in line 10 strike out the words "by virtue of" and insert "prior to."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 9, after the word "no," insert the word "pension," and in line 10, after the word "payable," strike out the words "by virtue of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "prior to."

Mr. MANN. Aside from the changes made by these amendments, I take it the bill as reported was in very good form. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. I think that as amended it is a perfectly good bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROBERT RUSSELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5791) for the relief of Robert Russell.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Robert Russell, a citizen and resident of St. Cloud, Minn., who, without fault on his part, was, on the 16th day of February, A. D. 1920, severely injured by reason of the icy condition of the steps leading to the Federal building, or post-office building, at St. Cloud, Minn., the sum of $1,000, and the sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 9, strike out the figures "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$218"; and on page 1, line 10, strike out the figures "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$218."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RUPERTO VILCHE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5251) for the relief of Ruperto Vilche.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 to Ruperto Vilche, of Guantanamo City, Cuba, in full compensation for the loss of his daughter, Idelisa Vilche, and for injury to his daughter, Ofelia Vilche, the former having been killed and the latter injured by a bullet fired from his rifle by Pvt. Ralph F. Carter, United States Marine Corps, who became suddenly insane while on sentry duty at the marine camp near Guantanamo City, and for all expense incurred by the said Ruperto Vilche in connection with the said death and injury.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," insert "and directed," and in line 4, after the word "pay," insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is to pay a citizen of Cuba for being shot by a soldier of the United States who was in Cuba. I think it is a proper payment. A few moments ago the gentleman from Washington objected to a bill for the payment of a Japanese who was killed by a lot of American soldiers who got drunk in Mexico. I suppose he thinks it is more according to regulations for the soldiers to get drunk and kill some one that it is to be killed by an insane man, but I hope the Japanese will not hold it up against all of us, because he was a Japanese, and the gentleman comes from where they do not like Japanese.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I did not object on so narrow a ground as the gentleman from Illinois would seem to indicate. I stated in my objection that unless there was some one on the floor who could explain the circumstances of the death I should object. The gentleman from Illinois came forward with nothing to comply with my suggestion. Whether it is a Mexican, a Japanese, or citizen of the United States, or whether it is in Mexico or in Cuba, it makes no difference to me. I simply want to correct the impression that I objected because it was a Japanese who was killed. I asked the gentlemen on the floor of the House if any of them knew any of the circumstances. Now, if the gentleman had stated the facts and circumstances to the membership, I would have had no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I think one of the two Japanese bills—my attention was diverted at the time it was called up—is particularly meritorious. I refer to the bill for the benefit of Torahachi. As to the other I know less and feel very much less interest. I wonder if the gentleman would permit me to say a word as to the Torahachi bill?

Mr. MILLER. I should be very glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. ROGERS. This is the situation: Some years ago, I think in 1915—I have not refreshed my memory lately—this Japanese laborer was lying asleep in a cabin near Schofield Barracks, in Honolulu. An American sentry a mile away was at his post. He fancied that there was something suspicious, became, apparently, a little bit excited, and discharged his rifle, which was loaded with ball. That bullet sped on its way into the cottage where the Japanese laborer was lying asleep and killed him. The bill is to provide a sum of money for the widow and, I think, four or five children of the killed Japanese. The Secretary of State now in office and at least two former Secretaries of State have represented in the strongest possible way to the Committee on Foreign Affairs that it would be an extremely gracious and courteous thing for the American Congress to see that some compensation was made.

Mr. MILLER. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts I will say that if he had made that statement prior to my making the objection there would have been no objection on my part. I simply asked for some information concerning the bill.

Mr. MANN. I would like to butt in long enough to apologize to the gentleman from Washington. The fact is that the report does not sufficiently state the facts. I remembered the case, but I could not have told it as well as the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROGERS. After the present bill is disposed of, I should like to ask unanimous consent to return to this particular bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. J. Res. 309) appropriating $1,000,000 for the preservation, protection, and repair of levees under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate No. 29 to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments Nos. 21, 31, and 35 to said bill, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. WARREN, Mr. LODGE, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. HITCHCOCK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCNARY, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

GEORGE W. POSEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4894) for the relief of George W. Posey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a little explanation of this bill. No one seems to offer any information, and I object.

Mr. MANN. This is an old soldier——

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to remove the charge of desertion against George W. Posey, late of Company A, Twentieth Regiment, and Company B, Thirty-fifth Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and issue to him an honorable discharge.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:
"That in the administration of the pension laws George W. Posey, late a private in Company A, Twentieth Regiment, and a private in Company B, Thirty-fifth Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

W. W. M'GRATH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2722) for the relief of W. W. McGrath.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, this is a bill for damage to an automobile. I notice that the committee has an amendment, and I would like to ask how it arrived at the sum of $459.50?

Mr. EDMONDS. The department recognized that the damage to the car amounted to $180.50. Doctor McGrath had to employ an automobile, at $3 a day, for 93 days. That would amount to $279, which, added to the $180.50, makes $459.50.

Mr. WALSH. I do not believe the committee ought to report bills giving damages on that basis. He might claim that the automobile he hired could not travel as fast as the one he owned and, therefore, he should receive a little extra compensation.

Mr. EDMONDS. We thought that $3 a day was very reasoncompensation for the use of an automobile for a doctor in active practice. We did not think he was out of the way in the amount that he asked.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is satisfied that he was deprived of the use of this machine, and that this is not an exorbitant allowance in that section of the country with which to hire one of the products that has made the State of Michigan famous in order to help this doctor out?

Mr. EDMONDS. The committee felt that was fair compensation for the damage that he suffered.

Mr. WALSH. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $930 to W. W. McGrath, in full of all claims he may have against the Government for damages done to his automobile by a United States Army truck on October 21, 1918.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out "$930" and insert "$459.50."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The War Department has authority to settle this claim up to the sum of $500.

Mr. EDMONDS. They offered to settle the claim upon the basis of the actual damage, $180.50, to the automobile. The doctor refused to accept that because he felt that he should receive proper reimbursement.

Mr. MANN. I understand why he refused.

Mr. EDMONDS. The department could not pay the balance.

Mr. MANN. When we passed the law giving authority to the War Department to settle claims up to $500, and giving to certain other departments the same authority, it was the understanding that the committee on claims would cease to report to the House bills for claims which the War Department was authorized to settle. I do not object to this claim, but I hope the Committee on Claims, after urging Congress to pass legislation to relieve them from looking after these small bills, will not start in to consider all those bills because the War Department will not settle for the amount that the man claims.

Mr. EDMONDS. I hope so, too.

Mr. MANN. And if any more of them come in while I am here I think they shall have to be contested. That would have been the case with this probably, except that I did not want to quarrel with my most estimable colleague [Mr. MCKENZIE].

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES T. FARRILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1482) for the relief of James T. Farrill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers James T. Farrill, alias James Toy, alias James Butler, who served as a private in Company E, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and in Company D, Fifth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization the 1st day of May, 1895.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the figures "1895" and insert in lieu thereof "1865": Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. H. WARING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 667) for the relief of John B. H. Waring.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore to John B. H. Waring, late a captain in the Medical Corps, the files of which he was deprived, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint him an officer of the Medical Corps in the Army of the United States as of May 5, 1917, with such rank as he would have attained had he not been discharged, and when so appointed he shall be placed on the retired list of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD SHORT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 546) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay war-risk insurance to the foster parents of Edward Short.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some explanation from some Member of the House. This is rather an unusual bill, and while I hesitate to object to it, I would have to do so unless some explanation was given.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, Edward Short, after entering the Army took out an insurance policy which is made payable to himself. He was killed in action. Upon investigation it was found that when he was about 15 years old he was found in a barn as a waif by Charles A. Thornton. Mr. Thornton took him, raised him, educated him, and he lived with Mr. Thornton for over 15 years. There appears to be no other heirs to this man Short. He would have come under the Sweet amendment, approved December 24, 1919, which included foster parents, if it had not been for the fact that he did not designate Mr. and Mrs. Thornton as the people to get the money under the policy. As long as there are no other heirs, the committee thought that the money justly belonged to somebody, and, inasmuch as by the placing of the names of Mr. and Mrs. Thornton in the policy they would have gotten the money, the committee felt that it is only fair that it should be paid to them.

Mr. MILLER. In view of the explanation, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Speaker, was this man regularly adopted?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; and the Sweet Act does not require that.

Mr. MANN. He was not legally adopted?

Mr. EDMONDS. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles A. Thornton and Elizabeth Thornton, foster parents of Edward Short, formerly a member of Company B, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment United States Infantry, the sum of $10,000 in 36 installments, as provided in the war risk insurance act, and upon the death of the said Charles A. and Elizabeth Thornton the remainder of such sums unpaid be paid to the children of said Charles A. and Elizabeth Thornton.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two hundred and forty."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "Thornton," strike out the words "the remainder of such sums unpaid be paid to the children of said Charles A. and Elizabeth Thornton" and insert in lieu thereof the words "all payments shall cease."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

L. A. M'MULLEN.

The next business on the private calendar was the bill (H. R. 1892) for the relief of L. A. McMullen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to L. A. McMullen, Gardiner, Mont., the sum of $73.75, payment in full to compensate him for clothing lost while engaged as a government employee in fighting forest fires in Yellowstone National Park, September 4, 1919.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BELLS FOR CHURCH IN GLOUCESTER, MASS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5495) to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means be discharged from further consideration of the bill S. 1610, which is identical with this bill, and that the Senate bill be considered in place of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1610) to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to admit free of duty a certain carillon of 25 bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TREADWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the House bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

TORAHACHI URATAKE.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 60 (S. 1077), to which the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] objected a moment ago and as to which I think he has been somewhat enlightened since.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill:

An act (S. 1077) to authorize the payment of $5,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject, killed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, on November 25, 1915.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] explain the facts connected with this claim.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the facts as I gave them to the House were substantially correct with one exception. I stated previously that the United States soldier became frightened and discharged his musket at some supposed enemy. The fact was that while on night sentry duty he was shifting his rifle from one shoulder to the other and the rifle was accidentally discharged. The bullet went into the heart of this Japanese lying in his hut asleep nearly a mile away. The soldier was court-martialed, was found guilty, and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment at hard labor, which seems to indicate that in view of the military authorities the soldier was negligent. The other facts are exactly as I have stated. There are a widow and four minor children. The War Department has approved the passage of this bill. Three Secretaries of State have approved the passage of the bill, and I have in my possession an elaborate argument in behalf of the measure signed within the last year by Secretary of State Hughes. I think there can be no doubt that the Government owes an obligation in this matter, and that it will be gratifying to the Japanese Government if the Congress of the United States should recognize this obligation in such a way as this.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, if the explanation had been rendered, which the gentleman from Massachusetts has so ably made just now, there would have been no objection I think to the taking up of this bill. I simply objected to it in the absence of facts before the House, and I am very glad now to withdraw any objection, as I think it is a meritorious claim and should pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is authorized to be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of liability therefor to the Government of Japan, $5,000 for the benefit and consolation of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject killed on November 25, 1915, at Schofield Barracks, as set forth in the letter from the Acting Secretary of War dated February 19, 1916, and printed as House Document No. 785, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ROGERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMES E. CONNORS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7695) for the relief of James E. Connors.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear any facts in connection with this case and will reserve the right to object.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, this claim has been before the House on several occasions and I endeavored to acquaint the Members with the facts in the case as they have been developed by the testimony. This bill is for the relief of James E. Connors, a boy a little over 7 years of age, who in October, 1918, in broad daylight, on his way home from school, was attracted by a siren horn blown in the navy yard at Brooklyn, the usual method employed for fire alarm. The boy was standing on the pavement, where he had the right to stand in my opinion, and a truck came out of the navy yard, without any indication of its coming at all, no noise was made of any kind, and when the driver came to the gate he made a sharp turn to the right and the rear right wheel of this big truck ran over this boy's foot and made amputation necessary.

Your committee have agreed upon the sum of $2,500 for the relief of the little fellow, as we are convinced that he can not be charged with negligence. His mother is a poor woman, is unable to maintain herself except by her own labor, and the boy is utterly incapacitated, and will remain so for a period of years. They have no money with which to buy a new leg for the unfortunate boy. We were impressed by the testimony given by the various witnesses summoned by the naval board which investigated the matter. The policeman at the gate says that it was his business to watch pedestrians at the time of the fire, and opened the gates for the large truck and while his back was turned toward the boy the latter was injured by the truck, and was picked up by some spectators and given first aid. Now, it will be found by reading the testimony in the case that the operator of the car was discharged because of inefficiency, and the committee believes, as a matter of right, this claim should be allowed. There is no legal obligation on the part of the Government, of course, to pay this little boy, guilty of no negligence whatever, not required to have a guardian with him on his way home from school, and who was injured in the manner I have indicated. The committee reduced the amount from $25,000 to $2,500. We considered in our deliberations the awards made by the compensation laws of the various States, and we concluded that a disability of this kind would be paid likely upon a basis of 45 per cent. And taking it for granted that that boy, if he could have gotten any compensation at all, could have earned $50 a month, on the basis of 45 per cent he would be awarded at that age over $4,000. But, of course, we can not consider the payment to the boy under the compensation law, because we did not have such a law at that time. I am firmly convinced that it is clearly right that we should award this poor boy $2,500 for the suffering that he sustained in that accident, especially when it was no fault of his own, and the further reason that he is crippled for life. And in view of the fact that we have paid $5,000 for the loss of life of a mature man, it is certainly not wrong to pay $2,500 to a boy who was injured under such conditions, and I think that amount is only fair compensation for this accident.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How old is he now?

Mr. ROSE. He was less than 8 years old at the time of the accident.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a couple of short questions?

Mr. ROSE. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MILLER. Was the boy on the sidewalk when he received the injury? Did the truck mount the sidewalk?

Mr. ROSE. He was standing on the sidewalk. There was a curbing to protect the gate, and the boy had his foot out beyond that curbing and turned to look at the truck coming out. The man made a quick turn, and the policeman heard the boy cry and picked him up. He was on his way home from school.

Mr. MILLER. Did the truck mount the sidewalk where the boy was standing, or did the boy get out beyond the curbstone?

Mr. ROSE. I want to say that this stone that I speak of was the stone buffer near the gate. The driver made a quick turn and the wheel ran over the boy's foot.

Mr. MILLER. It was a Government truck?

Mr. ROSE. It was a Government truck, and the driver of it was discharged in less than 30 days.

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to supplement what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated, that there was this buffer there, and the truck turned short and knocked the boy down, causing the accident which necessitated the amputation of his leg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7695) for the relief of James E. Connors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of James E. Connors the sum of $2,500 in compensation for injuries caused by a Navy automobile, resulting in the amputation of his left foot.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF J. B. WATERMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2742) for the relief of J. B. Waterman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like some explanation of this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to ask for the discharge of the committee from further consideration of the bill H. R. 2742, and have substituted in place of it the bill S. 1059.

The SPEAKER. No unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of the bill. The gentleman from Washington asks for an explanation of it.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the relief of J. B. Waterman, postmaster at Belpre, Ohio. There were several robberies of the post office, and this is for a particular robbery in 1911, when money and stamps to the value of $483.25 were taken. Mr. Waterman was ill at the time. He was the postmaster and, of course, reimbursed the Government after the robbery. The post office was in charge of two clerks, and affidavits that are in the report state that these stamps and money were put in the safe and that the safe was locked when they left the office. When the clerks returned the next morning they found that the stamps and the money were missing. They instituted a search around the building and also made other observations, and they could not find where anyone had entered the building except through the door, likely by the use of a skeleton key. But the safe had been opened and the money and the stamps were missing.

As I have said, Mr. Waterman was ill at the time and absent. This is the report that was given by those who were in charge of the post office and by the village marshal, so far as he knew anything about it. This is in the usual form, I think, of bills to reimburse postmasters under similar circumstances. I should like to say in addition that this bill has twice passed the Senate. During the Sixty-sixth Congress it was introduced by our distinguished President, who was then a Senator from Ohio, and it passed the Senate, and just the other day the bill introduced by Senator WILLIS for the same purpose also passed the Senate, the one that the chairman of the committee asks to have substituted.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Was this safe locked?

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. That is the testimony of the clerk.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Was it blown?

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. It was not blown. It was doubtless opened by some one familiar with the opening of safes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is the House bill. The gentleman asked unanimous consent to substitute a Senate bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. I ask for the consideration of the bill S. 1059 in lieu of the bill H. R. 2742.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1059) for the relief of J. B. Waterman.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. B. Waterman, of Belpre, Ohio, the sum of $483.25, being the amount paid the Government by him for that value of stamps and money taken from his custody as postmaster of Belpre, Ohio, by burglars, on February 13, 1911.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: Line 4, after the word "directed," add a comma and the following: "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the House bill of similar tenor on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PAN AMERICAN PETROLEUM & TRANSPORT CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9866) authorizing the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. to sue the United States to recover damages resulting from collision.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in conformity with the others, I would like to have some explanation of this bill, and I think the Members of the House would.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the usual bills that the House has passed any number of in connection with collisions. The bill is in the usual form. The Secretary of the Navy says:

As it appears that the naval vessel was responsible for the collision and the resulting damages to the Doheny, it is believed that the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., the owner of the damaged vessel, is entitled to have its claim passed on by a court of law, and it is respectfully recommended that bill H. R. 9866 receive favorable action.

Mr. MILLER. That is all the committee is trying to do—to put the matter into court, to have it passed on according to law?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, I have thought that right here might be a good time and place to state to the House the policy of the committee on measures of this kind. When any person comes before the committee and asks for the right to bring an action against the United States Government in order to determine the justice of a claim, the subcommittee of which I have the honor to be chairman has made an affirmative report on every request of that kind. We are not familiar with the facts at all. There is nothing given to the committee, but the privilege is asked to bring suit against the Government and have the case taken to the Court of Claims.

I think it is only a matter of right, but they are required, of course, to pursue the course laid down by the laws of our country. I believe that in all of these cases the committee is justified in permitting the claimant to bring his action before the proper tribunal of this Government in order to determine whether or not the claim has any merit, just as a citizen can sue another citizen. We give anybody the right to bring his action. As one who believes the Government ought to come into court with clean hands, I for one am always in favor of allowing claimants to bring suit against the Government when permission to do so is requested under the usual conditions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman says the committee knew nothing of the facts. I assume, of course, that the committee inquired enough to ascertain that there was some shadow of a claim?

Mr. ROSE. Oh, yes. I would not have the gentleman from Tennessee understand that the committee had not received information from the claimants. They have always stated in their report the reason for asking the amount, and the committee, of course, have considered the reports that are given to them, showing upon what ground the claim is made, and usually we have a report from the department of the Government affected, in which they tell us that the Government in many instances is responsible for the accident. In this particular case we have that information from the proper department of the Government affected, showing that the negligence was on the part of the Government vessel.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that I was sure that the practice the gentleman stated is the practice of the subcommittee, but I feared that his former statement to the country might be construed to mean that when anybody came along and said, "I want to sue the Government," the committee would say, "All right."

Mr. ROSE. I thank the gentleman for mentioning it. I did not intend to convey any impression of that kind. I am sure all the Members of the House know that something must be presented to the committee to warrant a finding, and that we depend largely upon the written opinions of the heads of the various departments of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOWELL). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business in the city and county of Los Angeles, in the State of California, owner of the oil tank steamer Edward L. Doheny, Jr., for damages caused by collision between said vessel and the torpedo-boat destroyer Henley, a naval vessel belonging to the United States, in the North Atlantic Ocean in the neighborhood of Fenwick Shoal Light Vessel, on or about the 14th day of July, 1918, may be sued for and submitted to the United States District Court in and for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court in admiralty and acting under the rules in admiralty governing said court, in an action in which said Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. is hereby authorized to commence against the United States for the recovery of said damages. Said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said action and enter its judgment or decree therein for the amount of such damages, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of said Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., or against the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and according to the measure of liability prevailing in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same right of appeal: Provided, That such notice of said action shall be given upon or after the commencement of said action to the Attorney General of the United States, as may be provided by order of said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General upon receipt of such notice to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear for and defend the United States in such action: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF WALTHILL, NEBR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8186) for the relief of the First National Bank of Walthill, Thurston County, State of Nebraska.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice and take its place on the calendar.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OWNER OF THE DERRICK "CAPITOL."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1767) for the relief of the owner of the derrick Capitol.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think an explanation should be given of this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, this is exactly on a par with the other case. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt, writing to the committee under date of November 6, 1919, states:

The bill (S. 3293)) inclosed with your letter of November 1, 1919, has for its sole purpose the authorization of a suit against the United States on account of damages sustained by the derrick scow Capitol while being towed by the United States Navy tug No. 80, and it in no sense admits liability on the part of the Government. Without admitting liability of the Government the department is of the opinion that the claimant company is equitably entitled to have its claim adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MILLER. The title of the bill is different from that of the preceding bill. This is a bill for the relief of the owners. The other was a bill authorizing the bringing of a suit. Should not the title be corrected if the object is the same in both cases?

Mr. EDMONDS. Either form has been used before, and it has seemed to make no difference. That question has never been raised before.

Mr. WALSH. The title is not a part of the bill anyway.

Mr. EDMONDS. The owners are really asking for the right to bring suit. It does not give them any relief unless they get a verdict.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the derrick Capitol, arising out of collision while in tow of the United States Navy tug No. 89 on April 3, 1919, at Harlem River, N. Y., for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said derrick Capitol by reason of damages to said derrick, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owner of the said derrick Capitol or against the owner of said derrick Capitol in favor of the United States, and upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

STEAMER "MAYFLOWER."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4365) for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Navy Department is not willing to admit that there was any liability or responsibility on the part of the Government vessel, the L-10, which, I believe, was a submarine. I believe this accident occurred during a dense fog in Boston Harbor or in Nantasket Roads. I should like to ask if the committee are satisfied, from the circumstances as stated by the Navy Department, that there was such negligence or culpability on the part of the parties in charge of this submarine as to make the case one which should be referred to the courts?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, of course it is impossible for the committee to decide which vessel was at fault where a controversy arises as to how two ships were running at sea. It appears that the Navy Department contend that they were right and the owners of the steamship Mayflower contend that they were right. There is no way of having that question adjudicated unless we allow it to go to the court, so that it may be settled conclusively.

The department has not acknowledged responsibility for the collision nor assumed liability for the damages suffered by the Mayflower or by any of her passengers, but as the bill H. R. 4365 proposes to refer the claims to a Federal court to be determined, it is respectfully recommended that it be given favorable consideration.

That is the statement in the report. Of course, it is absolutely impossible for the committee to find out which ship was improperly handled in a collision at sea.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the attitude of the committee that if there is responsibility on the part of this submarine for this injury the owners of the steamboat should have the right to go in and have their damages recovered, but that the passengers on that steamboat must suffer whatever injury they received without any recompense?

Mr. EDMONDS. The relationship of the passengers to the collision is entirely different from that of the two boats. The passengers, of course, have their opportunity to collect from the steamer. Whether the steamer could pass that damage along to the Government in event the Government was found to be at fault I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman state that the passengers can collect from the steamer if the steamer was not at fault?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the steamer was not at fault I presume that the damage would be passed along to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. To the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would presume so. I presume that the court in hearing the case would take up all the facts.

Mr. WALSH. But you have stricken out that part of the bill which provides for the hearing of the claims of the passengers.

Mr. EDMONDS. We do not want the court to hear the claims of the passengers until there is a determination which of the steamers was to blame.

Mr. WALSH. Apparently the Navy Department contends, from its letters signed by the Secretary, that the submarine was not at fault?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Now, suppose that the district court finds that the submarine was at fault. Is it the gentleman's position that the passengers must then come in and file individual claims?

Mr. EDMONDS. The passengers can not file claims against the Government. They will file claims against their own steamer.

Mr. WALSH. Supposing their own steamer was not at fault, to whom are the passengers to look?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. That is just what I am emphasizing, that here is a claim against the Government of the United States because some property has been damaged, and you are permitting the owner of the property to go into the United States district court on the theory that a Government officer was negligible, whereas if some passengers were injured in that same accident and by reason of that same negligence those passengers have got to whistle.

Mr. MANN. Surely the gentleman will recall that it never has been the policy of the Government to permit people to sue the Government for personal injuries, and it is not now the policy of the Government and will not be begun with this bill, I take it.

Mr. WALSH. I think that has been changed by legislation.

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. WALSH. Since we have been operating the Shipping Board.

Mr. MANN. They may sue the Shipping Board. I do not know whether it will come at some time, but it has not come yet. The Government would be at the mercy of friendly juries throughout the country if a man in any locality could sue the Government for $50,000 for personal injuries caused by the negligence of some Government officer.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the Government is at the mercy of a friendly jury in a case of injury to a steamboat amounting to $11,000 or $12,000.

Mr. MANN. This case may not be heard by a jury. It is an admiralty case.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROSE. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts take the position that the owners of this vessel that was injured should be deprived of the right of bringing their action before a proper tribunal to determine the facts of the case?

Mr. WALSH. No; I am not taking any position.

Mr. ROSE. To go one step further, this committee has not been called upon with respect to any damage done to the passengers.

Mr. WALSH. The committee was called upon because it was contained in the original bill and the committee struck it out.

Mr. ROSE. When it was presented we took the ground, as the chairman has already said, that it might be well to determine whether or not the Government was at fault in this instance before we considered the claims of the passengers.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman means to let the court determine it?

Mr. ROSE. Yes; for the reason that they did not have the right as individuals to sue the Government; neither does the resident of any State have the right to sue the State government without an act of the legislature. This is the only means provided by which claimants against the Government can have their claims adjusted.

Mr. WALSH. I am in favor of the gentleman's amendment, but I wanted the theory or policy upon which the committee was operating. I predict that if the Government is found at fault this committee will be passing on the claims for injury received in the collision by individuals.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill S. 1813 instead of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill instead of the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the steamer Mayflower rising out of a collision between said steamer and the United States submarine L–10 in President Roads, Boston Harbor, on the 11th day of August, 1917, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said steamer Mayflower through damage to and detention of said steamer Mayflower, may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts, the district in which said collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty: Provided, That the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to consider the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "and detention of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the House bill was laid on the table.

FRANK W. KNIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8374) for the relief of the estate of Frank W. Knight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from some Member who knows the facts.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have the report in my hand, but I am not acquainted with the circumstances. It was reported by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this man, Frank W. Knight, was employed in the Revenue Service. He was ordered to lead a posse to raid a certain still which they knew was being operated at some place in the hills. He lead the posse, and in that raid he was shot, and died from the effects of it. He lived 30 days. He was a high-class man, faithful to the service, and efficient. He died in the discharge of his public duty.

Mr. MILLER. Who shot him, the resisting party?

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Yes. They did not know the particular man who shot him. There were a number of men connected with it. The leader of the resisting party was a notorious man by the name of Harmon, and the presumption was that he was shot by Harmon.

Mr. MANN. They may not have known, but they sent him to the penitentiary for 20 years [laughter] for having killed a man.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Then they knew. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMONDS. This is the customary way in which the committee has handled these cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Frank W. Knight, of Cary, Wake County, N. C., the sum of $1,500, on account of the death of said Knight while in the discharge of his duty as posseman under the collector of internal revenue for the eastern district of North Carolina.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania—I may be in error about the matter, but I have an impression that in cases of this sort the committee has been allowing more than $1,500.

Mr. EDMONDS. The committee has allowed a year's salary; that has been the custom.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BELL OF THE WRECKED CRUISER "MILWAUKEE."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1733) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the president of the Milwaukee Press Club, of Milwaukee, Wis., the bell of the wrecked cruiser Milwaukee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the president of Milwaukee Press Club, Milwaukee, Wis., for the use of the said press club, the bell of the wrecked cruiser Milwaukee, said bell now being in storage at the Mare Island Navy Yard: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States through the delivery of said bell.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DARROW, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2004. An act for the relief of Frank Ferrin;

H. R. 927. An act for the relief of Capt. Fred S. Johnston;

H. R. 2393. An act to provide for the establishment on the Mississippi River of a fish-rescue station, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce;

H. R. 8342. An act to empower the Attorney General of the United States to fix the compensation of clerks of the United States district courts;

H. R. 5762. An act providing for a municipal park for the city of Butte, Mont.;

H. R. 9710. An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, North Dakota and South Dakota;

H. R. 3057. An act for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown;

H. R. 8460. An act to authorize the occupation and use of certain lands in Alaska by Ketchikan Post No. 3, American Legion, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7234. An act for the relief of Miles Swift; and

H. R. 3270. An act for the relief of Estella Barnett.

MATTIE ALEXANDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 8845 for the relief of Mattie Alexander.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the House is entitled to some statement regarding the merits of this measure.

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall issue a patent to Mattie Alexander for the north half of the northeast quarter of fractional section 35, township 17 north, range 14 east, St. Stephens meridian, survey in Alabama. Miss Alexander is about the twelfth or fourteenth person who has had possession of this land in the last 100 years under color of title. There seems to have been an inaccuracy in the early records of the Land Office with respect to this section of land, 35. This fractional section contains less than 640 acres of land by reason of the meandering line of the Alabama River on one side of it, which makes it small. It appears from the statement of the Acting Secretary of the Interior that one entry which referred to this land as fraction A was, in fact, identical with and intended to cover the northeast quarter of the land, although the description "fraction A" was somewhat indefinite. For that reason the department is of opinion that although the record of the Land Office does not show that the northeast quarter was actually patented originally, yet the conflict in interest tends to show that it was the purpose of the Land Office to include and it did include this northeast quarter of the section under the description "fraction A" instead of making it the northeast of the southeast quarter. The land was first patented in 1819, the year Alabama was admitted into the Union. The first patent carried the whole section. Then the first entryman transferred to a man whose name I do not remember, but the second owner of the land secured the whole section. He then relinquished all of the land except the fractional southeast quarter of it, and returned it to the Government. Of course, that return would have carried the northeast quarter to the Government, but later on, he having specifically reserved the southeast quarter, the Government then issued him a patent to fraction A, the southeast quarter of the land, which he already had.

There was no question about his having owned it, and it is the opinion of the department, as I read from the report—

There is reason, however, to believe that this last-named tract, fractional northeast quarter, was intended to be covered by the credit system certificate and patent of Bonnell, above referred to. The acreage given in that certificate and in the patent more closely approximates the area of the east half northwest quarter and the fractional northeast quarter than it does the east half northwest quarter and the southeast quarter. Then, too, there is the conflict as to the southeast quarter, as the entries now stand, and the further fact that there is no entry of record for the fractional northeast quarter.

Then in the communication of Mr. Finney, the Acting Secretary of the Interior, we find the following:

It appearing from the records of the General Land Office that Bonnell received a patent for the SE. ¼, while Cottrell received one for lot A, practically the same land, and that there is no entry for the N. ½ NE. ¼, it was assumed that one of these entries was intended to cover the last described tract, of which Miss Alexander appears to be in possession under color of title, but the proof of title furnished the office was not sufficient to warrant the amendment of either of the entries. Hence the department knows of no reason why the proposed bill should not be enacted into law.

Mr. MILLER. Are there any conflicting rights in this case?

Mr. BOWLING. There are no conflicting rights. I have in my possession an abstract of title which traces it from 1819 to Miss Alexander, and this includes 60.69 acres of land, a part of a tract of land of about 800 acres which she owns. There is no conflict of ownership at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue a patent to Mattie Alexander for the north half of the northeast quarter of fractional section 35, township 17 north, range 14 east, St. Stevens meridian, survey in Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOWLING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOSEPH ZITEK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8448) for the relief of Joseph Zitek.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the House is entitled to some explanation of the measure.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

F. E. TAYLOR AND B. C. BROOM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8767) for the relief of F. E. Taylor and B. C. Broom.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that in this bill the committee carries a small sum for compensation for personal injuries. Upon what theory was the award made?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the theory was based upon the facts in the matter. These two men were injured through no fault of their own. An Army truck, driven by a civilian employee, came down one of the main streets in this town and the chain of the tailboard was hanging loose, with a hook on the end of the chain. It caught in the spokes of the wheels of a buggy that had been pulled up as near the curbing as possible to get out of the way of the truck. The buggy was dragged for some 50 feet, was wrecked, and the horse was injured, and the two men who were in the buggy at the time of the accident were also injured.

Both of these men showed a commendable spirit in not asking for large damages, but for just the amount which would recompense them for their doctors' bills, and nothing for loss of time, except in the case of Mr. Taylor, where the amount asked is about $500. The man's knee was severely injured, his leg was broken, and he was laid up for three months. He asked for $500. The committee thought from the reports received and the investigation that was made that it was a very reasonable amount. The other man asked for $100, and on my recommendation that was reduced to $50, the committee thinking that he had not suffered more than that amount of damages.

Mr. WALSH. How much of this is for damage to the horse and buggy?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Sixty-five dollars.

Mr. WALSH. The horse and buggy were owned by Mr. Taylor?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The horse and buggy were owned by Mr. Taylor.

Mr. WALSH. And this was upon a public highway?

Mr. UNDERHILL. One of the main streets of the town. They could not get further out of the way on account of the curbing.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to F. E. Taylor the sum of $565 as compensation for personal injuries and damages to horse and buggy sustained by being run into from the rear by a United States Army truck belonging to Company 47, then stationed at Camp Greene, Charlotte, N. C.; and to B. C. Broom the sum of $100 as compensation for personal injuries sustained in the same manner.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 10, strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$50."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERHILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ZAH BARMON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7425) for the relief of Zah Barmon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Zah Barmon, of Spokane, Wash., doing business under the trade name of "Mikes' Trading Store," the sum of $3,625, to reimburse her for said amount of money deposited by her in connection with a bid submitted for certain surplus property advertised for sale by the Surplus Property Division of the War Department and erroneously covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRADLEY SYKES.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 540) for the relief of Bradley Sykes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have an explanation of this bill. The last bill was by my colleague, and, of course, it illustrates the teamwork of the Washington delegation.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman let the last bill pass without even a report from the War Department.

Mr. MILLER. I think that further illustrates the teamwork of the Washington delegation.

Mr. MANN. I notice; the rest of us had better get busy.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, Bradley Sykes, the party injured in this case, was crossing a Chicago street at a crossing, and as she approached the middle of the street she stopped at or about the middle of the street watching several automobiles moving in the street across her path from the west, when a truck belonging to the Post Office Department and driven by one of its employees, approaching at a very rapid rate from the other direction, struck her as she stood about the middle of the street waiting to proceed, knocked her down, injured, and disabled her for some nine months, causing her to spend a large amount, as shown in the bill, for medical expenses, hospital treatment, and other incidental items. It appears to be a case of very gross negligence on the part of the driver of the truck and no fault on the part of the claimant. The items constituting the amount of the claim have been gone into carefully by the committee. We are convinced that the claim is just and the amount reasonable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Bradley Sykes, for injuries sustained as the result of being struck by a Government-owned automobile in Chicago on June 28, 1920.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,727."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Box, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CORA T. DERING.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5668) for the relief of Cora T. Dering.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think there ought to be some explanation of this bill, as I think the House would like to have it.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I shall be very happy to inform the gentleman from Washington. This is a case of a man who was sitting in his own house, in his own dining room, when a rifle in the hands of a soldier in the Federal service was discharged and this man, John Dering, was killed. This was on April 7, 1917, just before the declaration of war. This soldier was a member of the National Guard and had been called into the Federal service a day or two before. It was the accidental discharge of a rifle in the hands of a soldier guarding a bridge and, as I say, killed this man who was sitting in his own dining room, and, in accordance with the judgment of the Committee on Claims, I am inclined to believe that even though a man may be a citizen of the United States perhaps he is entitled to as much protection as if he came from Japan or Cuba.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Cora T. Dering, of Sullivan County, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for herself and in behalf of her children, the sum of $57.50 per month for a period of 10 years, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the loss by death of her husband, John Dering, caused by carelessness in the use of a rifle or other firearm issued to Private John T. Kelley, while on duty as guard in the service of the United States at Callicoon, N. Y., on or about the 7th day of April, 1917, said compensation to be payable from and after April 7, 1917: Provided, That the said money shall be applied to the support of the widow and the said children during their respective minorities, but if she again marries the entire amount thereafter shall be used by her for the benefit of the minor children, and if the mother dies the money shall be paid the oldest child for the minors.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "appropriated," strike out "for herself and in behalf of her children the sum of $57.50 per month for a period of 10 years" and insert in lieu thereof "the sum of $5,000."

Page 2, line 1, after the figures "1917," strike out the remainder of the bill.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

G. C. CALDWELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7052) for the relief of G. C. Caldwell.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to G. C. Caldwell, out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $132.85 for damages to his automobile by an Army truck belonging to the Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULMER a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANNE C. SHYMER.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6134) for the relief of the estate of Anne C. Shymer.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a claim for loss of jewelry on the Lusitania?

Mr. EDMONDS. It occurred through the sinking of the Lusitania.

Mr. MANN. It did not occur through the sinking of the Lusitania; that is not the way——

Mr. EDMONDS. The loss occurred in the Consular Service; they are holding jewelry taken off the body of somebody sunk with the Lusitania. It is something like the house that Jack built.

Mr. WALSH. Well, as I understand it, this lady was a passenger on the Lusitania. She had some very valuable jewels. The steamer was torpedoed and sunk, and when her body was recovered the American consular or diplomatic officer took charge of this jewelry. They endeavored to transmit it by mail, and it was lost, or was lost in transit between one place and another, was it not?

Mr. EDMONDS. It was evidently lost in the consul general's office in London, as near as can be ascertained. It was transmitted by the consul at Cork to the office in London. There is no record of it after leaving the London office.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. There is a record of its having been placed in a sealed pouch of the Consular Service.

Mr. EDMONDS. But no record after that.

Mr. WALSH. It says that the department has no record of having received such a package in the pouch from London.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The record is they were placed in the pouch.

Mr. WALSH. The American consul at Queenstown, Cork, was instructed by mail to endeavor to trace the package. The list of the jewelry is set out, and they evidently have been unable to verify——

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman is mistaken there. At the bottom of page 1 of the report you will notice that Leslie E. Reed, the American vice consul at London, wrote to Miss Justice:

At the request of the American consul at Cork, Ireland, the consul general has to-day forwarded to you, in care of the Department of State, a small parcel containing jewelry which formely belonged to Mrs. R. D. Shymer, who, I am informed, was one of the unfortunate Lusitania victims.

The record seems to have been lost after leaving the consul general's office in London.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Yes; it was placed in the sealed pouch.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield so that I may ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Who is to be the beneficiary of this legislation?

Mr. EDMONDS. Miss Maibelle Heikus Justice, of New York.

Mr. MILLER. A daughter?

Mr. EDMONDS. A sister.

Mr. MILLER. Now, would she be the heir at law?

Mr. EDMONDS. I presume so.

Mr. MILLER. Are there any children or direct heirs?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think so. It is supposed to be given to a legal representative.

Mr. MILLER. What is the amount?

Mr. EDMONDS. We gave $3,900. We arrived at that by a different valuation of the jewelry. The heirs valued the jewelry at the new, higher price. We had the estimate made on the price of the jewelry at the time it was purchased, and we gave them that.

Mr. MILLER. What is the explanation of this property being missing? Is there a thief in the service, or was there an accident?

Mr. EDMONDS. Nobody can tell that. There is no report about it. All that is known is that the consul at Cork, without legal responsibility, as near as I can find out, but with absolute moral responsibility, took possession of these jewels. He put them in a package and sent them to the consul general in London.

Mr. MILLER. Through the mails?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know whether it was or not. But the jewelry arrived at London. It is so acknowledged. Application was made by Miss Justice for this property, probably after some search by the department. I do not know as to that. Mr. Reed, I think it was, put this package in the mail in a sealed form. Now, we do not know any further than that. It did not arrive on this side.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield further for a short question?

Mr. EDMONDS. Surely.

Mr. MILLER. This property was lost in the mails between England and the United States?

Mr. EDMONDS. Probably in the diplomatic pouch.

Mr. MILLER. Is there no system of recovery from the parties transporting the mails?

Mr. EDMONDS. If it was sent in a sealed diplomatic pouch I doubt if anybody would be responsible for it except the Department of State. Surely no foreign government, or even our own Government, could open a diplomatic pouch until it arrived at the Department of State.

The question you gentlemen have to decide is this: There may be a consular regulation requiring a consul to take charge of an American citizen who dies abroad within his jurisdiction. There is a law on the statute books that the consul shall take possession of the effects of a sailor who dies at a foreign port—an American sailor. I say there may be a regulation, but there is no law that I can find that makes us responsible for an accommodation we are doing for somebody in sending their property forward in case of death. However, the United States Government took possession of this property. They forwarded it to the State Department to be forwarded to the heirs. The property has disappeared. It is acknowledged that it has disappeared, and it is now up to the House to decide as to whether they desire to pay the value of the property to heirs of the party who lost it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6134) for relief of estate of Anne C. Shymer.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the personal representatives, for the next of kin, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,000, as full compensation for the loss of jewelry, the property of Anne C. Shymer, who was lost in the sinking of the Lusitania, which jewelry was transmitted to the State Department in a sealed Government pouch by the consul general at London, and was lost upon its receipt at the department.

Also, the following committee amendments were read:

Line 4, strike out the words "personal representatives, for the next of kin" and insert: "legal representatives of the estate of Anne C. Shymer."

In line 7 strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,900."

Line 8, after the word "of," insert "the aforesaid."

Line 10, after the words "State Department," strike out: "in a sealed Government pouch by the consul general at London."

Line 12, strike out "upon its receipt at the department," and insert in lieu thereof "in transit."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ED. E. RICHARDSON CO. (INC.).

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2147) to authorize patent to the Ed. E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) of certain lands.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to patent to the Ed. E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) lot 2, section 26, and lots 2 and 5, section 27, township 18 north, range 10 east, Louisiana meridian, embracing 104.81 acres, upon payment to the Government of $1.25 per acre, lands which they and their grantors have occupied under claim and color of title and open and notorious possession for 50 years: Provided, That proper application for the purchase of these lands be filed hereunder in the district land office within six months from the passage of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale is made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LEO N. LEVI MEMORIAL HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2186) granting certain lands in Hot Springs, Ark., to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the exclusive right to use, occupy, and enjoy the possession of all of lots Nos. 1 and 2, in block No. 114, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark., is by this act granted to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Arkansas, for the purpose of erecting and maintaining thereon an addition to or extension of its present hospital building, located on adjoining lots, Nos. 3 and 4, in said block 114, in said city of Hot Springs, Ark. The rights and privileges granted under this act shall continue as long as the property is used and occupied for the purposes mentioned in this act, subject, however, to the following conditions and limitations, namely, that unless said Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association shall within five years after the passage of this act erect and equip a suitable and sightly addition to or extension of its present hospital building, or if said Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association shall at any time hereafter use or permit the premises to be used for any other purpose than that herein granted, or if at any time pay wards are maintained in any buildings erected upon the lots hereby granted, then and in either event all the rights, privileges, and powers by this act granted and conferred upon said association shall be forfeited to the United States.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 1, line 4, insert, after the word "possession," the words "for hospital purposes."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committe amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOSEPH ROBICHEAU.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 463) granting a patent to Joseph Robicheau.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to Joseph Robicheau to the following land: Northwest quarter of the southeast quarter and south half of the southeast quarter section 27, and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter section 34, township 47 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, Coeur d'Alene (Idaho) land district.

With a committee amendment as follows:

In line 9, after the colon, insert "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to interfere with or defeat any sale heretofore made by the Forest Service of timber upon the land herein granted."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROSEN REICHARDT BROKERAGE CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 157) for the relief of the Rosen Reichardt Brokerage Co., of St. Louis, Mo.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Rosen Reichardt Brokerage Co., of St. Louis, Mo., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $372.24, the same being a refund of duty paid on certain walnuts imported on December 15, 1915, and covered by New York warehouse bond No. 88451.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OWNER OF THE STEAM LIGHTER "CORNELIA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1814) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia rising out of a collision between said steam lighter and the United States destroyer Bell in Broad Sound, Boston Harbor, Mass., on the 9th day of August, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said steam lighter Cornelia by reason of damages to and detention of or the loss of said steam lighter, her boats, engines, boilers, tackle, apparel, furniture, and supplies, may be submitted to the United States Court for the District of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "and detention of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMERICUS ENFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10179) for the relief of Americus Enfield.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Americus Enfield, postmaster at Bedford, Pa., in the sum of $41,148.94, due to the United States on account of war-savings stamps and postage stamps which were lost as the result of burglary of said post office on November 7, 1918.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, I think it well to bring to the attention of the House a few remarks in connection with this bill. It is for the relief of Americus Enfield, postmaster at Bedford, the county seat of one of the counties I have the honor to represent. I would like to say for the benefit of the membership of the House that I am acquainted with the postmaster and have known him for many years. He is beyond the age of 70 years. He is a man of exceedingly high standing in the community, and so far as I can learn has discharged his duties as postmaster to the satisfaction of the patrons of the office.

Mr. EDMONDS. He is a Democrat?

Mr. ROSE. Yes; I will admit that he is a Democrat and that his commission will expire during the present year. It is altogether likely that he will not be reappointed should an appointment be made while I have the honor of serving the district. Mr. Enfield is too big a man to expect it. Following the burglary a very searching and comprehensive examination was made, and it was plainly shown by the evidence that neither the postmaster nor any of the clerks employed in the office was guilty of negligence. A voluminous report was made to the Postmaster General, a copy of which is attached to the report of the committee, and I suggest that if further information be desired that it can be easily obtained by a perusal of the report mentioned. Under existing law the department is without power to bring relief to Postmaster Enfield, for the reason that the amount involved exceeds the sum of $10,000, and hence it is Mr. Enfield is obliged to ask for relief at the hands of Congress. I am firmly convinced that the claim is meritorious and that the high standing and integrity of Postmaster Enfield have not been questioned. With these few words, I ask for favorable consideration of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the House out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, at the time of the debate on the adjusted compensation bill for the soldiers, commonly called the bonus bill, the prediction was several times made that the result of the passage of the bill would be to depress the value of national securities. Nevertheless the bill passed the House and is likely to soon pass the Senate. In the meantime the market value of United States bonds has been going up every day.

It was also predicted that the passage of the bill would make money rates higher and that the Government would have difficulty in borrowing money as cheaply as before. Since the passage of the bill the Government has marketed its short-time certificates at 3¼ per cent, the lowest rate at any time since the European war broke out. This is another dire prediction that has not been fulfilled. The Government has since the war reduced our national obligations three and a half billions of dollars and at the same time the taxes have been greatly lowered. A Government that can do this will have no trouble in finding means to pay the adjusted compensation in 20 years.

Mr. Speaker, the original bonus bill, passed two years ago, provided for the payment of the compensation for the soldiers in cash if desired. Upon its reconsideration, my committee concluded that the Government was not in a position to pay all this compensation in a short time and the committee also had doubts whether this would be the best plan for the soldiers themselves. At the same time the committee realized it was necessary to devise some plan whereby the soldier in need could obtain assistance when necessary. While the Ways and Means Committee was considering this feature of the case my colleague, Mr. HULL, appeared before it and stated that, as the soldiers were to receive what was practically a paid-up endowment insurance policy, if the certificate was given a loan value, with proper restrictions, the difficulties in the situation would be overcome. My recollection is that he was the first to mention this plan, the details of which he left for the committee to work out. The committee accordingly considered this proposition and found it could be worked out satisfactorily. From it there was evolved the bank loan plan which forms so important a feature of the bonus bill, and my colleague is entitled to great credit for having presented it to the committee.

Money is now getting so much easier that many of the banks in the East have more than they can place upon absolutely secure loans like those provided for by this feature of the bill and even in the West, where the banks have been harder pressed, there is no longer any talk that they can not easily furnish the money for their share of these loans. It is not likely that the certificates can be issued much before the beginning of the next year if the bill becomes a law, as it will take several months to organize the proper force to issue these certificates. I predict that by that time most of the banks will be glad to get these loans which have the Government guaranty back of them.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. I followed very closely the debates in the House on the subject of the soldiers' bonus bill. Nearly all the speeches which referred to the matter prophesied that if the bill finally became a law it would depreciate the Liberty bonds. The mere passage of the bill through the House did not have that effect. The bill has not passed the Senate yet or been signed by the President of the United States. I renew the prediction here that the passage of that bill will depreciate every Liberty bond in the Republic.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MICHIGAN BOULEVARD BUILDING CO.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5918) for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, how did the committee arrive at this amount? I notice that they have practically cut it in half.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that the committee arrived at the amount by deducting a claim made by the owners of the building for 18 months' rent, and allowing them for only 5 months' rent instead of 18 months.

Mr. WALSH. That accounts for the deduction?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, do pay to the Michigan Boulevard Building Co., a corporation of Chicago, of the State of Illinois, the sum of $18,931.69 in full satisfaction of all claims of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co. growing out of or pertaining to the occupancy of office space in the building of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co., at the southwest corner of Washington Street and Michigan Avenue, in the city of Chicago, by the War Department for Central Department headquarters during the period from December 15, 1917, to November 30, 1918, both inclusive.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$36,931.69" and insert "$18,931.69."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SETH J. HARRIS ET AL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2694) for the relief of Seth J. Harris, Jimmie Lou Martin, Mary Holloman, and William Henry Coleman.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, through the United States Employee's Compensation Commission, to pay to the following-named persons the sums designated as compensation for personal injury and death suffered through the explosion of a certain shell fired by the student officers of Fort McPherson, Atlanta, Ga., on the south side of Kenesaw Mountain, Cobb County, Ga., on August 8, 1917:

To Jimmie Lou Martin, on account of the death of her husband, Charlie Martin, the sum of $35 per month until her remarriage or death, and $3.50 additional per month for each of her six minor children; and in the event of the remarriage or death of said Jimmie Lou Martin payments on account of said minor children shall be paid to their guardian or guardians until such time as they shall have reached the age of 18 years, respectively.

To Mary Holloman, on account of the death of her husband, James Holloman, the sum of $35 per month until her remarriage or death, and $3.50 additional per month for each of her two minor children; and in the event of the remarriage or death of said Mary Holloman payments on account of said minor children shall be paid to their guardian or guardians until such time as they shall have reached the age of 18 years, respectively.

To William Henry Coleman, for personal injuries, the sum of $300.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "years" insert "monthly compensation to commence from the date of the accident."

Page 2, line 12, after the word "respectively" insert "monthly compensation to commence from the date of the accident."

Page 2, line 21, after the word "respectively" insert "monthly compensation to commence from the date of the accident."

Mr. MANN. Of course, these bills are somewhat new. I do not know whether this form has been recommended by the Compensation Commission, though I somewhat doubt it. The Compensation Commission is not under the Treasury Department, is it?

Mr. COLE of Iowa. No; it is separate.

Mr. WALSH. It is not under any executive department.

Mr. MANN. Why should we say—

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, through the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to pay—certain money? Why should we not say that the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be directed to pay? Would not that be better? Then I take it that they would pay the money out of the annual appropriation which is made for the payment of compensation.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. This does not come under the Compensation Commission. This happened before the Compensation Commission was created.

Mr. MANN. That is all true.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. We simply want to make it appear that we intend to bring this under the compensation act, and we simply want the Treasury to use this commission as the means of making the payment.

Mr. MANN. It is just as easy to direct the Compensation Commission directly to pay the compensation as it is to go through the circumlocution of saying that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay through the Compensation Commission.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not know that that can be done.

Mr. MANN. I know it can be done if we direct it to be done by law.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Well, it rests with the House to declare what policy they desire to pursue in these bills based on the compensation tables that the committee will bring in from time to time. If the House prefers to have the Compensation Commission pay them directly from its appropriation, it makes little or no difference as far as the committee or the beneficiaries are concerned.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman expect we are going to make an appropriation every year for these items? Some years ago we provided for the payment of $1,500 a year to two Army officers and $1,200 to another, and every year we have had to carry those items in the Army appropriation bill, and nearly every year, not every year, for the last 15 or 20 years it has provoked discussion because Members did not know what it meant.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Personally, I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois is a mighty good one, and I would like to see it applied not only to this but to other bills of a similar character on the calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS. These people are not in the employ of the United States Government.

Mr. MANN. I understand that.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman is right, that we should say the commissioner is authorized to pay these people, and that would take care of the appropriation in the future.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the idea of the committee starting off on this policy of paying damages in monthly payments?

Mr. MANN. It is easy enough to explain in this case. Here are some colored people of the South, probably not very provident, who were killed under very distressing circumstances by men in gun practice. These are the young children. If you paid them a lump-sum appropriation, the chances are that some one would get it away from them inside of six months or a year, and it would be squandered.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. That is the very idea we had in mind.

Mr. WALSH. That is very considerate, of course. There may be white people where payments are made in lump sums and where people get it away from them. If we are going to do that—and it seems to be an anomaly to provide that the Employees' Compensation Commission should now be made the conduit through which payment should go to people who are not employees of the Government, and who are not subject to the rules and regulations of that commission with reference to Government employees to whom payments are made for injuries. If we are going to take over the Employees' Compensation Commission for that purpose, it seems to me it is going to require a lot of additional machinery.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it will require any additional machinery. These children are only to be paid while they are under 18 years of age.

Mr. WALSH. Some of these payments are to keep on until remarriage or death. Here is one payment to a wife.

Mr. MANN. It will not be long before she is remarried.

Mr. WALSH. She probably will not remarry and lose the revenue.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VINSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANNA M. TOBIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 2323.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I can not quite see how there is any obligation on the part of the Federal Government to pay for this damage. As I understand it, there was an offer to restore the property to its original condition, which was refused, although that is in dispute in the letter of the executrix of the estate. But why should the Government pay for damages of this sort, evidently inflicted by some men in the militia companies who came from New England?

Mr. BOX. The basis is that the men were in the militia service of the United States; they had access to this private property and were beyond the control of the officers, and it was not in the power of the people to protect it. They were there, and in various ways damaged the property to the extent represented in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. It was a sort of malicious mischief, apparently. Why should not the boys that inflicted the damage bear the burden of it? Why should the Government be responsible?

Mr. BOX. If the claimant is remitted to that, it is equivalent to a denial of relief.

Mr. WALSH. Even granting that, why should she then be permitted to collect from the Federal Government?

Mr. BOX. The theory on which the bill was introduced and, I presume, passed the Senate was that the soldiers were in the employ of the Federal Government, and not being properly controlled, damaged this private property.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think there was much theory on which it passed the Senate. This kind of measure passes the Senate sometimes without theory or anything else.

Mr. BOX. If there was no theory at the other end of the Capitol, on what principle would the gentleman say that these parties ought to bear this loss without fault on their part? The damage was done by our servants—men in our service—who were not controlled so as to prevent depredation on private property. Of course, it was done by soldiers in mass, and we do not know who they were. We have absolutely no recourse if the Government does not protect us. The gentleman can realize that the people who suffered this loss are absolutely without redress and without remedy. There is no protection at all.

Mr. WALSH. That is the reason they are coming to Uncle Sam.

Mr. BOX. Because he caused it.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, he did not cause it. This was not anything that was done in the line of duty by these young men. They broke some windows and wrote upon the wall and otherwise damaged the property. It is not anything that was done in the line of duty. Apparently they were out on a frolic, and because these people do not know who did it and they can not make the individuals compensate them they say, "Well, we will let the Federal Government pay it."

Mr. BOX. We do know that it would not have occurred if the Government had not established a military post there and if the men in the service had not depredated on the property. There are a great many cases, as the gentleman will recognize, in which the individuals are responsible and where the principle is also responsible. It is not contended here that there is absolute legal liability, as the gentleman will recognize.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this does not appeal to me as one of the claims that should be settled by the Federal Government, and therefore I object.

LIZZIE ASKELI.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3034) for the relief of Lizzie Askel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the sum of $5,000 to Lizzie Askel, widow of Charles Askel, and that the said sum is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendments:

Lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "Askel" and and insert in lieu thereof the words "Askeli."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how was the sum of $5,000 arrived at here?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the committee has tried to devise a uniform system for settling claims for personal damages. We have made some reports where the amount is less than $5,000, but that is because the claimant has drawn the bill for a lesser sum, and the committee did not feel justified in raising the amount. The committee has settled upon $5,000, not that they had any basis for settling on that amount but simply because it is the best thing that they could evolve—$5,000 in case of the death of an adult. We tried to base the amount as far as possible upon the table of rates of the workmen's compensation commissions, but in the State of Oregon had the workmen's compensation table of rates been used the widow of this man would have received at least $7,500. Having placed a limitation of $5,000 in case of death, the committee did not see that they could use that table of rates.

Mr. WALSH. Why is the payment to be made in a lump sum in this instance?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Because the people are fully able and competent to care for the amount invested, so that it may bring in some income, draw upon it for necessities, and, in addition to that, help pay for some land that the man had bought and partially paid for before his death.

Mr. WALSH. Earlier in the day a bill was passed where all those conditions would seemingly apply and the payment was made in the form of an annuity. Of course, if it is put in the form of an annuity and there is no provision for continuing the payment in case of death, sometimes it would not cost the Government so much.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think the gentleman is mistaken in regard to the conditions being the same. They are not the same in this case as in the previous case. In the previous case it was the judgment of the committee that the Workmen's Compensation Commission would be better able to see that justice was done than if the payment were made in a lump sum. In this instance a lump sum was almost necessary to assist in securing to this widow, in part at least, the support she would have had had her husband lived.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. When did the committee adopt the policy of $5,000 in case of death, if the gentleman recalls?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Soon after the first few meetings of the committee that question came before us. We had various bills in the committee asking for sums varying from less than $5,000 to $25,000.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means in this Congress?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Within the last year?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; so far as I know.

Mr. MANN. Previously the committee had adopted the policy of paying not to exceed a year's compensation to the beneficiaries of anyone who lost his life.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think probably the gentleman is right, but he does not go far enough. The year's compensation was laid down in the compensation law of 1908. That compensation law was abrogated by the law of 1916. So that in instances previous to the adoption of the law of 1916 when any case of death occurred we have used the provisions of the compensation law of 1908.

Mr. MANN. Neither compensation law governs the case. The law is not applicable in any case, because if it came within the compensation law it would not be here as a special bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. For a long time after I came here there was nothing paid in any of these cases. Then when they started in to pay these claims they put them in at various amounts, reporting bills which seldom passed for $5,000 or less. The committee then adopted the policy of paying one year's compensation, analogous to the compensation act. However, I am not complaining about the $5,000. I would like to make this suggestion, however. These bills are getting so now that they are presented by ambulance chasers, as we used to call them. Attorneys are interested in most of these bills. They take them on contingent fees, and an attorney can give considerable time to presenting a claim which may be $5,000 if he is to get one-half of it. I think there ought to be a policy adopted by the committee in reporting these bills which would limit the amount of money which can be paid for attorneys' fees.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I do not recall a case that this committee has reported favorably thus far this year where any attorney is interested in any way, shape, or manner.

Mr. MANN. That might all be, but I have several letters from attorneys interested in some of these bills.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Most every one thus far has been presented by the Member from the district in which the deceased lived.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that, but that does not interfere with an attorney being interested.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman from Illinois is absolutely right. There are attorneys in some of these claims and in this case he is Mr. William H. Powell, Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Oreg. It is only recently that the clerk of the committee and myself have been going over this matter with the idea of making provision for some limited fee.

Mr. MANN. I think that ought to be done. That ought to be the policy of the committee, as I do not think these attorneys ought to be allowed exorbitant fees, and in these cases the person will make most any kind of an arrangement on the basis of a contingent fee.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. ROACH. I could not hear the conversation, but did I understand the gentleman to state that the Committee on Claims at this session adopted a maximum of $5,000 in a death claim?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not absolutely $5,000 in all cases, but $5,000 is the maximum.

Mr. ROACH. That is what I say, that is the maximum amount?

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is the maximum amount.

Mr. ROACH. The Committee on Claims have adopted that amount in case of a death without any regard to the earning capacity of the deceased or the relative merits of the claim.

Mr. UNDERHILL. We put all on the same basis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the sum of $5,000 to Lizzie Askel, widow of Charles Askel, and that the said sum is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "Askel" and insert "Askeli"; page 1, line 5, strike out "Askel" and insert "Askeli."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Lizzie Askeli."

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OWNERS OF THE SCHOONER "HORATIO G. FOSS."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1817) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, arising out of a collision between said schooner and the United States collier Jupiter off Winter Quarter Light Vessel on the 18th day of May, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said schooner Horatio G. Foss by reason of damages to and detention of said schooner, may be submitted to the United States Court for the District of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court, sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "and detention of."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

KINEO TRUST CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8073) for the relief of the Kineo Trust Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to the Kineo Trust Co., of Dover, Me., a banking corporation existing by law, or its assigns, the amount of the principal and interest due it as owner of a lost, unregistered Treasury certificate of indebtedness, No. 6768, for $5,000, series T-10, issued September 15, 1919, due September 15, 1920, bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent, upon said bank or its assigns filing in the Treasury of the United States a bond in a penal sum double in amount of the lost Treasury certificate No. 6768 and the interest accrued thereon to the date of its maturity, with sufficient surety or sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury with conditions to indemnify and safeguard the United States from any claim upon said Treasury certificate of indebtedness No. 6768, the amount to be so paid, however, not to exceed the amount that would have been paid if the certificate of indebtedness had been presented in the Treasury of the United States, or any authorized agency, at the date of its maturity—

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "pay" strike out all down to and including the word "maturity," page 2, line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to the Kineo Trust Co., of Dover, Me., a banking corporation existing by law, or its assigns, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum from September 15, 1919, to September 15, 1920, the amount of the principal and interest due it as owner of a United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness of series T-10, No. 6768, dated September 15, 1919, and maturing March 15, 1920, of which the Kineo Trust Co. has established loss from its possession; and shall require the Kineo Trust Co. to furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury a bond in a penal sum of double the principal amount of the lost United States Treasury certificate and the interest accrued on such obligation, with such security or surety as the Secretary of the Treasury may require to indemnify the United States against any loss from any claim that may subsequently be made upon such lost United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness."

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, and that is to strike out the comma at the end of line 3.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: At the end of line 3, page 1, strike out the comma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2765) for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if there was carelessness on the part of the bank in guarding the bonds? I notice from the report that the bonds were kept in a truck safe on the outside and not returned to the bank vault until night.

Mr. MANN. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. WATSON. I desire to know what carelessness there was on the part of the bank in taking charge of the bonds.

Mr. MANN. I know; but where does the gentleman say they were kept?

Mr. WATSON. According to the report, they were kept in a truck safe during the day outside the main vault, and they were lost between the 26th day of April and the 29th day of April. During the day they were kept outside of the main vault, and I desire to know whether there was carelessness on the part of the bank?

Mr. MANN. Where does the gentleman find that?

Mr. WATSON. Page 3, Exhibit No. 1. There have been a great many claims presented to the Congress since I have been a Member which have shown carelessness on the part of those having money and securities in charge.

Mr. MANN. For instance, suppose they threw them away, the Government owes the money to somebody.

Mr. WATSON. I wanted to inquire as to the carelessness.

Mr. MANN. The Fort Dearborn National Park, in which I have been a great many times, was one of the big banks of Chicago, and where I do not think they ran things carelessly, but——

Mr. WALSH. That statement has nothing to do with this claim. That was with reference to another incident.

Mr. WATSON. But it states the bonds were stolen while on the trucks.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will state that the committee has never gone very closely into the circumstances in regard to the loss of bonds where we have the numbers of the bonds, because the security company is forced to give us a bond for twice the amount of the bonds, and should they turn up they re-collect. If they are lost they are lost, even if it was by carelessness, and I do not think, if the bonds can be identified, we should refuse to give the man who offers to give us twice the security an opportunity to get his money back.

Mr. MANN. This statement is that the trust safe was out in the daytime, where he had to get at it, and was kept in the vault below during the night. Of course, the trust safe is not left open for strangers to walk into.

Mr. WATSON. It was not necessary for these bonds to be outside of the vault during the day. They should have been downstairs in the vault.

Mr. MANN. These bonds held by the bank are on sale, I take it.

Mr. WATSON. I do not know that these bonds were for sale.

Mr. MANN. All bonds owned by banks, I think, are for sale. I do not know. Of course, the bank is not interested in this question at all.

Mr. WATSON. I wanted to get the facts.

Mr. MANN. The bank is out of existence now.

Mr. WATSON. I withdraw my reservation, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2765) for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, after the 15th day of December, 1921, 4½ per cent United States Treasury certificates of indebtedness No. 13387 and 13388 of the denomination of $10,000 each, series TD–1920, dated January 2, 1920, and maturing December 15, 1920, with interest from June 15, 1920, to December 15, 1920, in favor of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland without presentation of the certificates, the said certificates of indebtedness having been stolen, lost, or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificates of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented for payment: Provided further, That the said Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of the said certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stolen, lost, or destroyed certificates of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LINK-BELT CO., OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4619) for the relief of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4619) for the relief of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, for damages alleged to have been sustained by a certain coal chute under construction by said Link-Belt Co. for the Norfolk & Western Railroad on its coal pier No. 3 at Lamberts Point, in the city of Norfolk, Va., by reason of collision therewith by the U. S. S. Buitenzorg on the 1st day of March, 1919, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia at Norfolk, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision either for or against the United States, upon the same principles and measure of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the Link-Belt Co., the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid to those entitled thereto, or their proctors of record, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That appropriate proceedings to determine such damage shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "Norfolk," strike out the remainder of line 1 and all down to and including the word "States," in line 19, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "under and in compliance with the rules of said court, sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10643) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10643) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws:

The name of Joseph Holtz, late of Battery B, First Colorado Field Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Anna E. Herrington, widow of Charles E. Herrington, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month, and $2 per month for minor child in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Callaway, widow of Hugh R. Callaway, late of Company F, Second Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Hugh R. Callaway until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of James H. Stevens, late of Company I, Third Regiment Georgia Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles W. Ferrill, late of Company L, Second Regiment Arkansas Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of George R. Cott, late of Company C, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Foley, dependent mother of Lawrence A. Foley, alias Lawrence A. Ryan, late of Troop M, Third Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John V. Blum, late of Company H, First Regiment Georgia Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William H. Van Name, late of Company G, Second Regiment New Jersey Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William D. Warren, late of Company G, First Regiment Territorial United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Peter F. Weasel, late of Company I, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lillie Guffey, widow of Robert S. Guffey, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Robert S. Guffey until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Mary E. Steepy, widow of William F. Steepy, late of Company C, Fifty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William M. Davis, late of the medical department First Regiment Arizona National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of John G. Pearson, late of Company B, Thirty-fourth Regiment Michigan Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The name of Charles B. White, late of Troop E, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Thomas V. Hunt, late of Company E, Second Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Mary E. Frederick, widow of Henry Frederick, late of Troop E, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, Indian wars, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of George B. Allard, late of Company D, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of William J. Shirley, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lester H. Greer, late of Company A, Second Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert L. Hester, late of Battery A, Georgia Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Sidney Payne Smith, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James D. Silman, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Israel J. Mazerall, late of Troop H, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and United States Navy, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The name of Joseph Watts, late of Troop L, Tenth Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Arthur D. Warden, late of Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, and Company M, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jane Myers, dependent mother of Joseph S. Myers, late fireman, first class, United States torpedo boat Tingey, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of John N. Day, late second lieutenant Company F, Third Regiment Tennessee Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Carl L. Setchell, late of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Minnesota Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The name of Pleasy J. Graham, late of the United States Coast Artillery Corps, unassigned, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month.

The name of Nancy M. Oglesby, widow of William W. Oglesby, late captain of Company G, Second Regiment Oregon State Militia, Indian wars, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William W. Rowan, late of Company E, Battalion United States Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of William M. Metzger, late of Capt. W. W. Oglesby's Company G, Second Regiment Oregon State Militia, and Capt. John L. Sperry's company, Umatilla County Guards, Oregon Militia, Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of James Carnes, late of Capt. M. R. Green's company, Texas Rangers, Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Oscar A. Badder, late of Company I, Thirty-fourth Regiment Michigan Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles F. Harrison, late of Troop C, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Oscar Ernst, late of the Eighth Battery United States Field Artillery and of Company K, Twenty-sixth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Earl B. Durham, late of the Sixty-eighth and Sixty-ninth Companies United States Coast Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Burton, late of Company A, First Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John S. Cisco, late of Company E, Second Regiment Kentucky National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Capt. L. L. Tackitt, late of First Company Parker County Minute Men, Texas State troops participating in the Indian wars, 1865 and 1866, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Catherine A. Long, widow of William F. Long, late of Battery E, Third Regiment United States Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Stella Joplin, widow of Arthur T. Joplin, late of Company A, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month, with a continuation of the $2 per month for each of the soldier's minor children until they reach the age of 16 years, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William E. Heglin, late of Company I, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary A. McKay, widow of Robert McKay, late seaman, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month, with the customary $2 per month additional for minor child until it shall attain the age of 16 years, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William Adamson, late of Company L, Second Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Robert Farewell, late of Company C, Second Regiment California National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Martha C. Davis, dependent mother of Albert E. Dennis, late of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Minnesota Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Charles C. Sterling, late of the U. S. S. Ossippee, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Willard M. Girton, late private Company D, First Regiment Nebraska Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin C. Maham, late of Twenty-third Battery, United States Field Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Stephen T. Barnes, late of Company L, Fifth Regiment Illinois Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Malvern H. Miller, late of the United States Marine Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Downs, late of Company I, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Marcel H. Poirier, late of Troop C, Thirteenth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Inklebarger, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles C. Cooper, late of Company F, First Regiment Arkansas Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George Eppens, late of Company A, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of John Cunniff, dependent father of Thomas Cunniff, late of Company F, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of La Verne Allen Brown, late of Company G, First Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Sophia Salyards, mother of Lester Salyards, late of Company C, One hundred and fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of John A. Ott, late of Company E, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month, without recovery of any pension heretofore to him paid.

The name of Thomas McBride, late of Company C, First Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles A. McComb, late of Company G, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Leslie V. Murrell, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Minnesota Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 a month.

The name of George H. Higgins, dependent father of George H. Higgins, jr., late of Company F, Second Regiment Massachusetts Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rudolph Zoch, alias Zack, late of United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Jacob Copeland, late of Company F, First Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin F. Williams, late of U. S. S. Marcellus, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month.

The name of Herbert L. Lemon, late of Company I, Thirty-third Regiment Michigan Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of John W. Welliver, late of Company K, Thirty-second Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Samuel J. Haslett, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Alfred T. Koopman, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Edward M. Carter, late of Battery A, First Battalion Field Artillery, National Guard of Georgia, in the World War, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John Prater, late of Company K, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis Owens, late of Company D, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Elizabeth H. Burns, dependent mother of Joseph W. Burns, late of Company M, Third Regiment Missouri Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Edward F. Henderson, late of Company K, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rutherford H. Bowsher, late of Company K, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edmund Willis, late of Company G, Ninth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Leander W. Springer, late of Company K, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Netcher, late of United States Navy, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Annie Estelle Moore, widow of Benjamin F. Moore, late of Company D, Second Regiment Mississippi Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Benjamin F. Moore until they reach the age of 16 years, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William G. Shotwell, late of Company E, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month.

The name of Harry W. Weston, late of Troop M, Third Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Anna R. Wright, widow of Orlie Wright, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Carrie A. Boggess, widow of Charles L. Boggess, late of the Coast Artillery School Detachment, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, with $2 additional for each minor child of the soldier.

The name of William R. Holt, late of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Frank A. Klein, late of Hospital Corps, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $14 per month.

The name of Jacob Dossenback, late of Companies A and H, Sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Robert O. Thomas, late of the United States Marine Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William J. Grimm, late of Company G, First Regiment West Virginia Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Melvin B. Krause, late of Company M, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George L. Hollis, late of Troop F, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Ford, late of Company G, Second Regiment New York National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

The name of Harry M. Isbell, late of Company L, Third Regiment Nebraska Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John F. Harmon, late of Company H, Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Scott, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Briney, late of Company L, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per cent in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Willard F. Bradford, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mabel P. Hubbell, widow of John D. Hubbell, late of Troop A, First Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, with $2 per month additional for each of the soldier's minor children until they shall attain the age of 16 years.

The name of John T. Phillips, late chaplain, Sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John P. Prowse, father of Frank O. Prowse, late of Company E, Third Regiment Kentucky Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Margaret C. Miller, mother of Ralph C. Dunlap, late of band, Fortieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Michael J. Monahan, late of Company L, Fifteenth Regiment, and Company D, Second Regiment, United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Abel B. Conger, late of Company A, Thirty-first Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary H. Swats, widow of John G. Swats, late of Company L, Fourth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John M. Quinlan, late of One hundred and sixth Company, United States Coast Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Alexander, late of Company F, First Regiment Tennessee Infantry, and Company D, Thirty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The name of Sarah Christensen, mother of Alfred Christensen, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ebbin A. Irvin, late of Company G, Second Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Anna Miller, widow of August Miller, alias August Metz, late of Troop B, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry (North Cheyenne and Sioux campaign), and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON in the chair). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the said committee:

H. R. 2031. Joseph Holtz.
H. R. 2636. Anna E. Herrington.
H. R. 2810. Mary Callaway.
H. R. 2859. James H. Stevens.
H. R. 6591. Charles W. Ferrill.
H. R. 6700. George R. Cott.
H. R. 6978. Mary E. Foley.
H. R. 7220. John V. Blum.
H. R. 7237. William H. Van Name.
H. R. 7248. William D. Warren.
H. R. 7409. Peter F. Weasel.
H. R. 7477. Lillie Guffey.
H. R. 7613. Mary E. Steepy.
H. R. 7813. William M. Davis.
H. R. 7957. John G. Pearson.
H. R. 8012. Charles B. White.
H. R. 8068. Thomas V. Hunt.
H. R. 8154. Mary E. Frederick.
H. R. 8231. George B. Allard.
H. R. 8249. William J. Shirley.
H. R. 8628. Lester H. Greer.
H. R. 8360. Robert L. Hester.
H. R. 8388. Sidney Payne Smith.
H. R. 8429. James D. Silman.
H. R. 8466. Israel J. Mazerall.
H. R. 8480. Joseph Watts.
H. R. 8487. Arthur D. Warden.
H. R. 8502. Jane Myers.
H. R. 8518. John N. Day.
H. R. 8530. Carl L. Setchell.
H. R. 8531. Pleasy J. Graham.
H. R. 8534. Nancy M. Oglesby.
H. R. 8535. William W. Rowan.
H. R. 8537. William M. Metzger.
H. R. 8545. James Carnes.
H. R. 8547. Oscar A. Badder.
H. R. 8559. Charles F. Harrison.
H. R. 8574. Oscar Ernst.
H. R. 8586. Earl B. Durham.
H. R. 8594. Joseph Burton.
H. R. 8595. John S. Cisco.
H. R. 8599. Capt. L. L. Tackett.
H. R. 8609. Catherine A. Long.
H. R. 8619. Stella Joplin.
H. R. 8622. William E. Heglin.
H. R. 8629. Mary A. McKay.
H. R. 8630. William Adamson.
H. R. 8631. Thomas Robert Farewell.
H. R. 8634. Martha C. Davis.
H. R. 8699. Charles C. Sterling.
H. R. 8703. Willard M. Girton.
H. R. 8706. Benjamin C. Maham.
H. R. 8710. Stephen T. Barnes.
H. R. 8735. Malvern H. Miller.
H. R. 8759. William A. Downs.
H. R. 8774. Marcel H. Poirier.
H. R. 8787. Samuel Inklebarger.
H. R. 8802. Charles C. Cooper.
H. R. 8803. George Eppens.
H. R. 8806. John Cunniff.
H. R. 8823. La Verne Allen Brown.
H. R. 8829. Sophia Salyards.
H. R. 8851. John A. Ott.
H. R. 8853. Thomas McBride.
H. R. 8855. Charles A. McComb.
H. R. 8870. Leslie V. Murrell.
H. R. 8872. George H. Higgins.
H. R. 8884. Rudolph Zoch.
H. R. 8895. Jacob Copeland.
H. R. 8913. Benjamin F. Williams.
H. R. 8916. Herbert L. Lemon.
H. R. 8918. John W. Welliver.
H. R. 8934. Samuel J. Haslett.
H. R. 8935. Alfred T. Koopman.
H. R. 8968. Edward M. Carter.
H. R. 9042. John Prater.
H. R. 9078. Lewis Owens.
H. R. 9090. Elizabeth H. Burns.
H. R. 9108. Edward F. Henderson.
H. R. 9130. Rutherford H. Bowsher.
H. R. 9142. Edmund Willis.
H. R. 9144. Leander W. Springer.
H. R. 9150. George H. Netcher.
H. R. 9153. Annie Estelle Moore.
H. R. 9163. William G. Shotwell.
H. R. 9172. Harry W. Weston.
H. R. 9192. Anna R. Wright.
H. R. 9230. Carrie A. Boggess.
H. R. 9244. William R. Holt.
H. R. 9250. Frank A. Klein.
H. R. 9281. Jacob Dossenback.
H. R. 9304. Robert O. Thomas.
H. R. 9353. William J. Grimm.
H. R. 9379. Melvin B. Krause.
H. R. 9398. George L. Hollis.
H. R. 9424. John Ford.
H. R. 9470. Harry M. Isbell.
H. R. 9475. John F. Harmon.
H. R. 9503. James W. Scott.
H. R. 9504. William Briney.
H. R. 9522. Willard F. Bradford.
H. R. 9535. Mabel P. Hubbell.
H. R. 9589. John T. Phillips.
H. R. 9714. John P. Prowse.
H. R. 9729. Margaret C. Miller.
H. R. 9783. Michael J. Monahan.
H. R. 9784. Abel B. Conger.
H. R. 9829. Mary H. Swats.
H. R. 9837. John M. Quinlan.
H. R. 9983. James Alexander.
H. R. 10087. Sarah Christensen.
H. R. 10095. Ebbin A. Irvin.
H. R. 10235. Anna Miller.

ADDIE MAY AULD AND ARCHIE WILLIAM AULD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 518) to carry out the provisions of an act approved July 1, 1902, known as the act entitled "An act to accept, ratify, and confirm a proposed agreement submitted by the Kansas or Kaw Indians of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," and to provide for a settlement to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld, who were enrolled as members of the said tribe after the lands and moneys of said tribe had been divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the agreement with the Kansas or Kaw Indians, approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L. 638), setting aside and reserving from allotment 160 acres, including the school and agency buildings, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion to allot to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld 150 acres of said reserve, excepting from allotment all school and agency buildings and not exceeding 10 acres of land, the conveyance to the said persons named to be of the same form as to other Kaw allottees: Provided, That the allotments of the said land shall be in full settlement of all back annuities and any other claims or rights of said persons as enrolled members of the Kaw Tribe of Indians.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some gentleman a question in reference to the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I happen to know something about this bill. What is it that the gentleman from Oklahoma desires to know?

Mr. CARTER. I wanted to know, first, what has become of the land allotted for the farm work? What has become of the school?

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. The school has been abolished.

Mr. CARTER. Is there still an agency there?

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. No, sir. This tribe is under a different agency, near there, and that other agency looks after this tribe.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman will notice that if the bill is passed there will be 10 acres retained in connection with the school, which would be sufficient for the school grounds and garden purposes, so that the school could be reestablished if there was any need for it.

Mr. CARTER. But the school has been suspended?

Mr. BURTNESS. Oh, yes.

Mr. CARTER. Now, the other information I wanted to get was how much is to be allotted to each of these?

Mr. BURTNESS. Seventy-five acres each. Each member of the tribe when the land was allotted got something like 400 acres each, and the money was all divided among the other members of the tribe, but these two children were inadvertently left off the roll at the time of the division of the property. This is simply giving them what is left.

Mr. CARTER. The bill does not make quite clear what is to be allotted to each allottee.

Mr. BURTNESS. They are to get 150 acres together.

Mr. CARTER. Is it to be allotted to them jointly?

Mr. BURTNESS. That is the way in which I construe the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I did not draw the bill. It is Senator CURTIS's bill, and I know nothing about what his intentions were about the allottees of the land. It says here "in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior," so I suppose the Secretary of the Interior will allot it.

Mr. MANN. The Interior Department drew this bill.

Mr. CARTER. It says here—

To authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to allot to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld 150 acres of said reserve.

I think the language ought to be a little more definite as to what each one shall get.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. It is my understanding, after talking with the Indian Bureau, that they propose to divide these 150 acres equally between these two children.

Mr. CARTER. I think it would be much more desirable to have it allotted separately than to have it allotted jointly. I do not see how that could be done.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I think that is what the Secretary of the Interior will do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the agreement with the Kansas or Kaw Indians, approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L. p. 638), setting aside and reserving from allotment 160 acres, including the school and agency buildings, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion to allot to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld 150 acres of said reserve, excepting from allotment all school and agency buildings and not exceeding 10 acres of land, the conveyance to the said persons named to be of the same form as to other Kaw allottees: Provided, That the allotments of the said land shall be in full settlement of all back annuities and any other claims or rights of said persons as enrolled members of the Kaw Tribe of Indians.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTNESS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC PARK FOR ESCAMBIA COUNTY, FLA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7967) granting certain lands to Escambia County, Fla., for a public park.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman who introduced this measure why the usual provision for the payment of $1.25 an acre is eliminated?

Mr. SMITHWICK. Our people do not think the land is worth that much. It is a bed of sand. The land is located about 15 miles from Pensacola, one of the oldest towns in the United States, yet the land has never been taken up as a homestead. All except about 30 acres of it is covered with water when the tide runs high. There is a precedent for donating this land without compensation.

Mr. WALSH. Is this the tract down there that they are going to use for a boulevard or speedway when it is improved?

Mr. SMITHWICK. They are going to build what is known as the Gulf Beach Highway across it.

Mr. WALSH. Is there going to be an embankment wall along there?

Mr. SMITHWICK. I do not think they will do that.

Mr. WALSH. They are going to protect it in some way so that it will not be under water, are they not?

Mr. SMITHWICK. No; I do not think they will do that. That would be very expensive. What they propose to do is to build the Gulf Beach Highway to go out to the beach, 17 miles from Pensacola, and that highway is going across this particular land. What they want to do with the land is to make a park of it. When the tide gets high, the logs and débris of one kind and another float over portions of it. What they want to do is to maintain this as a park and put up tents on it. They expect to build quite a resort at the terminus of the Gulf Beach Highway.

Mr. WALSH. About how many acres are there in this?

Mr. SMITHWICK. Two hundred and fifty-three and a fraction.

Mr. WALSH. Of course it is very seldom that the Congress gives away land in this way. Does not the gentleman think an amendment ought to be adopted providing for the payment of a nominal sum?

Mr. SMITHWICK. This land will really go to the public. This is for the purpose of building a highway for the public to use. I am satisfied that the land will never be of any use to the Government, for the reason that, as I say, Pensacola is one of the oldest towns in the United States, and this land is there within 15 miles of Pensacola and nobody has ever homesteaded it so far, although it has been open to anybody, and I doubt if anybody ever would homestead it. The timber on it is practically nothing, just a little scrub pine.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, the difficulty is that after the county authorities of Escambia County, Fla., have improved this and made use of it it will be pointed to as a precedent that Congress gave the land to the county without requiring any compensation. People will forget how the land looked at the time the grant was made, and they will come in and say that other lands situated like this should be granted free.

Mr. SMITHWICK. This Congress, as I understand it, has donated to one State over 3,000 acres in the West. I think the bill was introduced by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. The land was donated without compensation.

Mr. MANN. For what?

Mr. SMITHWICK. For park purposes, the same as this.

Mr. MANN. For a municiaplity?

Mr. SMITHWICK. No; to the county, and this is to the county.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask some member of the Public Lands Committee a question. We have had quite a considerable number of bills of this character at different times, mostly, of course, for lands in the West. My impression is that they almost invariably have provided for the payment of $1.25 an acre for the land. I may be mistaken about that, but I would like to get information from some member of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I reported this bill, and I have been on the Committee on Public Lands for some time. We have reported some bills like the one the gentleman has mentioned; but I think it is a fairly well-established principle that where land is of no value for timber, agricultural, or other purposes, and it is proposed to improve it for the public benefit, to authorize the grant of the land without any price.

Mr. MANN. I was rather under the impression that we had established the principle that they must pay something. So far as the particular land here is concerned, it makes no difference, but it makes a great deal of difference as to the demand made for lands, whether you have to pay something for them or get them for nothing.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. The rule depends on the purpose for which the land is to be used. Where the land has no value, where it is to be improved at public cost and is to be used by the public, it is a fairly well-established principle to grant the land without cost.

Mr. MANN. Of course, a municipality has no use for any land unless it improves it in some way.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. This is not exactly a municipality.

Mr. MANN. A county is no better off than a city, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Perhaps not so well off. As the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITHWICK] has said, these lands are subject to overflow. They are situated about 15 miles from Pensacola, a very progressive city, one of the oldest cities in the United States. The fact that the lands have not been homesteaded and are vacant is because they are of no value.

Mr. MANN. Are they of any value for park purposes?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Only in so far as they would permit one to park his car on the highway.

Mr. MANN. It says "for the purpose of a public park." Is the real purpose of the bill to run a highway through the land?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. They propose to construct a highway through the land. This is practically at the end of the line, and they want some place where people going down for the purpose of a little outing can park their cars.

Mr. MANN. That is the purpose for which it is intended—the purpose for which Potomac Park is now being used—for parking?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Perhaps; but the Potomac Park is being used for a little more than that, but that is due to its close proximity to the city of Washington. This land is off some distance from the city of Pensacola.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Speaker, being a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, I can say that this bill received the considerate attention of the committee. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will rustle the leaves of his memory a little he will recall his objection on the floor of the House to what he dubbed "the Senator Mondell park bill," to which he offered an amendment requiring a certain county in the State of Wyoming to pay $1.25 an acre for something like 3,200 acres. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts was not adopted by the House, and so the members of the Committee on the Public Lands rather thought that inasmuch as the leader of the House had enjoyed a favor of that character it might be just as well to reciprocate to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITHWICK], inasmuch as the land, as I understand it, is somewhat like a Florida crocodile—submerged a part of the time, but with the nose of the crocodile, you might say, sticking up out of the ocean. As the gentleman from Florida eloquently brought out before the committee, the purpose of the park was partly to accommodate those who went south to enjoy the peculiar proximity which Florida has to Cuba and the island of Bimini. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Well, they ought not to encourage that. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMICK. If the gentleman does not wish to encourage traffic in that direction, he at least ought to suffer no obstacle to traffic coming north from there.

Mr. WALSH. There can not be any traffic coming north until they go south first for the purpose mentioned. Of course, the people of Florida are not going to use this highway for any such purpose.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. There is no purpose or intention on the part of anyone to commercialize this highway, nor will anyone be benefited in that sense of the word. The entire committee was in accord on the proposition that there should be no charge made for this land.

Mr. WALSH. I do not agree with the committee. I think, Mr. Speaker, we ought to impose the usual condition. However, I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill, but I am going to offer an amendment, to let the House vote it down, as they did upon the occasion of the amendment being offered when the bill to which the gentleman from Montana [Mr. McCORMICK] has referred was under consideration. I think perhaps you will vote it down, but I want to follow the long-established custom.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands within the areas hereinafter described be, and the same are hereby, granted and conveyed to Escambia County, Fla., in trust, for the purposes of a public park, reserving, however, to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits within said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, to wit: The north half northeast quarter section 34, township 3 south, range 32 west; south half southwest quarter section 26, township 3 south, range 32 west; lot 3, section 26, township 3 south, range 32 west; lot 1, section 27 south, range 23 west, comprising 253.9 acres, all Tallahassee meridian, within Escambia County, State of Florida; but nothing herein contained shall in anywise affect any claim of title heretofore acquired or asserted to any of the lands herein described.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Section 1, page 2, line 4, after the words "twenty-seven" insert the words "township 3."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: Page 1, line 3, after the word "described" insert the words "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, line 3, after the word "described" insert "upon payment of $1.25 per acre."

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to discuss the amendment.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to oppose the amendment. The suggestion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is the very same suggestion that I made before the Committee on Public Lands at the time the bill was being considered. I am one of those who believe that as a general rule we ought not to establish a precedent of giving land away. But after hearing the evidence that was submitted before the committee I felt that this case was similar to a few other cases that have been reported by the committee in this, that the land was deemed practically worthless for ordinary uses, absolutely worthless for agricultural purposes, and that instead of benefiting this county, if they were compelled to pay for it, it would be a detriment. Because of that fact the committee, after considering this very point, unanimously agreed that this was one of the cases where it was proper to allow the municipality to have the land without paying therefor. In view of that I trust that the proposed amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says it would be a detriment to them. We are not asked to pay them anything for taking it, are we? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTNESS. No.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What is meant by conveying it in trust? Does that mean that in case the United States wants it for military or naval purposes that they could not take it?

Mr. BURTNESS. I have not the exact language before me, but the purpose of the bill as reported out of the committee was that it was to be used for public purposes for the county. I do not recall whether it provided for a reverter or not in express words; that was the intent.

Mr. MANN. The words "in trust" do not mean anything one way or the other. It will be just the same whether they are in or out.

Mr. TILSON. Usually when there are pieces of property that are declared surplus and turned over to the public for park purposes there is a proviso that in case they are needed for military purposes they can be taken by the Government for that purpose.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Let me say that this bill was patterned after a bill that conveyed land for park purposes in the State of Wyoming. The words "in trust" were used in that bill. I think, however, it is the intention to be used by this Gulf Beach Highway Co.

Mr. BURTNESS. I want to add that the matter which the gentleman from Connecticut has in mind is covered, I think, by section 2. Whether the words "in trust" in section 1 mean anything or not is a moot question, but the provisions of section 2 amply protect the Government if any attempt should be made to use the property for a purpose other than that intended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was considered and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the grant herein is made upon the express condition that within 30 days of the receipt of any request therefor from the Secretary of the Interior the county clerk shall submit to the said Secretary of the Interior a report as to the use made of the land herein granted the county during the preceding period named in such request, showing compliance with the terms and conditions stated in this act; and that in the event of his failure to so report, or in the event of a showing in such report to the Secretary of the Interior that the terms of the grant have not been complied with, the grant shall be held to be forfeited, and the Attorney General of the United States shall institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

The following committee amendment was read:

On page 2, line 18, after the word "report" insert the words "or otherwise."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LARSEN of Georgia, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE LLOYD MEDITERRANEO SOCIETA ITALIANA DI NAVIGAZIONE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4622) for the relief of the Lloyd Mediterraneo Societa Italiana di Navigazione, owners of the Italian steamer Titania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk report the committee amendment in lieu of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Clerk report the amendment in lieu of the original bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the claim of the Lloyd Mediterraneo Societa Italiana di Navigazione, owners of the Italian steamer Titania, arising out of a collision between said steamer and the United States S. C. 121, which occurred at the south side of pier No. 2 of the Norfolk & Western Railway Co., Lamberts Point, Va., on July 18, 1919, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered by the owners of said steamer by reasons of damages to said steamer, may be submitted to the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that today's session is not likely to be long continued, I want to ask unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill S. 3268,

Calendar No. 246, on this calendar. The bill is far down on the calendar and is not likely to be reached to-day. It is urgent that it be passed as soon as possible, as it will make possible the construction of a plant which will give employment to 200 men. I am sure that no one will have any objection to the bill itself.

Mr. WALSH. What kind of a plant does the gentleman refer to? No one knows what the bill is.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is S. 3268, to construe a grant of land made to a railroad company in Michigan some 60 years ago. The land was granted to a company which is using it and will continue to use it; it can not be forfeited as long as the railroad company makes use of the land. Now they want to lease a portion of the land to a concern that is going to put up a cement factory, using some buildings on the land and constructing others.

There is a question as to whether the original grant was broad enough to permit the railroad to make a lease to another party for a cement factory. It seems to me the original grant was broad enough. In any event, the land when granted was paid for and the Government can not declare a forfeiture now, because the land is used by the railroad and will continue to be so used. It is just a question of clearing up the record so that the people will be willing to go ahead and put their money in the construction of this factory and give employment to these men. Naturally, there has been some delay, and because of the urgency of putting it in shape so that they can go ahead with the work I ask that it be taken up out of order, fearing it would not be otherwise reached to-day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I shall not object to the gentleman's request, Mr. Speaker, and there may be some good reason for not running a little while longer; but why can we not run until about the usual hour, 5 o'clock?

Mr. CRAMTON. That does not rest with me. Whether I get the bill through now or an hour later would make no difference. It is quite a way down on the calendar, and I fear it will not be reached.

The SPEAKER. It obviously could not be reached to-day in its regular order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Detroit & Canada Grand Trunk Junction Railroad Co., or its successors or assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to lease lot No. 1, or any portion thereof, and any buildings thereon, as described in the patent dated March 8, 1859, issued to such railroad company under the provisions of the act entitled "An act granting the right of way over and depot grounds on the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan, for railroad purposes," approved February 8, 1859, as amended: Provided, That any such lease shall be made subject to the condition in said act that the grant to said railroad company shall cease and determine in the event that such railroad shall be discontinued.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRAMTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEASING OF CERTAIN RAILROAD LAND, FORT SHERIDAN, ILL.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of order Calendar No. 234, being H. R. 241, to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a perpetual easement for railroad right of way and a right of way for a public highway over and upon a portion of the military reservation of Fort Sheridan, in the State of Illinois. This relates to the construction of a road adjoining the Fort Sheridan Reservation. Unless the bill can be passed, so that the work can be started soon, it will not be possible to finish the work during the season. I dislike very much to inconvenience any of the Members of the House, but I am afraid that it will be some time before we call this calendar again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill H. R. 241. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 241) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a perpetual easement for railroad right of way and a right of way for a public highway over and upon a portion of the military reservation of Fort Sheridan, in the State of Illinois.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant and convey to the Chicago, North Shore & Milwaukee Railroad, a railroad corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, a perpetual easement, for railroad purposes over and upon the following-described property, being a part of the military reservation of Fort Sheridan and of the public highway adjoining the same, to wit: All that part of the northwest quarter of section 10, township 43 north, range 12 east, of the third principal meridian, described as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point in the north line of said section 10 distant 100 feet easterly of measured at right angles from the easterly line of the right of way of the Chicago & North Western Railroad Co.; thence southeasterly along a line parallel to the easterly line of said right of way 1,513.44 feet to a point of curve; thence southerly along a curved line (convex westerly) having a radius of 11,409.2 feet, a distance of 597.38 feet, to a point of tangent; thence southeasterly along a line tangent to said curved line 355.13 feet to a point of curve; thence southerly along a curved line (convex easterly) having a radius of 11,509.2 feet, a distance of 526.68 feet, to a point in the north line of the south 66 feet of the northwest quarter of said section 10, being the north line of the highway running east and west; thence west along the north line of the highway to the east line of the right of way of the Chicago & North Western Railway Co.; thence northwesterly along the east line of said right of way 2,963.8 feet, more or less, to the said north line of section 10; thence easterly along said north line of section 10 to place of beginning; with full power to locate and construct railroad tracks, sidings, switches, and other appurtenances thereon and to use said property for all purposes appurtenant to its business: Provided, That no part of the property hereby granted shall be used for any other than railroad purposes, and that when such property shall cease to be so used it shall revert to the United States of America.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the location, grading, and paving of a public highway 46 feet in width to connect with the public highway known as McKinley Road at the north boundary of the military reservation of Fort Sheridan, and extending thence south to an intersection with the east and west road north of Fort Sheridan station upon, along, and over the following-described property: All that part of the northwest quarter of section 10, township 43 north, range 12, east of the third principal meridian, described as follows, to wit: A strip of land 46 feet in width extending from the north line of section 10 to the north line of the south 66 feet of the northwest quarter of said section 10, being the north line of highway running east and west, the westerly boundary line of said strip being described as follows: Commencing at a point on the north line of section 10, 100 feet easterly of the easterly line of the right of way of the Chicago & North Western Railway Co., measured at right angles thereto; thence southeasterly along a line parallel to said right-of-way line and 100 feet therefrom 1,513.44 feet to a point of curve; thence southerly along a curved line (convex westerly) having a radius of 11,409.2 feet, a distance of 597.38 feet to a point of tangent; thence southeasterly along a line tangent to said curved line 355.13 feet to a point of curve; thence southerly along a curved line (convex easterly) having a radius of 11,509.2 feet, a distance of 526.68 feet to a point in the north line of the south 66 feet of the northwest quarter of said section 10, being the north line of the highway running east and west, to be and become a highway for public travel in perpetuity.

SEC. 3. The grant to the Chicago, North Shore & Milwaukee Railroad, herein above in section 1 authorized, shall be upon the express condition that the said Chicago, North Shore & Milwaukee Railroad shall, at its own expense, construct and build a roadway having a brick surface upon a concrete foundation extending from the north boundary of said reservation to an intersection with the east and west road located on the south line of the northwest quarter of section 10 upon the strip of land hereinbefore in section 2 described, the pavement of which roadway shall be 22 feet in width, and that the said Chicago, North Shore & Milwaukee Railroad shall, at its own expense, construct a wire fence, with wooden posts, along the eastern boundary of said strip from the north end to the south end of said strip of like character to the present boundary fence of said Fort Sheridan Reservation, and the location of the public highway authorized in and by section 2 hereof shall be upon the express condition that the city of Lake Forest shall at all times after the completion thereof maintain the pavement to be constructed by said railroad upon said highway in a good and proper condition at the sole expense of said city of Lake Forest.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "easement," insert the words "subject to the proviso in section 4 herein."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if there is any compensation that the Government is to have? This seems to be a very valuable franchise, a perpetual one, and I do not see any provision in the bill for any compensation to the Government at all.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I should be very glad to go into that at this point.

Mr. STEVENSON. It strikes me as a rather important easement to be granted for nothing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. At the present time there is a temporary permit granted by the Secretary of War for a strip of land 34 feet in length west of the Fort Sheridan Reservation, which is being occupied by this railroad for the purposes of its right of way. This bill, so far as that strip is concerned, grants only an easement. There is now a temporary right of way.

Mr. STEVENSON. How long does the temporary right of way continue?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is a temporary permit, and it is, of course, terminable within the will of the department.

Mr. STEVENSON. It can be revoked any time?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes. With reference to the balance of the land covered by this bill, there are 46 feet to be used for a public highway for the benefit of the general public as well as for the benefit of the Government. The Government needs this highway. At present the only two roads which are available running east of the railroad tracks of the Chicago & North Western Railroad run through the reservation itself, and in going north persons driving must cross two railroad tracks in order to pass the north end of the reservation. This whole matter has been under consideration by the War Department for a considerable time, and all parties concerned have now reached this agreement.

The railroad company undertakes under this bill to pay the costs for the paving of the road, a pavement 22 feet in width, running for half a mile along the western line of Fort Sheridan Reservation, at a total cost of approximately $30,000.

Mr. STEVENSON. How much land is involved?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. About 3 acres of land are involved. The War Department not only recommends this legislation but urges its passage, as will be found from the report. In a letter signed by John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, I read the following:

The bill as drawn has been reviewed and approved by the local military authorities as well as the railroad company and the city of Lake Forest. For reasons as stated it is urgently recommended that the bill in its present form be enacted into law.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I notice on page 5 where the railroad company is required to construct a wire fence——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That wire fence will belong to the Government. That is along the western part of the reservation, and we need a fence there very badly.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Inasmuch as this is a perpetual lease, would it be all right to amend that portion of the bill by inserting the words "and maintain," so as to provide that it shall be constructed and maintained?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the fence is constructed, we will be in exactly the same position as we are in now. That will be on the land of the Government and will be built along the old fence which is now on the reservation.

This is all in pursuance of agreements which have been made. I have no doubt——

Mr. STEVENSON. I notice another provision which strikes me as rather peculiar, which provides that the city of Lake Forest shall maintain this road.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. What authority has Congress to impose upon the city the duty of the maintenance of a public highway?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The city of Lake Forest has passed an ordinance which provides that it will maintain the road. One of the conditions of this perpetual easement is that the city of Lake Forest shall maintain the road.

Mr. STEVENSON. Do I understand that if the city of Lake Forest fails to maintain the road the easement is revoked?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Absolutely.

Mr. STEVENSON. Suppose it fails to discharge its part of the agreement and the railroad discharges its part, where will they be?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The tripartite agreement will insure that all terms will be carried out.

Mr. RANKIN. Suppose the railroad should abandon the road and cease to use it as a railroad?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then the perpetual easement ceases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, after line 22, insert:

"SEC. 4. That the said conveyance shall be subject to the conditions and reversion hereinbefore provided for, and shall be used for the purposes hereinbefore described only, and shall be subject to the right of the United States at any and all times and in any manner to assume control of, hold, use, and occupy without license, consent, or leave from said corporation any or all of said land for any and all military, naval, or lighthouse purposes, free from any conveyance, charges, encumbrances, or liens made, created, permitted, or sanctioned thereon by said corporation: Provided, That the United States shall not be or become liable for any damages or compensation whatever to the said corporation for any future use by the Government of any or all of the above-described land for any of the above-mentioned purposes."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 12, strike out——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last section.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHINDBLOM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT, SPECIAL CANCELING STAMPS IN CERTAIN POST OFFICES.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 10740.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on H. R. 10740, authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

H. STEENERSON,
W. W. GRIEST,
THOS. M. BELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND,
THOMAS STERLING,
DAVID I. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The effect of said action is to restore to the bill the language of the Senate amendments as adopted by the Senate.

H. STEENERSON,
W. W. GRIEST,
THOS. M. BELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have some little explanation of this conference report.

Mr. STEENERSON. The conference report is on the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices. The conference report agrees to the Senate amendment which added two post offices at which special canceling stamps could be used.

Mr. WALSH. What is going to happen in the two communities where the two offices are located?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, one, I think, is in New Hampshire and the other in the State of Washington, at Tacoma. I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take out of order Calendar No. 241, for the relief of John B. Elliott.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me we might reach these bills in their regular order. I do not wish to object, but I have a bill on the calendar——

Mr. OSBORNE. It may be probably six weeks or two months before we get to this point again, and I have been waiting for three years——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman could not have been waiting three years because it has not existed that long.

Mr. OSBORNE. Well, it has seemed that long.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection, if the House has not, to have this bill taken up, but I want to say to the gentleman and other gentlemen that we hope to reach this calendar again in about two weeks, and when we do I hope we shall take it up as we have to-day, bills not objected to, beginning at the point where we conclude this evening.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand this particular bill which the gentleman from California desires to call up now is to pay some two months' salary of some sort to a Democrat.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not any doubt that the Democrat needs the money under this administration, and I hope——

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will yield, is this a Democrat who has been separated from the service?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not yet.
Mr. MONDELL. Or about to be?
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think probably from what I have heard as a matter of rumor maybe he is about to be.
Mr. MONDELL. I think, by all means, he should be paid.
Mr. LAYTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would withhold that until I make a unanimous-consent request.
Mr. MANN. I will withhold it until the gentleman makes the request.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:
S. 3317. An act to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 N., range 32 W., Beltrami County, Minn.
Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:
H. R. 2158. An act to provide for the monthly payment of pensions.
H. J. Res. 309. Joint resolution appropriating $1,000,000 for the preservation, protection, and repair of levees under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. COCKRAN (at the request of Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee), indefinitely, on account of important business.
To Mr. WHEELER, for five days, on account of business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, April 24, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:
593. A letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting testimony, papers, and documents in the contested-election case of Dan Parrillo against Stanley H. Kunz, eighth district of Illinois (H. Doc. No. 289); to the Committee on Elections No. 1 and ordered to be printed.
594. A letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting testimony, papers, and documents in the contested-election case of John Golombiewski against John W. Rainey, fourth district of Illinois (H. Doc. No. 290); to the Committee on Elections No. 2 and ordered to be printed.
595. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the United States Veterans' Bureau for the construction of hospital facilities, and provision of medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies, $17,000,000, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended (H. Doc. No. 291); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9793) granting an increase of pension to Richard H. Atkinson, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:
By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 11393) to abolish the office of Superintendent of the Library Building and Grounds and to transfer the duties thereof to the Architect of the Capitol and the Librarian of Congress; to the Committee on the Library.
By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11394) for the erection of a public building at Abingdon, Ill., and appropriating money therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
By Mr. RHODES: A bill (H. R. 11395) for repairing levees, protecting property, and for the immediate relief of flood sufferers along the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri Rivers; to the Committee on Appropriations.
By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 11396) to regulate foreign commerce in the importation into the United States of the adult honeybee (Apis mellifica); to the Committee on Agriculture.
By Mr. SNELL (by request): A bill (H. R. 11397) to authorize appropriations for the relief of certain officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on War Claims.
By Mr. PARKS of Arkansas: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 310) for the relief of sufferers in the flooded district of the Mississippi River, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:
By Mr. BENHAM: A bill (H. R. 11398) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Green; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
Also, a bill (H. R. 11399) granting a pension to Margaret White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. CHANDLER of New York: A bill (H. R. 11400) for the relief of the estate of Katherine O'Melia; to the Committee on Claims.
By Mr. IRELAND: A bill (H. R. 11401) granting a pension to Catherine Hinkle; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 11402) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Stout; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. SWANK: A bill (H. R. 11403) for the relief of Seth A. Welch; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
By Mr. WATSON: A bill (H. R. 11404) for the relief of Mordecai Fizone; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:
5215. By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of the San Francisco Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church, of Monmouth, Calif., indorsing House Joint Resolution 131; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
5216. Also, petition of the San Francisco Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church, of Monmouth, Calif., indorsing Senate Joint Resolution 31; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
5217. Also, petition of the San Francisco Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church, of Monmouth, Calif., indorsing House bill 9753; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.
5218. By Mr. COLTON: Petition of the Association of Utah Claimants against Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.
5219. By Mr. CURRY: Memorial of Lodi growers and the Shippers' League, of Lodi, Calif., in favor of House bill 10786, to punish the unlawful breaking of seals of railroad cars containing interstate and foreign shipments with felonious intent; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.
5220. By Mr. FENN: Petition of hundreds of citizens of Hartford, Conn., against passage of House bill 9753, or any other bill for enforced Sunday observance; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.
5221. By Mr. FESS: Petition of the United Presbyterian Church Presbytery, of Sidney, Ohio, indorsing Senate Joint Resolution 31, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to enact uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce and urging its early passage by Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
5222. Also, petition of the United Presbyterian Presbytery, of Sidney, Ohio, indorsing House bill 9753, to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia and urging expedience in its passage; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.
5223. Also, petition of the United Presbyterian Church Presbytery, of Sidney, Ohio, indorsing House Joint Resolution 131, proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in the United States and urging its early consideration and passage by Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5224. By Mr. FRENCH: Petition of the Walla Walla Presbytery, of Lewiston, Idaho, indorsing Senate Joint Resolution 31; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5225. By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Petition of the Presbytery of Monmouth, Ill., relative to Senate Joint Resolution 31, House Joint Resolution 131, and House bill 9753; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5226. Also, petition of Mr. E. Sanstrom, of Moline, Ill., and others, relative to Senate bill 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5227. By Mr. KING: Petition of A. P. Heidbreder and 18 other members of the Pattern Makers' League of Quincy, Ill., urging passage of House bill 10967, a bill to relieve unemployment, to remove the financial incentive to war, etc.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5228. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Retail Dry Goods Association, of New York City, N. Y., relative to American valuation plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5229. By Mr. LEA of California: Petition of residents of Sonoma County, Calif., protesting against the compulsory Sunday observance bills for the District of Columbia (H. R. 4388 and 9753); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5230. By Mr. MAGEE: Petition of the Presbytery of Syracuse, N. Y., indorsing Senate Joint Resolution 31; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5231. Also, petition of the Presbytery of Syracuse, N. Y., indorsing House bill 9753; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5232. Also, petition of the Presbytery of Syracuse, N. Y., indorsing House Joint Resolution 131; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5233. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of the California Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. W. A. Fitzgerald, president, of Berkeley, Calif., indorsing the Sterling-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

5234. Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Feather River Division, No. 800, of Portola, Calif., indorsing House bill 10798 and urging its passage; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5235. Also, petition of Alameda District, California Federation of Women's Clubs, indorsing the Johnson bill for the establishment of a forest experiment station in California in connection with the State university; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5236. By Mr. SNYDER: Petitions of North Star Grange, of Cold Brook, N. Y.; East Schuyler Grange, of Frankfort, N. Y.; and Little Falls Grange, of Little Falls, N. Y., favoring equal privileges in grange and land banks which other American banks enjoy; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

5237. Also, petition of G. A. Mickle, F. G. Harkins, and U. D. Teepell, of Rome, N. Y.; P. F. O'Toole, F. J. Flanagan, and John Manier, of Utica, N. Y., favoring passage of the Chandler bill (H. R. 9198) providing for an increase in pensions for veterans of the War with Spain; to the Committee on Pensions.

5238. By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: Petition of Kittanning (Pa.) Presbytery, indorsing House bill 9753 to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5239. By Mr. TILSON: Petition of the Connecticut Fish and Game Protective Association, urging the passage of House bill 5823; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5240. By Mr. WEBSTER: Resolution recently adopted by the Presbytery of Wenatchee, State of Washington, indorsing Senate joint resolution 31 and urging its early consideration and passage by Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5241. Also, resolution recently adopted by the Presbytery of Wenatchee, State of Washington, indorsing House bill 9753 and urging its early consideration and passage by Congress; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5242. Also, resolution recently adopted by the Presbytery of Wenatchee, State of Washington, indorsing House joint resolution 131 and urging its early consideration and passage by Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 22, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2158) to provide for the monthly payment of pensions.

The message also announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices.

The message further announced that the House had passed without amendment Senate bills of the following titles:

S. 157. An act for the relief of the Rosen Riechardt Brokerage Co. of St. Louis, Mo.;

S. 518. An act to carry out the provisions of an act approved July 1, 1902, known as the act entitled "An act to accept, ratify, and confirm a proposed agreement submitted by the Kansas or Kaw Indians of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," and to provide for a settlement to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld, who were enrolled as members of the said tribe after the lands and moneys of said tribe had been divided;

S. 667. An act for the relief of John B. H. Waring;

S. 1077. An act to authorize the payment of $5,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject, killed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, on November 25, 1915;

S. 1610. An act to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.;

S. 1733. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the president of the Milwaukee Press Club, of Milwaukee, Wis., the bell of the wrecked cruiser Milwaukee;

S. 1767. An act for the relief of the owner of the derrick Capitol;

S. 2147. An act to authorize patent to the Ed E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) of certain lands;

S. 2765. An act for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.; and

S. 3268. An act to authorize the Chicago, Detroit & Canada Grand Trunk Junction Railroad Co., or its successors or assigns, to lease certain of its properties in the State of Michigan.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 1059) for the relief of J. B. Waterman;

A bill (S. 1813) for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower;

A bill (S. 1814) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia;

A bill (S. 1817) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss; and

A bill (S. 2186) granting certain lands in Hot Springs, Ark., to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association.

The message further announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 241. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a perpetual easement for railroad right of way and a right of way for a public highway over and upon a portion of the military reservation of Fort Sheridan, in the State of Illinois;

H. R. 463. An act granting a patent to Joseph Robicheau;

H. R. 540. An act for the relief of Bradley Sykes;

H. R. 546. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay war risk insurance to the foster parents of Edward Short;

H. R. 1290. An act for the relief of Cornelius Dugan;

H. R. 1482. An act for the relief of James T. Farrill;

H. R. 1723. An act for the relief of Edward J. Schaefer;

H. R. 1892. An act for the relief of L. A. McMullen;

H. R. 2614. An act for the relief of Luke Ratigan;

H. R. 2694. An act for the relief of Seth J. Harris, Jimmie Lou Martin, Mary Holloman, and William Henry Coleman;

H. R. 2722. An act for the relief of W. W. McGrath;

H. R. 3034. An act for the relief of Lizzie Askeli;

H. R. 4619. An act for the relief of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.;

H. R. 4622. An act for the relief of the Lloyd Mediterraneo Societa Italiana di Navigazione, owners of the Italian steamer Titania;

H. R. 4845. An act for the relief of J. W. La Bare;

H. R. 4894. An act for the relief of George W. Posey;

H. R. 5251. An act for the relief of Ruperto Vilche;

H. R. 5668. An act for the relief of Cora T. Dering;

H. R. 5768. An act to amend and correct the military record of Alvah B. Doble;

H. R. 5791. An act for the relief of Robert Russell;

H. R. 5820. An act to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps;

H. R. 5918. An act for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.;

H. R. 6134. An act for the relief of estate of Anne C. Shymer;
H. R. 6966. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup major of Field Artillery in the United States Army;
H. R. 7052. An act for the relief of G. C. Caldwell;
H. R. 7425. An act for the relief of Zah Barmon;
H. R. 7695. An act for the relief of James E. Connors;
H. R. 7967. An act granting certain lands to Escambia County, Fla., for a public park;
H. R. 8073. An act for the relief of the Kineo Trust Co.;
H. R. 8374. An act for the relief of the estate of Frank W. Knight;
H. R. 8767. An act for the relief of F. E. Taylor and B. C. Broom;
H. R. 8845. An act for the relief of Mattie Alexander;
H. R. 9866. An act authorizing the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. to sue the United States to recover damages resulting from collision;
H. R. 10179. An act for the relief of Americus Enfield; and
H. R. 10643. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3317. An act to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 N., range 32 W., Beltrami County, Minn.;
H. R. 927. An act for the relief of Capt. Fred S. Johnston;
H. R. 2004. An act for the relief of Frank Ferrin;
H. R. 2158. An act to provide for the monthly payment of pensions;
H. R. 2393. An act to provide for the establishment on the Mississippi River of a fish-rescue station, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce;
H. R. 3057. An act for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown;
H. R. 3270. An act for the relief of Estella Barnett;
H. R. 5762. An act providing for a municipal park for the city of Butte, Mont.;
H. R. 7234. An act for the relief of Miles Swift;
H. R. 8342. An act to empower the Attorney General of the United States to fix the compensation of clerks of the United States district courts;
H. R. 8460. An act to authorize the occupation and use of certain lands in Alaska by Ketchikan Post No. 3, American Legion, and for other purposes; and
H. R. 9710. An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, North Dakota and South Dakota.

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE IN WYOMING (S. DOC. NO. 191).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 277, information relative to negotiations with private parties for the operation of lands included in Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3, Wyoming No. 1, commonly known as the "Teapot Dome," which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REPORT OF NEAR EAST RELIEF (S. DOC. NO. 192).

Mr. LODGE. I present a report to the Congress of the United States from the Near East Relief, as required by law, which I ask be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present petitions in favor of the joint resolution for the homeland of the Jews in Palestine, and ask that the names of the organizations be printed.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the list of organizations petitioning was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Chevra Mishraye Shabor, of New York City, Samuel Thomas Hefsky, president; Congregation Agudat Ahim, David Abrahams, president; Orange City Lodge, T. O. B. B., Joseph Shurkin, president; Daughters of Israel, Mrs. Sara Pinsky, president; Orange Zion District, Sam Friedlander, president, all in the State of New Jersey; the Organized Jews of Port Arthur, Tex., William Plettman, president; the Zionist Organization of Fargo, N. Dak., Harry Lashkowitz, president; the Jewish Fund Volunteers' Association of Detroit, Mich., P. Slomovitz, president; of the Joint Session of B. N. A. I., Israel Hebrew Ladies Aid Society, the Mizrachi Society, the Y. M. H. A. and the Y. W. H. A., of Steubenville, Ohio; the Young Men's Hebrew Association, of Boston, Newburyport, and Fall River, in the State of Massachusetts; the Independent Order of Brith Abraham, of Fargo, N. Dak.; the Communial Hebrew School, the Independent Order of Brith Abraham, the Congregation Beth Israel, the Jewish Library of New Orleans, the Ladies' Auxiliary Chevra Thilim, United Ben Lodge, I. O. B. S., the Hebrew Fraternal Association, Congregation Chevra Ihilum, Ladies' Rachael Ben Association, United Brotherlove Association, and the Young Jadaeah, of New Orleans, La.

Mr. KELLOGG. I present a telegram in the form of a petition, which I ask be printed in the RECORD, together with a list of names, from each of whom I have received a similar telegram or communication in the form of a petition.

There being no objection, the telegram and list of names were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DULUTH, MINN., April 19, 1922.

Hon. FRANK B. KELLOGG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I trust and hope that you will use your best endeavors to report favorably the Lodge resolution for a Jewish homeland in Palestine. I believe that the vast majority of Americans, whether Jew or gentile, are strongly in favor of this resolution. Your wonderful record for fairness to all should urge you to work for it.

JOSEPH VERTELNEY,
President Duluth Hebrew Brotherhood.

L. Fox, president Sons of Israel Lodge, Duluth; Kodrivrim Club of Duluth, Duluth; Dr. I. L. Rypins and Dr. Maurise Lefkovits, St. Paul; Samuel K. Davis, president Young People's League, Duluth; Samuel Lewis, president Independent Order B'nai B'rith, Hibbing; Joseph Vertelney, president Hebrew Brotherhood, Duluth; Sam Kaner, president Adath Israel Synagogue, Duluth; John Salem, Palestine National League, St. Paul; A. I. Mogelson, Duluth; E. Friedman, president B'nai Israel Congregation, Duluth; A. Horwitz, president Tiffereth Israel Congregation, Duluth; J. S. Saari, Eveleth; Anton Leohovic, pastor Holy Family Church, Eveleth; L. C. Smith, pastor Presbyterian Church, Eveleth; P. J. Maloney, pastor St. Patrick's Church, Eveleth; I. B. Aarons, president Duluth Zionist District, Duluth; C. A. Whitman, president First National Bank, Eveleth; Solomon Sax, vice president Eveleth Library, Eveleth; J. Weiner, president Eveleth Zionist District, Eveleth; Abe Goldberg, president Eveleth Lodge, No. 895, Eveleth; Harry Ellis, president Congregation Agudath Achim, Eveleth; Victor E. Essling, mayor, Eveleth; Dr. N. N. Cohen, president Western State Bank, Minneapolis; Sol. Fligelman, St. Paul; Philip Kleinman, St. Paul Zionist District, St. Paul; Rabbi Philip Kleinman, St. Paul; Rabbi J. B. Hurwitz, St. Paul; Rabbi J. Meyerowitz, St. Paul; Rabbi H. Simon, St. Paul; E. H. Hatch, Eveleth; Fr. McKeogh, pastor Italian Catholic Church, Eveleth; Zionist Organization, Chisholm; Rabbi S. Tetlitz, Duluth; Rabbi I. Lebendiger, Duluth; Jewish Ladies' Aid, Chisholm; B'nai Zion Congregation, Chisholm; Rabbi C. David Matt, Minneapolis; Joseph H. Schanfeld, president Adath Yeshurun Congregation, Minneapolis; Leo H. Frisch, American Jewish World, Minneapolis; Max Davis, president Kennesseth Israel Congregation, Minneapolis; Anna Goldvarg, president Young Women's Hebrew Association, Minneapolis; B. Bankman, president Zionist Organizations, Virginia; A. N. Bearman, president Temple Beth El, Minneapolis; Alfred E. Koenig, Council of Americanization, Minneapolis; Rabbi A. M. Heller, Minneapolis; Mrs. Alex Berman, president Ladies' Auxiliary of Talmud Torah, Minneapolis; M. D. Mirviss, Minneapolis; Jesse B. Calmenson, editor American Jewish World, St. Paul; Dr. Myron Sherper, physician, 336 Lowry Building, St. Paul; Harry Rosenthal, wholesale general merchandise, St. Paul; Dr. S. N. Magilner, physician, St. Paul; Milton P. Firestone, lawyer, St. Paul; Gustavus Loevinger, attorney, St. Paul; Moses W. Skorish, wholesale jobber, St. Paul; Dr. George J. Gordon, physician, Minneapolis; Louis B. Feigelman, jeweler, Minneapolis; Barney Tremblatt, president Bloom Bros. Co., Minneapolis; Dr. I. W. Marcus, editor Saturday Post, Minneapolis.

Mr. MYERS presented a resolution of the Kalispell (Mont.) Kiwanis Club, favoring inclusion of a provision for the reclamation of logged-off land in the McNary reclamation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a resolution of East Dalkena Local Grange, No. 30, of Dalkena, Wash., favoring the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution of East Dalkena Local Grange, No. 30, of Dalkena, Wash., favoring the passage of Senate bill 2604, the Ladd honest money bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BORAH presented a resolution adopted by the annual conference of the Indian Valley Cattle and Horse Growers' Association, at Indian Valley, Idaho, favoring retention of the administration of the national forests in the Department of Agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Drummond, St. Anthony, Roxburg, and Squirrel, all in the State of Idaho, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by the Oklahoma State Association of Cleaners and Dyers, of Tulsa, Okla., favoring the passage of the so-called Capper-French truth in fabric bill, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Twenty-fourth Annual Congress, Kansas Daughters of the American Revolution, at Pittsburg, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to create a national military park embracing the revolutionary fortifications at Yorktown, Va., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution adopted by group 5, Georgia Bankers' Association, at Cordell, Ga., expressing appreciation for the aid rendered by the Georgia delegation in Congress in securing the passage of the War Finance Corporation act and favoring further extension of such act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by group 1 of the Georgia bankers, at Tifton, Ga., favoring further extension of the War Finance Corporation act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. ASHURST presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Phoenix, Ariz., favoring the enactment of legislation to create a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Chamber of Commerce of Phoenix, Ariz., in regular session assembled, respectfully represent that—

"Whereas the world-wide extension of popular Government has placed upon the masses of the people responsibilities never borne by their forefathers; and

"Whereas enlightenment and the development of wise leaders can only be brought about by educational process; and

"Whereas it is evident, from a consideration of conditions now existing in this country as regards illiteracy and the unsatisfactory assimilation of immigrants that methods of handling these problems now in force are inadequate; and

"Whereas a bill is now pending in the Congress of the United States providing for the acceptance of national responsibility for and aid to public education through the appropriation of $100,000,000 to the several States, and the establishing of a Federal department of education: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Chamber of Commerce of Phoenix, Ariz., That we hereby memorialize Congress to enact into law the Towner-Sterling bill, known as the education bill; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

Passed by the board of directors this 12th day of April, A. D. 1922.

[SEAL.] JOHN A. BARBER, President.

Attest:

HARRY WELCH, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3472) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920 (Rept. No. 624); and

A bill (S. 3488) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920 (Rept. No. 625).

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 258) requesting the President to furnish the Senate information concerning appointments by Executive order, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 628) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4368) for the relief of the owners of the barge Havana (Rept. No. 626); and

A bill (H. R. 7272) for the relief of Monroe B. Shealy (Rept. No. 627).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3498) for the creation of a national monument in Montana, to be known as Battle of the Bear's Paw; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 3499) to provide credits to secure the successful production and profitable and orderly marketing of agricultural products and live stock in the United States; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 3500) granting an increase of pension to Abigail R. Ellet; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3501) for the relief of the dependent widow and children of Herman Mednick, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3502) to cancel an allotment made to Mary Crane, deceased, embracing lands on the Winnebago Reservation in Nebraska; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENT.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask, before we proceed with the calendar, that the resolution (S. Res. 258) which has just been reported from the Committee on Civil Service by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] may be considered. It calls for certain data and there will be no objection to it at all if we can consider it. There will be no discussion.

Mr. LODGE. If there is no discussion I have no objection, but the Senator must remember we are under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that the Senator from Mississippi wait until we get through with the calendar under the unanimous-consent order and then he can call up the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the unanimous-consent order the calendar is to be called, beginning at the first number, and gone through with, and unobjected bills disposed of. Then if there is any time other business may be taken up on motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not find any unanimous-consent agreement printed on the calendar.

Mr. ASHURST. The Chair will find it at page 5814 of the RECORD, about the middle of the left-hand column.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the understanding had on yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire—and if the Chair can not advise me perhaps the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] can—whether under the unanimous-consent agreement an objection carries over a bill objected to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The understanding was that on the first call of the calendar an objection could be raised and the bill would go over, but on the second call bills can be taken up on motion.

Mr. KING. On the first call they can not be taken up on motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the understanding.

MORGAN MILLER.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there are two claims bills on the calendar which went over at the last call of the calendar at the request of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I think he stated that possibly he might not object when they came up again. It is necessary for me to be away this afternoon, and I ask unanimous consent that those two bills—Senate bill 103 and Senate bill 1245—be called to see if there is objection to them or whether they can be considered under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the Senator asking to advance them and take them up first, and I shall not object to their consideration. I may ask some questions and may feel constrained to vote against them, but I shall not object to their consideration.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what I understood. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 411, the bill (S. 103) for the relief of Morgan Miller.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$3,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Morgan Miller the sum of $3,000 for injuries sustained on February 3, 1920, while standing in the safety zone waiting for a street car at the corner of Fort Street west and Artillery Avenue, in the city of Detroit, Mich., by being struck by a United States mail truck which was running at a rapid rate of speed and without lights, it being 6 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m. and quite dark. Said Morgan Miller's head was badly injured, left shoulder and hip greatly bruised, right knee and ankle wrenched quite severely, and the ligaments badly torn. He was in the hospital about five days and has been confined to his bed for three months, and it will be eight months before he is able to do any kind of work whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT JUNE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I now ask that the other bill, Calendar No. 445 (S. 1245), for the relief of Robert June, be considered. It was read and discussed to some extent the other day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Robert June, of Detroit, Mich., out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 as compensation to him for injuries sustained in the month of June, 1908, on the Panama Canal, while employed by the Isthmian Canal Commission in the capacity of foreman.

Mr. KING. This is the bill to which the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] called attention the other day?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is.

Mr. KING. And the Senator from Michigan was to obtain some information, I believe?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The information was whether this case comes under the law or not. The accident occurred before the law referred to was enacted. The man from that time to this has been either in the hospitals of the United States or under medical care. The case was not covered by the employees' liability act.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that in a number of instances where applications were made for relief and it was proven that the applicants were without the law, a bill was passed simply transferring them to a status under which they could invoke the law. Why should not that be done here?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The reason is, to my mind, very clear. The accident occurred without any fault on the part of the claimant at all. Colonel Goethals stated the facts of the case, and all connected with it say there is no dispute on that proposition at all. The man, after receiving the injury, went to work, thinking he could get along without making any claim, and he did work at times as best he could until he was discharged. Then he went to the hospital shortly after that. He thought, in the first place, that he was getting along all right, but shortly afterwards, as the result of the injury, which nobody disputes, his side became practically useless, involving his knee, ankle, and hip as well. This young man in the employ of the Government is incapacitated for his life's work. The bill is simply to relieve him.

Mr. SMOOT. The question I called attention to is the amount that is appropriated. The law as originally passed provided that an injured employee of the Government on the Panama Canal should receive one year's salary, and we have followed that year in and year out. The pending bill appropriates $5,000 for a man who was injured on the Panama Canal. Does the Senator know what his salary was?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I believe it was $175 a month.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be $2,100 a year. Would it not be the proper thing to amend the bill so as to give the man $2,100?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It does not seem to me that it would be proper at all, for the reason that the man has paid out much more than that amount in hospital bills. I think he paid out more than that at Johns Hopkins alone, where he went. He stayed there for treatment during practically a year and was discharged in this crippled condition. All of the doctors who have testified say that there is no hope of his recovery.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how he justifies a proceeding by which we propose to discriminate in favor of persons who sustain injuries at the hands of the Government? Congress in its wisdom has passed a law and has fixed certain standards under which payment shall be made for any injuries received. Everybody who may be injured in the Government service since the passage of that law receives compensation under those standards and under that act. Now, here is a man who was injured prior to the passage of that law——

Mr. TOWNSEND. He was injured a month before that law became operative.

Mr. KING. It would seem to me that he ought to be more than gratified if Congress makes the law retroactive so far as he is concerned and places him in a position where he may receive the same compensation for the same character of injuries as other beneficiaries of the law receive.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If that is the position the Senate shall take, it is all right. I have, however, presented the case on account of its peculiar merits. I do not introduce all the bills which are presented to me; but I look into every case with as much care as possible. This case appealed to me very strongly. This man was of good ability. The Senator from Utah may put himself in this man's place. If the Senator from Utah were an employee of the Government and had suffered an injury as a result of which he became dependent, practically, and his opportunities for earning a living were destroyed through no fault of his, but through the fault of another employee of the Government, it would seem to me that, at least, we ought to make him whole. So in this case I think that we should not only pay Mr. June a year's salary but that we ought to pay his doctor's bills which have been incurred in order that he might regain his health.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Michigan is the argument which has been urged in every State against the passage of workmen's compensation acts, but the States and the Federal Government, in the exercise, I believe, of sound wisdom, and in the interest of a sound public policy, have considered that it was better to have the workmen's compensation acts prescribe certain standards and to bring everybody within those standards.

I say to the Senator now, with a due appreciation of his position and with the utmost sympathy for this man, that if we break down the standard, if we say now that the act which we have applied to every other man who has been hurt, perhaps just as badly and in some instances worse than this man, shall not apply, if we break the law down for this man, we shall have to break it down for the others; we shall be called upon over and over again to pass special pension bills which would nullify the general act which we have enacted, and which was enacted in the first instance to avoid appeals for the passage of special bills.

I ask the Senator to modify his bill so as to put this man into the same status as other men who have received like injuries. I think that he ought not to claim any greater advantage than anybody else who has been hurt.

Mr. TOWNSEND. All I can say is that the law seems to me to be very unjust in its application to this particular case. I do not care to make any motion; but if the Senator from Utah desires to amend the bill, and that shall be the sense of the Senate, that will be all right.

I do not wish to take up time out of order for the consideration of this bill, but, believing as I do that the amount fixed in the bill is the proper amount, I do not wish to move to reduce it.

Mr. KING. I do not know exactly in what form an amendment to the bill should be proposed.

Mr. SMOOT. The proper motion for my colleague to make would be to move to strike out the "$5,000" which is proposed to be appropriated by the bill and to insert in lieu thereof whatever amount he may think to be proper.

Mr. KING. No. I wish to amend the bill so that the claimant would get the benefits of the workmen's compensation act.

Mr. SMOOT. I think if my colleague should move to amend the bill by inserting "$2,500" he would practically cover the case.

Mr. KING. I think the claimant would receive more if he were brought under the workmen's compensation act; that he would get a certain amount for life——

Mr. TOWNSEND. For life?

Mr. KING. Yes; he would get a certain amount each month for life.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no. The bill as drawn provides for a lump-sum appropriation of $5,000. If it shall be amended so as to provide a lump sum of $2,500, that would not be sufficient to pay the man's doctors' bills; but if the Senator desires to amend the bill in that way——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess I do not like to move that amendment. I think the claimant ought to be put under the workmen's compensation act; but I will move to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu "$2,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, it is moved to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$2,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to move another amendment to the bill, but I shall have to state it hurriedly, and I am afraid that the amendment which I shall propose will hardly be in proper form. I move, however, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the following:

That Robert June, of Detroit, Mich.——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think his home is at Toledo.

Mr. KING. That is immaterial.

That Robert June, of Detroit, Mich., be placed upon the list of those obtaining the benefits of the workmen's compensation act, and that he shall receive the same benefits that are paid under said act to persons receiving like or similar injuries.

That amendment is, of course, inartistically drawn.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am afraid the Senator's proposed amendment would tend to complicate the matter. Under the motion which the Senator made a few moments ago this man would receive practically one year's compensation, which is substantially the same amount that would be paid, as I understand, under the workmen's compensation act.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is what the law provided shortly after his injury.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; within a month or so after the injury occurred.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan if, under the operation of the workmen's compensation act, he would not receive an allowance from month to month during life?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He would not; there is no question about that at all. If that were so I would move to repeal the act. The bill now under consideration is a plain relief bill, similar to hundreds of such bills which have been passed by Congress. The beneficiary under the bill has no status under the law now for any compensation; he does not come under the workmen's compensation act. Under the motion the Senator made a few moments ago he would be granted a lump sum of money to compensate him for the injury.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator why should he not be put under the workmen's compensation act?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have tried to state that to the Senator as best I could. If I did not know the case so thoroughly I would not so strongly urge the passage of the bill; but to me the case is a most appealing one. Here was a young, active, and promising man, who has been crippled for life, and who has spent almost as much as the bill reported proposes to give him in his attempt to recover his health. If I did not feel that the circumstances so strongly warranted it I would not ask for him special relief at all; I would not come here asking Congress to enact a special bill.

Mr. KING. I made a reply to the Senator a moment ago which I am compelled to make again, that that argument is always made against the adoption of workmen's compensation acts; but experience has demonstrated that in the long run injured persons obtain more by receiving a comparatively small amount under workmen's compensation acts than by resort to litigation, as a result of which some of them may get more, but after dividing with attorneys and paying court expenses, and so on, in the long run it has been demonstrated that injured persons receive less than they do even by having no limit upon the verdicts which juries might render. If we single this case out and give this man special consideration every man who has been injured or is hereafter injured in the Government service who would come within the workmen's compensation act would say, "My injuries are so serious that I do not wish to put myself under the workmen's compensation act; I will get a special bill through; the Senator from Michigan presented a special bill; he was not willing to put an injured employee in whom he was interested under this law. Why should I, with my serious injuries, come under that law?"

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think I know what a majority of the Senate wants in reference to this matter; but I know that it is not fair for me to stand here and occupy the time of the Senate when other measures are waiting to come up, and Senators are anxious to secure consideration for them. So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] proposing an appropriation of $2,500 instead of $5,000 was rejected, in order that I may accept the $2,500 amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was rejected? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

A bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$100,000" and to insert "$50,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 20 of section 24 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be amended to read as follows:

"20. Concurrent with the Court of Claims of all claims not exceeding $50,000 founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an executive department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect to which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States, either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty, if the United States were suable, and of all set-offs, counterclaims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the Government of the United States against any claimant against the Government in said court: Provided, however, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as giving to either the district courts or the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late Civil War and commonly known as 'war claims,' or to hear and determine other claims which had been rejected or reported on adversely prior to the 3d day of March, 1887, by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same, or to hear and determine claims for pensions; or as giving to the district courts jurisdiction of cases brought to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers of the United States or brought for such purpose by persons claiming as such officers or as assignees or legal representatives thereof; but no suit pending on the 27th day of June, 1898, shall abate or be effected by this provision: And provided further, That no suit against the Government of the United States shall be allowed under this paragraph unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made: Provided, That the claims of married women, first accrued during marriage, of persons under the age of 21 years, first accrued during minority, and of idiots, lunatics, insane persons, and persons beyond the seas at the time the claim accrued, entitled to the claim shall not be barred if the suit be brought within three years after the disability has ceased; but no other disability than those enumerated shall prevent any claim from being barred, nor shall any of the said disabilities operate cumulatively. All suits brought and tried under the provisions of this paragraph shall be tried by the court without a jury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS TRANSFERRED TO THE CALENDAR UNDER RULE IX.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in regard to the two bills next following on the calendar, the bill (S. 581) to repeal the act prohibiting increased pay under lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year, and the bill (S. 582) to repeal section 5 of the act approved June 22, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," I desire to say that the subject matter of those two bills is involved in the reclassification bill now pending before the Committee on Appropriations. Therefore those two bills may go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Why should they not be definitely postponed?

Mr. STERLING. I do not like to ask that they be definitely postponed.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, let them go to the calendar under Rule IX, so that they will not come up and go into the record every time the calendar is called.

Mr. STERLING. What will be the effect of that?

Mr. SMOOT. If the bills go over under Rule IX, they may be called up at any time.

Mr. STERLING. Very well. Then, I ask that the two bills to which I have referred may be placed on the calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1439) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill may also be transferred on the calendar to Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1807) to aid in stabilizing the coal industry, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 63) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RURAL HOMES.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some time ago the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] objected to that bill, as I have done, and it was understood that we were to see the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Fall. I telephoned the other day to the Interior Department, but the Secretary was about to leave the city. As soon as he returns, the Senator from Oregon and myself will have an interview with him, and we hope to reach some understanding with respect to this measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all I have to say is that Secretary Fall is very much in favor of the bill; he has favorably recommended it, and I can not for the life of me see why there should be objection to it. I think that it will reclaim more land in the United States than any other act which has been presented to the Congress. Of course, however, if there is objection the bill must go over.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I assume objection has been made by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the present consideration of the bill; but in answer to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] I wish to remark that this bill does not entirely fit in with the proposed larger scheme of reclamation. While I feel a great and deep interest in the subject, I want to discuss the matter in a practical way with the Secretary of the Interior. The junior Senator from Utah and I, in good faith, arranged to call on the Secretary of the Interior, but he has recently departed from the city. I can assure the senior Senator from Utah that there will be no unusual delay in the consideration of the bill.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2051) to amend section 3142 of the Revised Statutes, to permit an increase in the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and in the number of collectors of internal revenue from 64 to 74, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit that bill to be considered now?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President; I regret that I can not do so. I believe that possibly one additional district ought to be granted to New York; but, as I stated to the Senator from New York the other day, there is no reason why the Secretary of the Treasury and the internal revenue officers should not take from one State a district and create another one in New York. In some of the States there are too many districts now. Secretary McAdoo was willing to reduce the number that then existed and that now exist, notwithstanding the fact that the revenue then collected was more than is collected now or will be collected in the next year or two, if we are to believe the promises of our Republican friends. Now that we are diminishing the revenue, it is proposed to increase the number of revenue districts and necessarily the number of revenue officers. I am opposed to it.

Mr. CALDER. I hesitate to prolong the discussion, but the facts are that a great many more reports are being filed each year and the increasing of these districts tends to facilitate the Government's business, and from the standpoint of the Internal Revenue Department they insist that it would largely increase the amount of revenue collected.

Mr. KING. I think I can convince the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. Objection is made, Mr. President.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator permit the bill to be considered now?

Mr. KING. I object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 62) for the relief of Charles K. Bond, alias Kimball W. Rollins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1829) for the relief of Walter Runke was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the report be read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in frankness I shall have to state to the Senator that I shall object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, if my friend is going to object, I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate by having the report read. I presumed that having objected five or six times, he had exhausted his objections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE A. ROBERTSON.

The bill (S. 496) for the relief of George A. Robertson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the provisions of the act approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States receiving injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," are hereby extended to George A. Robertson for the loss of his right eye while employed by the Department of the Interior in Glacier National Park in the year 1913, and that he be paid such sums as would properly be due him within the provisions of section 4 of the said act of September 7, 1916. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make payments in compliance with the terms of the said act of September 7, 1916, and in accordance with the rules and regulations of said commission. Any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated is hereby appropriated for the purpose of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 985) to amend the provisions of an act relating to certain railway corporations, owning or operating street railways in the District of Columbia, approved June 5, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not see the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], here. I understand that efforts are being made now by the companies to bring about a merger. If that can be done without legislation, it is very desirable. I suggest that the bill be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) authorizing retirement as warrant officers of certain Army field clerks and field clerks Quartermaster Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2040) to provide for compulsory school attendance of children, to provide for the taking of a school census, to create the department of school attendance and work permits for the administration of this act and the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, within the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. The discussion of that bill will take some time. I suggest that it be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 32) for the relief of contractors, subcontractors, and material men who have suffered loss by reason of Government orders, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Has the bill been read, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was read when reached before on the calendar.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of the bill from the Senator from Washington. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in substance this bill simply gives authority to the Secretary of the Navy to settle contracts made during the war. Many of these contracts were interfered with by the Government itself after they had been entered into. At the conclusion of the report of the committee on the bill there is a statement, which the Senator will notice, from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he says:

I am strongly in favor of legislation of this kind, which will do justice to the contractors and still safeguard the interests of the Government. I urge speedy action by the Congress. These claims have been pending for some time, and, with many of the small contractors, their allowance may mean the difference between solvency and insolvency. Our inability to meet all the claims works a hardship that should be removed as soon as may be.

There is a limitation on the bill that nobody who has made as much as 6 per cent on his entire volume of business can have any claim, regardless of any profit that he may be losing by reason of Government orders. It is intended simply within that limitation to relieve contractors from the interference of the Government with the performance of the contracts.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what has been done with the numerous claims made by persons having contracts or alleged contracts with the Government for damages because of the breach of the contracts by the Government?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In the case of the War Department, the Post Office Department, public works under the Treasury Department, and rivers and harbors there has been more or less remedial legislation, and many of these claims have been settled; but there has been none so far as the Treasury Department is concerned.

Mr. KING. As I understood, a commission was appointed by the War Department to pass upon the claims presented; and Secretary Weeks sent to the Senate, in response to a resolution which I offered, a letter showing the number of claims which had been presented, the number allowed, the number disallowed, the amounts allowed, and so forth, and the fact that some of the claims had been reopened; and that is what induced the resolution. A commission was appointed, with quasi-judicial powers, to make a thorough investigation into all of those claims, and it did investigate, and paid very large sums and settled very large amounts. Was not some commission appointed in the Navy Department?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; there was not. That is the great need for this legislation. Of course, it has been delayed by the expectation that there would be a general omnibus legislative bill relating to the Navy, since the division of appropriations from legislative matters in the House of Representatives, and the Senate has been expecting that the bill which has been reported out of the committee in the House would be acted upon and come to the Senate, and there would be an opportunity in connection with that bill to take up such matters as this.

Mr. KING. In view of the length of time that has elapsed since the alleged breach of contract by the Government, does not the Senator think that the matters ought to go to the Court of Claims?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would simply mean ruin to the smaller contractors. They could not possibly maintain themselves in the Court of Claims and wait the length of time that would be necessary to get an adjudication. It would amount to a denial of justice; and the committee, after careful examination, was of the opinion that there is no danger that the Secretary of the Navy is going to be too liberal with these people. The strictest sort of limitations are placed upon the allowance. The object is to give the head of the department, representing the Government in these matters, the same sort of power to settle a contract that a private individual would have in the case of parties with whom he is dealing.

I hope the Senator will not insist upon his objection, but will allow this measure to go through.

Mr. KING. I ask that the report may be read. It will take a little time, but it will give us further light on the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the report.

The Assistant Secretary read the report (No. 191), submitted by Mr. POINDEXTER on June 29, 1921, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 32) for the relief of contractors, subcontractors, and material men who have suffered loss by reason of Government orders, having had the same under consideration, report favorably thereon and recommend that the bill do pass with amendments, as follows:

After the word "order," line 2, page 2, strike out the words "or action."

After the word "authority," line 2, page 2, insert the words "not authorized by the contract."

After the word "mentioned," line 3, page 2, change the semicolon to a period and strike out the remainder of section 1.

The bill seeks to provide means for reimbursing contractors under the Navy Department on contracts made between the declaration of war and the signing of the armistice for losses and damage caused by governmental action.

Section 1 covers claims on contracts entered into between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, inclusive, and requires that such claims shall be in writing, verified under oath, and shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Navy within six months from the date of approval of the act.

Section 2 prohibits claimants whose entire volume of business with the Government during the aforesaid period yielded a net profit of not less than 6 per cent from obtaining the relief carried in the bill.

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to obtain data, to make rules and regulations, to summon and examine witnesses, and to procure the books and papers of claimants, in carrying out the duties of the act.

Section 4 authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Navy to decide, find, fix, and determine the sum due any claimant, and also directs that in like cases should it be found that any liquidated damages are due the Government against such claimants the Secretary of the Navy shall so find.

Section 5 appropriates the sum of $25,000 to enable the Secretary of the Navy to carry out the provisions of the bill.

Similar legislation has already been enacted to apply to contracts of the Post Office Department, public-buildings work under the Treasury Department, and rivers and harbors and other War Department contracts. This bill does not seek to legalize informal contracts but only to open the way for the correction of apparent injustices which have arisen under contracts formally entered into and which were not foreseen when the contracts were made.

The measure has the approval of the Acting Secretary of the Navy, and the following is quoted from his letter of June 8, 1921:

"I am strongly in favor of legislation of this kind which will do justice to the contractors and still safeguard the interests of the Government. I urge speedy action by the Congress. These claims have been pending for some time, and, with many of the small contractors, their allowance may mean the difference between solvency and insolvency. Our inability to meet all the claims works a hardship that should be removed as soon as may be."

Mr. KING. I regret that the report does not state more fully what the claims are, the aggregate amount, or the possible liability of the Government. We are asked practically to shoot into the dark. Is this a million or ten million or one hundred million dollars that we are obligating the Government to pay?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is impossible to tell, of course, what the amount will be, but somewhere in the neighborhood of a million dollars, so far as claims have been filed.

Mr. KING. A million dollars only?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that is my information. I inquired of the department in regard to that in response to a similar question asked by the Senator on another occasion.

Mr. KING. Do these contracts relate to warships or munitions and supplies, and so forth?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They relate to munitions, supplies, and to the construction of ships, buildings, and various other war activities. It is confined entirely to contracts made during the period of the war.

Mr. KING. Is the Secretary of the Navy authorized to make payment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized simply to find the amount due. I assume that an appropriation by Congress would have to be made subsequently to pay any award made by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. KING. Is there a provision in the bill that he shall report his findings to Congress, and that Congress then shall pass upon the same?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; there is no provision to that effect. Of course, it would be absolutely necessary, in applying for appropriations, for his report to be made to Congress.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator agree to an amendment to this effect, that the Secretary of the Navy shall make a full and detailed report of his proceedings under this act to Congress on or before such date as the Senator may suggest?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection at all to such an amendment.

Mr. KING. I suggest that as an amendment. Probably it should be made a part of section 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. KING. Before it is stated, may I inquire of the Senator what time he thinks should be inserted in the amendment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would say six months.

Mr. KING. Say, on or before December 1 next?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. KING. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May we not have a vote on that amendment?

Mr. KING. Let us make it on or before December 1, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add, at the end of section 4, the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall make a full and detailed report of his proceedings under this act to Congress on or before December 1, 1922.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the committee amendments in their order.

The amendments of the Committee on Naval Affairs were, on page 2, line 6, after the word "order," to strike out the words "or action"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "authority," to insert the following words "not authorized by the contract"; on page 2, line 7, after the word "mentioned," to strike out the semicolon and the rest of the paragraph down to and including line 14, as follows: "and the execution of a final settlement or release by such claimant prior to the approval of this act shall not be a conclusive bar to his relief hereunder if such claimant is otherwise entitled to such relief under this act, but such settlement or release may be considered by the Secretary of the Navy as a circumstance bearing upon the question of the justice and equity of such claim" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to make thorough investigation and determination of the merits of all claims which may be submitted to him in writing, and verified under oath, within six months from the date of approval of this act, for any loss or delay alleged to have been caused to any contractor, subcontractor, or material man in the performance of any contract entered into by any person, firm, corporation, or association with the United States through the Secretary of the Navy or the Navy Department from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, inclusive, which loss or delay was caused to such contractor, subcontractor, or material man, by the action of any Government agency by reason of priority orders for material or transportation, commandeering of property or material, or other order of Government authority not authorized by the contract, on or between the dates above mentioned.

SEC. 2. No claimant shall obtain such relief whose entire volume of business with the Government or as a subcontractor or material man upon contracts with the Government during the period aforesaid shall have yielded a net profit of not less than 6 per cent.

SEC. 3. In the performance of the duties of this act, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent therewith, as may be proper and necessary for the orderly conduct of his duties thereunder, and is hereby authorized to summon witnesses and examine them under oath, acting either in person or through such agencies as he may establish, and to require claimants to exhibit their books and papers, and to obtain from the Secretary of the Treasury income tax and other financial reports, where the same may be pertinent to the question under inquiry.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Navy shall decide each claim presented under this act in accordance with the principles of justice and equity with a view of relieving claimants or petitioners hereunder from any loss caused by the action of the Government hereinbefore stated, and if it shall be found that on account of such action of the Government any sum of money shall be due to such claimant, not exceeding a net profit of 6 per cent upon the entire volume of business which such claimant may have had with the Government on account of contracts during the period mentioned, the Secretary of the Navy shall fix and determine the same, and if it shall be found that by reason of any such act of the Government, as stated above, the Government shall have a claim for liquidated damages against any such claimant or petitioner on account of any such contract mentioned in the first section of this act for delay in its performance, which delay shall have been caused by such Government action, the Secretary of the Navy shall so find, and such Government claim for damages on account of such delay shall be canceled and become of no effect.

SEC. 5. The sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Navy to carry out the purposes of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. I notice that in section 4, line 19, the bill refers to any claim for liquidated damages which the Government may have. I do not know that it would have any claim for liquidated damages. It looks to me as if it should read "unliquidated" damages. At any rate, the Government should have a right to set up a claim either for liquidated or unliquidated damages.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to striking out the word "liquidated," if the Senator prefers.

Mr. DIAL. I suggest that the Senator agree to an amendment making it read "liquidated or unliquidated."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "liquidated," on page 3, line 19, insert the words "or unliquidated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEBATE UNDER RULE VIII.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to Rule VIII, under which we are proceeding. That rule provides that each Senator shall be entitled to speak once, and for five minutes only, upon any question. I shall ask for the enforcement of that rule while I am in the Chamber.

RURAL HOMES.

The bill (S. 2170) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCNARY. Before anyone suggests that this bill shall go over, I want to say that it has been displaced by a bill later reported by the committee, Senate bill 3254. So I ask that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and Senate bill 2170 is indefinitely postponed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent that we shall go back to Senate bill 2040, which appears on the calendar just before the bill that was acted on a few moments ago. It is a bill which relates to a school census of the District of Columbia and is known also as the compulsory school attendance bill. I have been trying for several weeks to get it before the Senate. There is a great demand from the school authorities here for the prompt consideration of the measure.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the importance of the bill. It is a long measure, and I am quite sure the Senator is aware it could not be passed under the limitation of five minutes on speeches and permitting only one speech by each Senator.

Mr. CAPPER. I do not know of any opposition to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There is opposition to it. I suggest that the Senator wait until we get through with the calendar, and then if he wants to move to take it up, under the agreement he can do that; but I would like to have it go over now until that time.

Mr. CAPPER. That is all right, if I can have an understanding to get it up after we conclude the consideration of the bills on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement we are to consider the bills on the calendar to which there is no objection, and after the consideration of those bills has been concluded, any bill may be taken up by the order of the Senate.

Mr. CAPPER. I wish to give notice now that as soon as we get through the calendar I shall ask that this bill be taken up.

The bill (S. 1976) to amend the first paragraph of section 2 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether he will not consent to that bill being passed over until the joint committee of which the Senator is chairman and I am a member makes its report to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAPPER. This measure has been considered by the Senate District Committee, and I do not think it is a matter the joint school committee has under consideration especially. The House District Committee has already considered the measure, and my understanding is that they have made a favorable report, so that it is really not a part of any program which might be presented by the joint school committee.

Mr. KING. The Senator no doubt knows that the method of appointing the school board in this District is the subject of discussion in the joint committee. Some have suggested that the members of that board be appointed by the President, others by the judges of the Supreme Court, others by the commissioners, and others that they be chosen by an election upon the part of the people. I know it is the subject of discussion in our joint committee, and I am sure we will make a recommendation, I hope unanimously.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will save time by objecting to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2391) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 183) imposing a duty of 90 per cent on all goods exported from the United States for the use of the American Expeditionary Forces and its allied forces and which have been sold to any foreign Government or person when reimported into the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2515) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 268) for the relief of William O. Mallahan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2035) for the relief of William M. Carroll was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 150) directing the Secretary of the Senate to employ a special officer for the office of the Secretary of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2573) to amend section 198 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill has been considered and amended. There is an amendment pending offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 748) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles F. Getchell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ORIN THORNTON.

The bill (S. 1655) for the relief of Orin Thornton was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President. I reserve the right to object.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. ROBINSON November 23, 1921.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill had better go over, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Arkansas is interested in it, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the Secretary continue reading the report. If there is nothing in the report other than what we have heard already, I shall object.

The Assistant Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is entire as follows:

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report to accompany S. 1655:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1655) for the relief of Orin Thornton, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with an amendment as follows:

At the end of line 8 strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowances shall be considered to have accrued by reason of the passage of this act."

A report from the War Department on the case of Orin Thornton is appended hereto and made a part of this report, as follows:

Case of Orin Thornton, alleged former member of Company A, Third Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry.

The name Orin Thornton has not been found on the rolls on file in this office of Company A, or any other company of the Third Regiment Arkansas Infantry, Civil War. That regiment was also known as the Fourth Regiment Arkansas Cavalry.

A record is found, however, showing that one ——— Thornton was enrolled November 17, 1863, at Benton, Ark., and was mustered into service at that place December 8, 1863, with a detachment, as a private of the Third Arkansas Cavalry, to serve one year, which regiment (or battalion) subsequently became the Fourth Arkansas Cavalry (Fishback's). No later record of this ——— Thornton has been found in this office; hence there appears to be no official record showing whether he rendered any actual military service or whether he died in service, deserted, or was discharged either honorably or dishonorably. The Auditor for the War Department has informed this office that no record is found of any payment made to this man.

It has repeatedly been alleged in communications to this office by one Aren, Oren, or Arin Thornton, Aren B., Oren B., or Arin B. Thornton, that he served as a private in Company A, Fourth Arkansas Cavalry (Fishback's), said to have been previously known as Company A, Third Arkansas Infantry. The latest allegation is that he (as Orin Thornton) was mustered in about November 17, 1863, and was mustered out about March 28, 1864.

Respectfully submitted.

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
May 19, 1921.

The records of the War Department, as set forth in a letter from The Adjutant General, dated June 4, 1921, to Senator FRELINGHUYSEN, show that two persons named Thornton (one bearing the name of "William R." and the Christian name of the other being omitted) were enrolled November 17, 1863, at Benton, Ark., and were mustered into the service at that place December 8, 1863, as members of Company A, Third Arkansas Infantry, which was later known as the Fourth Arkansas Cavalry (Fishback's). Concerning this command, The Adjutant General in his letter of June 4, 1921, says:

"The above-mentioned Company A was one of the four incomplete companies of said regiment or battalion, which were mustered into the service in the latter part of 1863. Apparently, they were never formally mustered out of service, but it has been ascertained by this department that the duly mustered recruits of the organizations were disbanded March 28, 1864, at Little Rock, Ark. It is held by this department that this disbandment constituted a muster out of service and that the men were mustered out for the reason that their services were no longer required."

It seems conclusive, therefore, that said command was in the service from the date of enrollment, November 17, 1863, until March 28, 1864, when disbandment took place.

Concerning the identity of the Thornton whose Christian name does not appear in said records, this is made clear from affidavits of two of Thornton's former comrades, still surviving, Montgomery O. Campbell, now of Hot Springs, Ark., and Richard A. Wright, of Point Cedar, Ark., both of whom served with Orion Thornton in the command mentioned, Company A, Third Arkansas Infantry, afterwards known as Fourth Arkansas Cavalry (Fishback's).

Mr. SMOOT. The last report of the War Department, I think, justifies favorable action on the bill. I feel that wherever there is a reasonable doubt, we should give the man the benefit of the doubt. There is a reasonable doubt here, and I think it ought to be given to him. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. The captain of his company undertook to make a subsequent return of the men who served with him, and his affidavit is on file with the War Department that this man was on his muster roll, but the sergeant who disbanded them evidently did not know his given name and just omitted it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add at the end of the bill the following proviso: "Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowance shall be considered to have accrued by reason of the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Orin Thornton, late of Company A, Third Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of said company and regiment: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowance shall be considered to have accrued by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 726) for the relief of George Emerson was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) authorizing the payment of the cost of transportation for certain supplies purchased by the Military Establishment was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks Quartermaster Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes over.

The bill (S. 2328) for the relief of Margaret I. Varnum was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I do not find the bill on my file. Let it be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1298) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ALBERT HAMILTON.

The bill (S. 548) to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to state the case briefly before the bill goes over. This officer's health broke down owing to service in Panama and the trouble, of a malarial nature, came back after his return to the United States. The fact was his health broke down entirely, and while he was in a mentally disturbed condition he resigned when he could then have been retired. The report is signed by former Secretary Daniels, and in the report the department said:

The department is in general opposed to special legislation for the benefit of an individual. It tends to create dissatisfaction and inefficiency in the service by establishing undesirable precedents which may be cited by others in endeavoring to secure like consideration or relief. The evidence in this case, however, would seem to warrant the belief that the disability existed in its primary stages at the time of the officer's resignation, that it originated in the line of duty, and that his separation from the service, precluding his being placed on the retired list, was brought about through no fault of his or of the department, his case being at the time under consideration to determine whether or not a rest and relief from official duties would effect a restoration to health.

As Mr. Hamilton is now receiving a pension of $50 per month from the Government, it would appear that his case is receiving very liberal consideration, yet, in view of all the circumstances, if the Congress should deem the case of sufficient merit to warrant the placing of this man on the retired list of the Navy by special enactment, the department will not interpose objection.

The fact is that the man's health is entirely gone, and he is dependent on what he receives from the Government. It was not through his fault or the department's fault that the opportunity to retire was lost. I think it is only an act of justice to allow him to be retired with the rank of lieutenant, the rank he then held.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator, if the bill shall pass whether it will not be regarded as a precedent under which numerous applications may be made for similar relief?

Mr. LODGE. Such applications, of course, are made constantly, and each one has to be decided on its merits. We are constantly considering bills of this nature. There are many meritorious cases and good reasons given why officers should be placed on the retired list.

Mr. KING. It seems to me there should be a general law——

Mr. LODGE. I think there is no general law.

Mr. KING. There is a general law providing for retirement.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; for retirement in due course.

Mr. KING. It would seem to me to be a questionable policy to pass special bills providing for retirement.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it establishes any precedent at all. I think each case should be decided on its individual merits. It establishes no precedent, in my opinion.

Mr. KING. The Senator will observe that there is no very great enthusiasm on the part of the Navy Department in the recommendation. They say the man has been very generously treated by the Government.

Mr. LODGE. They say he has a pension of $50 a month; that he is entirely dependent on that pension, and his health is gone owing to disease contracted in the Tropics. There is no dispute about the facts.

Mr. KING. As the Government seems to be a big eleemosynary institution and everybody comes to it for help, I shall not object.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator from Massachusetts notice that there should be a change in the title? The title should read, "To place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps," instead of "United States Navy."

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will come after the passage of the bill.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to place Albert Hamilton, formerly a first lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, on the retired list of the Marine Corps with the rank and retired pay of a first lieutenant of the Marine Corps: Provided, That in computing his pay credit shall be given for all his continuous service in the Marine Corps: Provided further, That no pay shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps."

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is necessarily absent. He asked me if the bill came up in his absence to request that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 140) for the relief of Peter Shell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2498) to correct the military record of Alonzo C. Shekell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2493) to relieve enlisted men affected thereby from certain hardship incident to the operation of the proviso of section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, and to protect disbursing officers in connection therewith was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JESSE L. CLAY.

The bill (S. 2258) for the relief of Jesse L. Clay was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who seems to be sponsor for the bill, the reasons for it, and why, if the man is entitled to relief, he does not seek it under the compensation act?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is a case which was presented to the Compensation Commission, and that commission, by a divided opinion, decided against the claimant. However, the committee, after giving the case careful investigation, found that his illness was brought to a serious crisis by the accident in question, although not directly produced by it. Under the rules followed by the Compensation Commission, the commission itself held by a divided opinion that relief could not be granted. The committee believed and found that the man had an equitable claim. A similar bill passed the Senate during the last Congress.

Mr. KING. Where we set instrumentalities with full power to deal justly between employees and the Government, I think it is wise to adhere to their ruling, and we ought not, except for most extraordinary reasons, to ignore their proceedings. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. May I inquire of the Senator from Kansas if this is a claim for the use of a patent for revetment work in the Mississippi River?

If that is the old claim—and I think it is—I have objection to it, and I shall have to look up the papers in the case.

Mr. CAPPER. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over. I think it is the old claim. I went into it very carefully at the last Congress, and I do not think it is a just claim.

Mr. CAPPER. I think the Senator from Minnesota probably knows something about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure that this is the old claim; so I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

ALFRED SJOSTROM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2372) for the relief of Alfred Sjostrom, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$720," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alfred Sjostrom the sum of $720 for injuries sustained by him while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the Government at Battle Mountain Sanitarium, Hot Springs, S. Dak., on December 3, 1910, in an accident in which he lost all the fingers of his right hand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE VESSEL "MARIA ARTAU."

The bill (H. R. 5965) for the relief of the owner of the vessel Maria Artau was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

OFFICERS IN SUPPLY CORPS OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 2390) to redistribute the number of officers in the several grades of the Supply Corps of the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on a prior occasion when the bill the title of which has just been stated came up its consideration was objected to by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I placed in his hands at that time a memorandum in regard to the matter, but that memorandum was lost.

Mr. KING. No; the memorandum was taken from my desk.

Mr. PITTMAN. In order that the bill may be understood, I ask that a letter received from Admiral Potter on the subject may be read. The bill simply proposes a redistribution of the officers in the Pay Corps of the Navy, and it has passed the Senate at a previous Congress.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object to the consideration of the bill, I shall be glad to hear read the letter which the Senator from Nevada has presented.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS,
Washington, D. C., August 1, 1921.

MY DEAR SENATOR POINDEXTER: Because of the prospect of passage by the House of Representatives within a few days of the bill (H. R. 7864), providing for sundry matters affecting the Naval Establishment, I venture to write you at this time to remind you of the matter of readjusting the ranks in the Supply Corps of the Navy so that instead of 4 out of every 100 officers of the Supply Corps being pay directors with the rank of captain there may be 6 pay directors with the rank of captain, and instead of 8 out of every 100 officers of the Supply Corps being pay inspectors with the rank of commander there may be 12 pay inspectors with the rank of commander.

You will recall that an amendment providing this legislation was offered on the floor by Senator PITTMAN during the consideration of the naval bill for 1922 but did not receive full consideration because of a point of order.

The need for this readjustment continues to be urgent, and as an illustration of its necessity a request has just been received from the Director of the Budget for the detail of four officers of rank and experience—which implies the rank of captain—to assist in the coordination of purchases for the Government and the sales of surplus materials. The Shipping Board is also about to request the detail of two officers of similar rank to assist in the work of that board. These are merely examples of the demands which are constantly arising for the services of officers of rank and experience.

The Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation are all in favor of this legislation, and its enactment is of great importance to the efficiency of the Navy. The total additional expense involved is only a little over $25,000 per annum, and because of the provision that after January 1, 1923, the number of officers in the grades of pay directors with the rank of captain and pay inspectors with the rank of commander shall be reduced as vacancies occur, the increased annual expense will gradually decrease and eventually be eliminated.

The legislation recommended at the time the naval bill was under consideration provided that vacancies in the upper grades of the Supply Corps should not be filled after July 1, 1922, until the numbers are reduced to those authorized by the act of August 29, 1916, but because of the failure to have this legislation included in the naval act for 1922 this date has been advanced to January 1, 1923, this being the only change in the legislation as previously recommended.

For your information I inclose copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, dated May 7, 1921, and his letter of July 18, 1921, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, together with a draft of an amendment which, if enacted, will carry the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy into effect.

I feel quite sure that a majority, if not all, of the members of the House Committee on Naval Affairs are in favor of this legislation, although there is apparently a desire temporarily to postpone action, and there is reason to believe that if the bill (H. R. 7864) is amended in the Senate so as to carry the legislation relating to the Supply Corps the conferees on the part of the House will probably agree to the amendment.

In view of the foregoing, therefore, I take the liberty of asking that, if possible, you use your good offices in having this legislation added as an amendment to the bill H. R. 7864.

Yours sincerely,

DAVID POTTER,
Paymaster General of the Navy.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
Acting Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I now wish to call attention to the fact that the pending bill does not affect any of the officers of the Pay Corps with the rank of admiral; it affects only those officers in the Pay Corps with the rank of captain and commander. If Senators will make a comparison between the other corps of the Navy and this corps, they will see that the Pay Corps is deficient in those officers. If we take captains, for instance, in the Construction Corps, 8½ per cent of the force are captains; in the Civil Engineering Corps, 5½ per cent are captains; while in the Supply Corps or Pay Corps, 4 per cent are captains.

Now, take commanders. In the Construction Corps, 14 per cent are commanders; in the Civil Engineering Corps, 14 per cent are commanders; while in the Supply Corps—and that is the one with which this bill proposes to deal—8 per cent are commanders. In other words, the ratio that has been established in the Navy for these various officers fails to exist in the Supply or Pay Corps. The object of this bill is to readjust that condition; it is proposed to increase the percentage of captains allotted to that corps from 4 per cent to 6 per cent. It is not proposed to increase the number of officers in the corps, but of the percentage of officers allotted to that corps the number of captains will be increased from 4 to 6 per cent and the number of commanders from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. Then the number of inspectors in the corps will be reduced from 87 per cent to 81 per cent. It is an attempt to readjust the situation in that corps.

The passage of the bill, of course, would result in an addition of about 12 or 13 captains, and an addition of the same number of commanders in that corps, and at the same time in a reduction of about from 30 to 40 in the number of pay inspectors. As a result of this readjustment, the total cost to the Government will be about $25,000 a year. Mind you, this is only temporary, because on the expiration of the terms of these officers there is no reappointment in those positions. It is an attempt to meet a condition which was not taken care of in the naval appropriation bill, as Admiral Potter states. I have before me a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, very strongly urging that this action be taken.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to inquire of the Chair if we are proceeding under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Chair understands so.

Mr. McNARY. That rule imposes a limitation on a debate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, under Rule VIII, the Senator has a right to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I merely make the point because I understand that there are other measures on the calendar to which there is no objection, which I think ought to be considered. Then, after those bills have been acted upon we can recur to other measures and the Senator will have a perfect right to discuss the bill now under consideration for the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was merely making an explanation for the benefit of Senators who wanted information concerning the bill before an objection should be interposed. Some Senators object without knowing anything about a measure, while others do not.

Mr. McNARY. I do not understand that any Senator has objected to this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will say frankly that I have had very serious opposition to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he was in error. The unanimous-consent agreement to proceed with the consideration of the calendar to-day does not refer to Rule VIII at all.

The suggestion for unanimous consent as presented by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] reads as follows:

Mr. President, I suggest that we agree by unanimous consent to take up the calendar to-morrow, beginning at the first of it and go through the calendar and dispose of unobjected bills. Then, if there is any time left, I suggest that it be devoted to the consideration of other bills which may be taken up on motion.

That was agreed to, so that an objection will take the bill over.

Mr. KING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KING. Under the construction placed by the Chair upon the agreement, does it permit any debate at all; and if so, the amount of the debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing is said about that at all; it does not prohibit debate, but an objection at any time, of course, will close the consideration of a bill.

Mr. KING. The inquiry I make, if the Chair will pardon me, is, Is there a limitation upon debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think so under the unanimous-consent agreement, but if a Senator objects that limits it, of course.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was not debating the bill, I was merely trying to explain its provisions so as if possible to avoid objection being made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be debated indefinitely, so long as no Senator objects.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that I have said all that I care to say about it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was very certain that in connection with the agreement to consider the calendar a statement had been made about Rule VIII. I read from the RECORD of yesterday as follows:

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not ask for an adjournment over to-morrow. I promised the other day, in open session, that we would devote some time to the calendar. If the Senator wants to let the matter of the tariff go over until Monday we could take up the calendar under Rule VIII to-morrow by unanimous consent, and probably finish it.

He did not put it in his direct request, but I think it was clearly understood that the calendar should be considered under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That probably might be understood, but yet it was not provided in the agreement.

Mr. LODGE. I think when the Senator from Kansas made the request it was understood in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One objection, of course, will take a bill over. An objection can be made at any time. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. That would mean that five minutes will be allowed to each speaker in opposition or in advocacy of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. KING. I addressed a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon, but he was diverted for a moment.

Mr. KING. Does the Chair, then, construe the unanimous-consent agreement to imply that debate shall be limited to five minutes for any one speaker?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair does not construe it in that way. The consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII refers to the morning hour, but we have had no morning hour to-day, the Senate having met after a recess. The Chair will hold, no matter what his personal opinion may be, that under the language of the agreement the only limit is an objection to the consideration of a bill, which would close it at any time.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator from Kansas when he made the request for unanimous consent contemplated that bills would be considered under Rule VIII. I certainly understood that they would be considered under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that the Senate committee now has the appropriation bill before it, and there is legislation upon that bill, and the bill involves the personnel of the Navy, and the personnel, of course, is so closely related to the officers that it would determine the number of officers, may I inquire whether the Senator would object to this bill going over, so that the matter may be considered in that bill? I wish the Senator would allow that to be done.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have it considered in that way if it will not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I will object to it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2380) for the relief of Henry P. Collins, alias Patrick Collins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2654) for the relief of Almond S. Root was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2632) to correct the military record of Martin Cletner was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2674) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill may go over. It can not be disposed of under this order of business.

JOHN H. GATTIS.

The bill (S. 2017) for the relief of John H. Gattis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on line 4, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$200," and on line 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$200," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John H. Gattis the sum of $200 in full payment for permanent injury caused by a fall from a ladder while working at the Government Printing Office, and the said sum of $200 is hereby appropriated for such purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1352) for the relief of Benjamin F. Spates, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 403) for the relief of Louise St. Gez, executrix of Auguste Ferré, deceased, surviving partner of Lapene & Ferré, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 404) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Alphonse Desmare, deceased, and others, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1948) for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 942) for the relief of James Johnson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2967) to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by an act approved June 12, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That may go over.

The bill (S. 14) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4) granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors; and to certain Army nurses, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the case of that bill a motion to reconsider has been entered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. It will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1739) to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, let the bill be read.

The reading clerk read the bill.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over. I have some serious objections to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1274) for the relief of Maude H. Mosher was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4504) for the relief of Annie M. Lepley was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HUNTER-BROWN CO.

The bill (S. 820) for the relief of the Hunter-Brown Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The reading clerk read the report (No. 540), submitted by Mr. ROBINSON March 7, 1922, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 820) for the relief of the Hunter-Brown Co., having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

In line 6, strike out the figures "$2,423.08" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,198.08."

The findings of fact before the board of contract adjustment of the War Department is appended hereto and made a part of this report, as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT.

1. This claim is presented in accordance with General Order No. 103, War Department, 1918, and is for $1,198.08, under the following circumstances:

2. On or about the 29th day of August, 1918, claimant entered into a formal written contract with the Quartermaster Department, represented by Maj. George M. Alden, for furnishing 20,000 cords of wood in the stick; 128 cubic feet to the cord, not less than 50 per cent hardwood and the balance softwood, in 4-foot lengths not over 10 inches in diameter, as per specifications attached; deliveries to be made in such quantities and at such time as required by the camp quartermaster, Camp Forrest, Ga.; completing deliveries not later than November 1, 1918, at the price of $6.24 per cord f. o. b. Lytle, Ga., a total price of $124,800. Owing to the congestion of freight at Lytle, the railway station of Camp Forrest, the Government extended the time for the completion of deliveries under the contract to December 31, 1918. On November 23, 1918, claimant received a telegram from the Government directing it to suspend deliveries of wood under its contract until further instructions.

3. The claimant made every effort to suspend such deliveries, but 12 carloads of wood, which were in transit at the time of receipt of said message, could not be stopped and in due time arrived at the point of delivery and were refused by the subdepot quartermaster at Camp Forrest, Ga. It remained on the siding there until on or about January 11, 1919, the Central of Georgia Railway Co. hauled same to Chattanooga, Tenn., and there sold it to satisfy the railway company's demand for freight and demurrage. At such sale the claimant bought in said 12 carloads of wood, consisting of 192 cords, and shipped same back to Lytle for Camp Forrest, having paid the freight charges from Lytle to Chattanooga and return and war tax thereon, amounting to $158.31, in addition to the cost of repurchasing the wood, the total expenditures made by the claimant in this connection being as follows:

12 carloads (192 cords) of wood, at $3.50 per cord, including war tax	$692.16
Freight charges, including war tax	158.31
Total	850.47

4. On December 30, 1918, one day prior to the date on which under its contract all deliveries were required to be completed, the Government wrote claimant authorizing it to complete delivery of wood to Camp Forrest under its contract.

5. The record shows that claimant repeatedly and earnestly, but without avail, requested the Government representative at Lytle to accept delivery of the 12 carloads of cordwood while it stood on the track at Lytle; and that prior to the date when claimant was notified by the Government to proceed with its deliveries under the contract, the Government was fully informed of the charges for demurrage and freight that were accruing against these cars and that additional expense would accrue through reshipment of the wood to Chattanooga and its sale there.

6. The contract contains no cancellation clause nor any agreement whereby the Government was permitted to suspend deliveries unless it be argued that the provision of the contract relating to times of delivery be so construed. That provision calls for deliveries "in such quantities and at such times as will be required by the camp quartermaster, Camp Forrest, Ga." It is further shown by the evidence before the board, however, that it was the intention of the officer who made the contract and who gave the notice of suspension, Maj. George M. Alden, Quartermaster Corps, zone purchasing officer, not merely to temporarily defer deliveries in order to meet the requirements or convenience of the camp quartermaster but to absolutely cancel the contract, because in a letter to the claimant dated December 12, 1918, he says:

"Subject: Cancellation of contract.

* * * * * * *

"Your attention is called to the statement made in paragraph 8 of your affidavit, to the effect that you are holding your organization intact during the terms of suspension of your contract. From the time this office has sent you notice of such suspension, namely, November 23, there has been no possibility that you would be allowed to complete this contract. You will therefore disband any organization held together upon that expectation."

That the same officer at the time of such suspension intended to completely cancel and terminate the contract appears also from his letter of December 20, 1918, to claimant, which reads in part as follows:

"Subject: Termination of contract.

* * * * * * *

"You are advised that it is entirely unnecessary for your subcontractors to place in the hands of attorneys their claims against you. If those contractors are not sufficiently patriotic to accept the cash settlement in lieu of delivery of wood, then, of course, they will have to be paid and you will have to file with your claim for losses the amount of money you paid them.

"As to the wood remaining unloaded at Lytle, Ga., that is a matter with which you are not concerned, provided, however, you gave the shippers due notice to cease further deliveries.

"The wood is not Government property and its final disposition should be left to the (sub) contractors. If, however, you eventually have to take the wood, your claim for losses on this will also be considered. The zone board of review fully appreciates your position and is willing to cooperate with you to the limit of its power, and any claim that you make will receive just and fair consideration."

7. The claimant under its written contract with the Government was obligated to deliver these 192 cords of wood, f. o. b. at Lytle, itself absorbing freight and war tax thereon from original point of origin of the wood to Lytle. This freight with its war tax was not paid by the claimant. Owing to the loss of records by the railroad company, it is not practicable to fix the amount of this freight and war tax. But it has been ascertained by the representatives of the Government and of the claimant that the amount of freight, including war-tax charges, aggregating $158.31, which was paid by claimant on returning the wood from Chattanooga to Lytle, was approximately equal to the freight and war tax which should have been but was not paid by claimant for freight and war tax from original point of origin to Lytle. The claimant has indicated its willingness to offset the claim of $158.31 paid by it for freight and war tax from Chattanooga to Lytle against the amount of freight and war tax it was obligated to but did not pay on the original shipment of the 12 carloads from original point of origin to Lytle.

8. It appears from the letter of Major Alden, of the Quartermaster Corps, to the claimant, acknowledging claimant's letter of March 5, 1919, and a letter to this board from R. R. Wright, special representative, claims board, director of purchase, zone supply officer, Atlanta, Ga., dated October 24, 1919, that no settlement of this contract has ever been made between the Government and the claimant, and that while the claimant has been paid the contract price per cord for all wood delivered thereunder to the Government, there still remain to be delivered under the contract about 11 cords, the delivery of which is no longer desired by either party.

DECISION.

1. The act of the Government, on November 25, 1918, in directing the claimant by wire to suspend deliveries of wood under its contract until further instructions, and in subsequently, on December 12, 1918, and December 20, 1918, declaring to claimant that from the date of such suspension there had been no possibility that the claimant would be allowed to complete its contract, and in recognizing the claimant's right to recover for losses sustained by it, and in advising claimant of the course it would take for the recovery from the Government of such losses, is incompatible with the view that such action was taken solely for the purpose of temporarily deferring deliveries to such times as would suit the greater convenience of the camp quartermaster or the necessities of the camp for firewood. It is doubtful from the whole correspondence and discussion of the matter, as shown by the evidence before this board, whether the Government official responsible for the order of suspension could himself give any intelligent reason why or with what intention he gave the order. To hold that the provision of the contract respecting deliveries would cover and warrant the action taken by the Government in this case would place within the power of the camp quartermaster authority to vitiate and render null and void the entire contract. This can not reasonably be considered the intention of the parties.

2. Whatever may have been the camp quartermaster's intention, it is clear in law that any notice given under the clause quoted, either to cease or to resume deliveries, must be reasonable in its requirements. It should give ample time to the contractor to communicate with its various subcontractors in various localities and thence with the laborers cutting wood in the forests at numerous widely separated and more or less inaccessible points where usual modes of communication were not available. Reasonable time was also necessary to enable the contractor to direct and control the obtaining or releasing of cars for loading and shipping from many different and isolated sidings in distant sections of the country on various railroads which were being operated under war-time Government transportation conditions, which both as to the obtaining of cars, having them handled, and diverting them in transit were extraordinarily difficult, uncertain, and unusual.

The notice in this case was telegraphic and took effect immediately, thus giving the contractor no reasonable opportunity to communicate with and stop the forces he had set in motion to fulfill his contract, much less to stop and divert shipments that were already on the road. It is therefore reasonable for this board to conclude that the Government intended by its notice to stop deliveries permanently, as indicated by Major Alden's letter of December 12 above quoted, rather than that it was attempting to exercise reasonable rights as to times and quantities of delivery.

3. In the case of J. W. Parish & Co. v. the United States, decided by the United States Supreme Court April 12, 1880, claimants contracted to furnish ice to the Government in "such quantities as might be needed, and that the ice should be ordered from them (the claimants) from time to time as needed." The order for this ice was suspended, in consequence of which the ice was lost. The court held that "where, in the effort to fulfill an order for a large amount of ice for the use of the Government, which claimants were bound to furnish by their contract, they purchased ice, which was lost by the suspension of the order * * * they are entitled to recover the cost of the ice so lost and the expense of the care and attempt to preserve it." (100 U. S., p. 500, Lawyers' Ed., book 25.) This case in its facts and circumstances is in such accord with the case before this board as to warrant its application here.

4. In view of all the evidence before it, the board finds that the act of the Government in directing the claimant to suspend deliveries under its contract and in refusing to receive 12 carloads (192 cords) of wood which were offered for delivery by the claimant at the place and within the time specified in the contract for such deliveries, constituted a breach of the contract by the Government, whereby the claimant sustained damages which have been duly proven before this board.

5. Notwithstanding the foregoing facts, relief can not be given claimant by this board, because it must hold that there has been a substantial completion of the contract by performance. The right of the claimant for damages must be determined by the courts and can not under the law be settled or adjusted by the Secretary of War.

DISPOSITION.

An order of this board denying relief will be entered accordingly.

BOARD OF CONTRACT ADJUSTMENT,
By FRANCIS T. A. JUNKIN,
Lieutenant Colonel, United States Army, Member.

I concur.

JOHN ROSS DELAFIELD,
Colonel, Ordnance Department, Chairman.

A true copy.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the Board of Contract Adjustment, at Washington, D. C., this 22d day of April, 1920.

WILLARD A. DOERR,
Major, Field Artillery, Recorder.

Attest:

FLOYD G. WHITNEY,
Captain, Ordnance Department.

Mr. ASHURST. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Senate bill 1452 was passed over on my objection. I objected simply because the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] was not here. I have seen the Senator since, though he is not here at this moment, and I should like to have that bill taken up and disposed of. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. KING. That is the bill relating to migratory birds?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. KING. I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

PRAIRIE VIEW STATE NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL COLLEGE.

The bill (S. 1651) for the relief of Prairie View State Normal and Industrial College was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. I withhold my objection temporarily.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This college furnished subsistence and quarters for a certain number of troops, including men of the Medical Corps, during the war at cost, but on account of a technicality their bill could not be allowed in full by the accounting officer. It was found necessary for them to come to Congress for that part of the claim which could not be properly audited on account of the fact that the original voucher in the case was lost. The original voucher covered the entire bill.

A representative of the War Department visited the college in order to settle the matter, but he had no authority to attend to that part of the matter which related to the Medical Corps men. The college representatives made an agreement with him accepting what he offered for that part of the claim over which he had authority, and agreed to cancel the rest, thinking that the Medical Corps authorities would pay the canceled portion.

It developed afterwards that this could not be done, and it is therefore necessary for Congress to make an appropriation for the remainder due. There is no question that the service was rendered, and rendered at actual cost.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if the person who made the contract, whether it was express or implied, had the authority so to do?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was an express contract, entered into by the representatives of the Army having authority to make it.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Prairie View State Normal and Industrial College, Prairie View, Tex., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $581.42 for meals and quarters furnished enlisted men of the Medical Corps of the Army from October 15 to December 21, 1918.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RURAL HOMES.

The bill (S. 3254) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. McNARY. I was about to make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ELLEN B. MONAHAN.

The bill (S. 2346) for the relief of Ellen B. Monahan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, that is a meritorious bill. The report is full and ought to be conclusive. I ask the Senator if he has had an opportunity to read it. If so, I can not imagine that he would make any objection to the bill.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that I have not had time to read the report. If the Senator will have the report read, I may withdraw my objection.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is too long; I do not want to take the time of the Senate to have the report read.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to have the Senator state the substance of it. I will withhold my objection for that purpose.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will read the conclusions, which are found on page 7 of the report, as follows:

It is incumbent upon all employers to provide a reasonably safe place for their servants to work, and any negligence in the discharge of this obligation renders the employer liable for resulting injuries in the absence of assumed risk or contributory negligence on the part of the employee.

The room where claimant was directed to work was rendered unsafe by reason of the escaping gas. This danger was not apparent to claimant; therefore she did not assume the risk.

She did nothing to contribute to the cause of her injuries. The negligence of plumbers in leaving the open gas pipe uncapped was not the act of a fellow servant, but clearly a negligence with which the master must be charged.

That claimant suffered serious injuries that clearly impaired her health for a period of about two years, if not permanently, is not denied. That the Government, as her master, is liable is clear.

The time she lost away from her duties without pay is admitted. The expenses incurred by her in efforts to regain her health and strength were reasonable in amount.

She makes no claim for mental or physical pain and suffering. Neither does she make claim for permanent injuries resulting, if there are any.

We therefore approve her claim as presented and recommend the passage of the bill for her relief (S. 2346) without amendment.

The bill is so meritorious that I hope it may be disposed of favorably here and now.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator why the claimant does not seek compensation under the Federal employment act, or, if that was passed after the injuries were received, why we do not place her under that act so that she can get the advantages of it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand the facts are such, as to time and circumstance, that it is necessary to pass a special relief bill. I am so advised, and I think that is set forth in this report.

Mr. KING. It seems, from what I can learn, that this accident occurred away back in 1911.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; on the 14th day of June, 1911, while she was in the employ of the Government.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator, who is always so courteous and so generous, to let the bill go over, in order to give me a chance to learn the facts.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will do that, certainly.

Mr. KING. I make the request because, as I see it now, there is no liability. If there is, she ought to come under the Federal employment act and take her chances with other employees of the Government, so that we will not be making fish of one and fowl of the other.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not wish to make an exception of this case.

Mr. KING. I know the Senator does not. His sense of justice would prevent that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BRIDGE OVER LITTLE COLORADO RIVER.

The bill (S. 2563) to provide for the completion of the bridge across the Little Colorado River, near Leupp, Ariz., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,471.25 for payment to the Allied Contractors (Inc.), of Omaha, Nebr., as additional compensation for the construction of a bridge across the Little Colorado River near the Leupp Indian Agency, Ariz., under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior on November 10, 1919, funds for said bridge having been appropriated by the acts of March 2, 1917 (39th Stats. L., p. 975), May 25, 1918 (40th Stats. L., p. 570), and June 30, 1919 (41st Stats. L., p. 11), and the cost thereof to the contractors having exceeded the contract price by said sum.

Mr. ASHURST. Some days ago when the calendar was called the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected to this bill for the reason that it was uncertain as to whether the amount expended in constructing this bridge and the amount here appropriated were to be charged to the Indian tribe or treated as a gratuity out of the Treasury. I was unable to assert with positiveness that the money was not a gratuity but a charge on the tribe, although that was my remembrance. I have since refreshed my memory; indeed, I have looked at the act and find that bill, which passed on March 2, 1917, provided:

That the sums are reimbursable to the United States from any fund or funds now or hereafter placed to the credit of the Navajo Indians in Arizona, to remain a charge and a lien upon such lands and funds of such tribe until the sum is repaid to the Government.

I have examined the statute, and that meets the objection of the Senator, I presume.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator, first, whether they have any lands or funds which are now subject to this lien?

Mr. ASHURST. Not at this time, so far as I know. Lands have not been allotted to the individual Indians on that reservation. That they will have a tribal fund in due course is obvious.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether in the past there have been any funds in the Treasury of the United States available for this tribe for any purpose?

Mr. ASHURST. If my memory serves me correctly, a treaty was concluded with this Indian tribe in 1868, by the terms of which we have since that time paid them annually $100,000 for schools and other sums of money for civilization and support and are bound perpetually so to do.

Mr. KING. Could this be deducted from those funds, or will we be compelled to wait until some other treaty is negotiated?

Mr. ASHURST. My opinion is that before the United States could be reimbursed for this expenditure the Government would be required to wait until timber was sold, which would be a long time, or there were some avails of royalties received on leased lands. In my opinion, the money which is made a charge on their lands will be derived solely from the sale of timber as the avails of leases.

I do not want to take any more time, but I have said this much so that the Senator from Utah may have all the facts before him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I do not object, if the Senator will consent to one amendment, although I do not think the Government ought to be charged with this. I will state my amendment in a very inartificial manner, if the Secretary will note it. The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That said amounts so advanced shall be a charge upon any fund that may be available now or hereafter.

Mr. ASHURST. I certainly have no objection to that amendment. I think the amendment is a wise amendment, but I suggest that the Senator use the language of the original act, which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. KING. Very well; but I did not have it before me.

Mr. ASHURST. Here it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Add to section 4 the following proviso:

Provided, That said amount shall be reimbursable to the United States from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Navajo Indians in Arizona, to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said tribe of Indians until paid.

Mr. KING. That is satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 514) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPENCER. That bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10193) extending time for allotments on the Crow Reservation; protecting certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes; relief of Indians occupying certain lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California; issuing patents in certain cases; establishing a revolving fund on the Rosebud Reservation; memorial to Indians of the Rosebud Reservation killed in the World War; conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior as to alienation in certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPENCER. That bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ORDER FOR RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a request for unanimous consent, as I shall have to leave the Chamber in a moment. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the session to-day the Senate shall stand in recess until 12 o'clock Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Senate, when it shall conclude business to-day, shall take a recess until 12 o'clock Monday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2130) changing the name of Vernon Street, in the county of Washington, District of Columbia, to U Street was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1343) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (H. R. 5588) to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 442), be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is here. I think he is interested in the bill. I would be gratified if he would explain it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a bill that relates entirely to California, a bill in connection with which the Representative from that district appeared before the Senate Committee on Public Lands. There was quite a full hearing and the matter was very thoroughly considered. There is a letter from the Department of the Interior, reading as follows——

Mr. KING. Generally speaking, the object of the bill is to remove the limitation upon expenditures which may be made, so that larger appropriations may be called for and larger expenditures made, for which the Government is chargeable. That is the purpose, is it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The letter is addressed to Mr. SINNOTT, chairman of the House committee, and reads as follows:

DEAR MR. SINNOTT: I have your request of July 1, 1921, for a report on H. R. 5588, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, which is a bill to repeal section 5 of the organic act approved August 9, 1916, to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park, in the State of California, which places a limitation on future annual appropriations of said park to $5,000 unless previously authorized by law.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that that is the object of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I had not concluded reading the letter.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not know the Senator was going to read the balance of it. The object of the bill is to remove the limitation of $5,000 expenditure each year on this park.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that is the object, but I would like to read the concluding paragraph of the letter, which is as follows:

This park is located in northern California and contains, in addition to its chief scenic feature—the only active volcano in the United States proper—innumerable other attractions for the enjoyment and pleasure of the people. The small annual appropriations heretofore made have not permitted active development, administrative or protective work, nor has this been contemplated. The available funds have been expended in their entirety in road construction near the park boundaries. In the past two years great interest in the attractions of this park has been shown by the touring public, it being estimated that the visitors increased from 2,000 in 1920 to 10,000 in 1921. The time is obviously close at hand when active administration of the park must be undertaken in order to provide for the necessary protective and maintenance work, which will require more than the small amount of $5,000 permitted under existing laws.

That is the condition, and the committee thought it absolutely necessary that the limit of $5,000 should be increased subject, of course, to such further limitations as the Committee on Appropriations places upon expenditures from year to year.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT HAMILTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 5820) to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps was read twice by its title.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senate has to-day passed an identical bill with that which has just been laid before the Senate. I ask that the Senate take up the House bill and act on it now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to place Albert Hamilton, formerly first lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, on the retired list of the Marine Corps, with the rank and retired pay of a first lieutenant of the Marine Corps: Provided, That in computing his pay, credit shall be given for all his continuous service in the Marine Corps: Provided further, That no pay shall accrue prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That the retired pay allowed the said Albert Hamilton pursuant to this act shall be in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill 548 was ordered to a third reading and passed this afternoon.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, there is a bill on the calendar, Order of Business No. 605 (S. 3255), to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations.

This is a measure of very great national importance. The bill was reported by me from the Committee on Banking and Currency. I am compelled to leave the city at 3 o'clock, and I ask unanimous consent that we may take up the bill at this time. It proposes to extend the powers of national banks.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the bill has never been reported by a committee and has never been considered by a committee. It proposes to extend the corporate powers of national banks and is one of the most important bills on the calendar. It ought to be sent back to the committee and reported from the committee before action on it. I am opposed to having important bills brought before the Senate which have not been even considered by a committee. I raise the point of order that it is improperly on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order will be taken up when the bill is reached. There being objection, the bill will be passed over. The Secretary will report the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3310) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was called from the Chamber and asked me to have all pension bills go over, as he objects to their consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3309) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the junior Senator from Utah the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3296) to authorize the merger of certain street railway corporations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3326) to readjust the pay and allowances of the commisioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1282) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HERBERT LANGLEY.

The bill (H. R. 7415) to correct and amend the service and military record of Herbert Langley, United States Marine Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, this bill came over from the House and was very carefully examined into by the Committee on Naval Affairs. It simply raises the question whether the man is or is not dead. The record is that the man in this case is a deserter, but upon a very careful examination we find that he is unquestionably dead. The report of the committee reads, in part:

The sole purpose of this bill is to correct the record by eliminating the technical charge of desertion and showing the facts instead.

If there is any objection, I would like to explain the bill further.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion upon the service and military records of Herbert Langley, late a private in the One hundred and fifteenth Company, Second Provisional Brigade, United States Marine Corps, and also late of headquarters detachment, Third Regiment, Second Provisional Brigade, United States Marine Corps, shall henceforth be treated and considered as removed, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby ordered and directed to correct and amend the said service and military record of the said Herbert Langley by entering upon the said service and military record of said Herbert Langley, in appropriate words, the fact that said Herbert Langley died on February 24, 1919, at Santo Domingo City, Dominican Republic, by accident while in the line of duty, and that the charge of desertion was erroneously entered upon said service and military record, and the same shall be hereafter disregarded.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAWAIIAN NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (H. R. 8690) to add a certain tract of land on the island of Hawaii to the Hawaiian National Park was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1345) to amend an act entitled "Interstate commerce act," approved February 28, 1920, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has asked that this bill should be passed over when reached. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1346) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, including the safety appliance acts and the act providing for the valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved March 1, 1913, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] asked that this bill also be passed over, which will be done.

AMENDMENT OF JUDICIAL CODE.

The bill (H. R. 9671) to amend section 87 of the Judicial Code was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 87 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 87. That the State of Massachusetts shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Massachusetts.

"Terms of the district court shall be held at Boston on the third Tuesday in March, the fourth Tuesday in June, the second Tuesday in September, and the first Tuesday in December; at Springfield, on the second Tuesday in May and December; and at New Bedford, on the first Tuesday in August: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Springfield and New Bedford shall be furnished free of expense to the United States: And provided further, That all writs, precepts, and processes shall be returnable to the terms at Boston, and all court papers shall be kept in the clerk's office at Boston, unless otherwise specially ordered by the court, and the terms at Boston shall not be terminated or affected by the terms at Springfield or New Bedford.

"The marshal and the clerk for said district shall each appoint at least one deputy to reside in Springfield and to maintain an office at that place."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLAMATION IN IRRIGATION DISTRICTS.

The bill (H. R. 4382) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in carrying out the purposes of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and known as and called the reclamation law, the Secretary of the Interior may enter into contract with any legally organized irrigation district whereby such irrigation district shall agree to pay the moneys required to be paid to the United States, and in such event water-right applications on the part of landowners and entrymen, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, may be dispensed with. In the event of such contract being made with an irrigation district, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may contract that the payments, both for the construction of irrigation works and for operation and maintenance, on the part of the district shall be made upon such dates as will best conform to the district and taxation laws of the respective States under which such irrigation districts shall be formed, and if he deem it advisable he may contract for such penalties or interest charges in case of delinquency in payments as he may deem proper and consistent with such State laws, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6 of the reclamation extension act approved August 13, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 686). The Secretary of the Interior may accept a partial payment of the amount due from any district to the United States, providing such acceptance shall not constitute a waiver of the balance remaining due nor the interest or penalties, if any, accruing upon said balance: Provided, That no contract with an irrigation district under this act shall be binding on the United States until the proceedings on the part of the district for the authorization of the execution of the contract with the United States shall have been confirmed by decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, or pending appellate action if ground for appeal be laid.

SEC. 2. That patents and water-right certificates which shall hereafter be issued under the terms of the act entitled "An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 265), for lands lying within any irrigation district with which the United States shall have contracted, by which the irrigation district agrees to make the payment of all charges for the building of irrigation works and for operation and maintenance, shall not reserve to the United States a lien for the payment of such charges; and where such a lien shall have been reserved in any patent or water-right certificate issued under the said act of Congress, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby empowered to release such lien in such manner and form as may be deemed effective; and the Secretary of the Interior is further empowered to release liens in favor of the United States contained in water-right applications and to assent to the release of liens to secure reimbursement of moneys due to the United States pursuant to water-right applications running in favor of the water users' association and contained in stock subscription contracts to such associations, when the lands covered by such liens shall be subject to assessment and levy for the collection of all moneys due and to become due to the United States by irrigation districts formed pursuant to State law and with which the United States shall have entered into contract therefor: Provided, That no such lien so reserved to the United States in any patent or water-right certificate shall be released until the owner of the land covered by the lien shall consent in writing to the assessment, levy, and collection by such irrigation district of taxes against said land for the payment to the United States of the contract obligation: Provided further, That before any lien is released under this act the Secretary of the Interior shall file a written report finding that the contracting irrigation district is legally organized under the laws of the State in which its lands are located, with full power to enter into the contract and to collect by assessment and levy against the lands of the district the amount of the contract obligation.

SEC. 3. That upon the execution of any contract between the United States and any irrigation district pursuant to this act the public lands included within such irrigation district, when subject to entry, and entered lands within such irrigation district, for which no final certificates shall have been issued and which may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior in said contract, shall be subject to all the provisions of the act entitled "An act to promote the reclamation of arid lands," approved August 11, 1916: Provided, That no map or plan as required by section 3 of the said act need be filed by the irrigation district for approval by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, with regard to this bill there is no report from the committee in my file. I presume it was acted on by the committee and that they reported it favorably, but there is no report in my file. May I inquire if there was any written report made in connection with it?

Mr. McNARY. I will state to the Senator from Florida that no written report was made by the Senate committee on account of the very full report made by the House committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Oregon explain the bill more fully?

Mr. McNARY. In a word, it is to the advantage of the Federal Government and the entrymen and water users in various irrigation projects. It simply provides a method by which the irrigationists can organize in the districts under the laws of the State and the Government takes the bonds of the district rather than the securities of the individual entrymen. The security is very much better because the Government is dealing with organized irrigation districts rather than the various individual entrymen who take water in the projects. The bill passed the House and was reported on favorably by the Secretary of the Interior and also by the Senate Committee on Reclamation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not had time to examine the bill, but it appears to apply exclusively to reclamation by irrigation. I have been in hopes that we might establish rather a national policy on the question of reclamation, which would include not only reclamation by irrigation, but by drainage. I do not know whether the bill might be amended so as to provide for that.

Mr. McNARY. May I state to the Senator from Florida that there is now on the calendar a bill of the character mentioned by him, which is to be brought up during this session; but the pending bill refers to irrigation on Government projects in the West, and nothing could be done to make it applicable to drainage in the South, because that is entirely in private hands and is a matter of private enterprise.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill, to be inserted as a new paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 4. The lien reserved to the Government of the United States, however, created, for payment to it of construction charges, and charges for operation and maintenance, and all penalties required to be paid under the reclamation act approved June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, shall not be construed to be a lien or incumbrance as contemplated by this act, wherein loans under this act shall be secured by first mortgages on farm lands, to the end that the provisions of said Federal farm loan act shall extend to lands within all Government reclamation projects, without regard to Government liens for payment of said charges, and the provisions of said Federal farm loan act are hereby extended to apply to lands within all Government reclamation projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to discuss the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator's amendment would not require the Federal farm loan banks to take a second mortgage, would it? The law requiring such banks to take only first mortgages would still be in force and effect, would it not, if the amendment proposed by the Senator should be adopted?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendment may again be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

Mr. BORAH's amendment was again read.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this amendment refers to some act with which I am not familiar, and I should like the Senator from Idaho briefly to state what would be the effect of the amendment if adopted, so far as farm loan mortgages are concerned.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, first permit me to say that this amendment has gone through several stages, but in the form in which it is now presented it was, I think, drawn and approved by the department. There has been no report to the Senate upon this particular amendment, but it was introduced in the House of Representatives as a bill and a report from the department on the House bill was sent in and is now a part of the House proceedings.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. While the statement made by the Senator from Idaho that there has been no report made from the committee on the proposition involved in the amendment is true, I have in my possession a letter covering the amendment from Judge Lobdell, of the Federal Farm Loan Board, which I should like to have the Secretary read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
FEDERAL FARM LOAN BUREAU,
Washington, March 20, 1922.

Hon. CHAS. L. MCNARY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCNARY: I am to-day in receipt of yours of the 18th instant, inclosing copy of H. R. 4382 as intended to be proposed by Senator BORAH.

I think that the Federal Farm Loan Board would be willing to authorize the Federal land banks to give consideration to applications for loans on lands under reclamation projects if this bill were enacted, though, as I assume you know, each of the land banks operating in irrigated territory maintains its own engineering department and would, of course, exercise the privilege of examining and rejecting any project, notwithstanding it were a Government one, where, in the judgment of its engineer, water supply or construction were insufficient or proper provision had not been made for drainage.

The last proviso of the bill is very essential, and without it loaning in these districts could not be at all undertaken.

Respectfully yours,

CHAS. E. LORDELL,
Farm Loan Commissioner.

Mr. BORAH. I desire further to state to the Senator from Ohio that the only effect of this amendment, as I understand, is to permit the Federal farm loan banks to make loans if, after examination, they themselves think there is sufficient security. The purpose of the amendment is to remove the inhibition which now exists under the law which practically prevents the Federal land banks from considering loans on irrigation projects.

Mr. POMERENE. I asked the question because I thought from listening to the first reading of the amendment that it might prejudice some of the Federal Farm Loan Board's securities.

Mr. BORAH. No.

Mr. POMERENE. That was what I had in my mind, but if the amendment has not that effect, I am content.

Mr. FLETCHER. I infer that really the purpose is to postpone the Government lien, so far as the security of the Federal land banks are concerned. If that is true, and, of course, if the Government or the banks are protected, I can see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3220) to amend section 2 of the United States warehouse act approved August 11, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no report on that bill, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The next two bills will be passed over at the request of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The bills referred to are as follows:

The bill (H. R. 7340) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

The bill (H. R. 6569) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill (S. 3169) to equalize pensions of retired policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over, Mr. President, as I wish to make a little further examination of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask that that bill go over. There are some amendments which it is desired to propose when the bill is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2371) to further amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effective provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill just stated by title, being the unfinished business, will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7210) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7827) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

The bill (S. 151) to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes relating to compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4874. The superintendents of national cemeteries shall be selected from meritorious and trustworthy soldiers, either commissioned officers or enlisted men of the Regular, Volunteer, or National Army who may have been disabled for active field service in the line of duty.

"SEC. 4875. The superintendents of the national cemeteries shall be assigned to duties by the Secretary of War and shall be divided into three classes, according to the extent and importance of the cemeteries to which they may be respectively assigned, of which 29 shall be in class 1, who shall each receive a compensation of $1,320 per annum; 19 shall be in class 2, who shall each receive $1,200 per annum; and 26 shall be in class 3, who shall each receive $1,080 per annum: Provided, That in addition to the superintendents hereinbefore enumerated there shall be a superintendent of the Arlington Cemetery at Arlington, Va., and a superintendent of the National Cemetery at Mexico City, Mexico, who shall each receive a compensation of $1,500 per annum: Provided further, That all superintendents shall be furnished with quarters and fuel, and upon honorable discharge or resignation shall receive transportation for themselves and household effects to their respective homes."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR FIRE-FIGHTING EXPENSES IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 256) to reimburse the State of Montana for expenses incurred by it in suppressing forest fires on Government land during the year 1919 was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $26,746.17, which is hereby directed be paid to the State of Montana on account of money expended by the State in the suppression of forest fires on Government lands during the year 1919.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Montana give an explanation of that measure, particularly as to whether the Government, morally or legally, is responsible for the expenditures incurred. I have no doubt the bill contemplates either legal or moral responsibility.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there is a full report on the bill from the Forestry Service of the Department of Agriculture, and its purpose is fully disclosed here. There was a fire raging in the national forest. The Forestry Service was not available in some way or other, but the State had a forestry service guarding the State lands, and they went out and fought the fire on the forest reserve and extinguished it, and the Forestry Service recognized the justice of reimbursing the State for the expenditures actually incurred. They figured out accurately the acreage which was actually destroyed, and corrected the acreage so that the amount was reduced slightly, just a few hundred dollars, below the figure that was asked by the State.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, what is the amount?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Twenty-seven thousand dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? If not, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYN LUNDQUIST.

The bill (S. 583) for the relief of Lyn Lundquist was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to permit Lyn Lundquist, notwithstanding he has heretofore exhausted his homestead right, to make homestead entry of the west half of the northeast quarter and the east half of the northwest quarter of section 15, in township 44 north, and range 3 east, Boise meridian, in the State of Idaho, and to give him credit upon his making final proof, showing residence and cultivation as required by law for any improvement he may heretofore have made thereon.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I note that the bill says, referring to this claimant, "notwithstanding he has heretofore exhausted his homestead right," and so forth, and yet he is to be given additional rights; but there is no report here indicating why that should be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that according to the calendar there is a report, No. 601.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not seen it. [A pause.] A copy of the report has just been handed to me, but it indicates no reason at all for this. I will say to the Senator from Montana, who reported the bill, that the bill seems to indicate that the claimant has already exhausted his homestead rights, but nevertheless he is given other rights, and so forth; and there is nothing here to indicate why any special favoritism should be shown to him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have no personal interest at all in the bill. It was introduced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who is not present.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that it go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me say, however, in explanation of it, that the bill was considered by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and I was simply charged with the duty of preparing the substitute which expressed what the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys thought was fair and just to be done in the premises; and that is embodied in the substitute which has been reported.

The claimant went into a very remote section of the State of Idaho at an early day and settled upon this tract of land. It was not available for settlement in some way or other, but he went on and put a large amount of improvements upon the land, my recollection is at the expense of something like $2,500 or $3,000; and the committee thought that the expenditure of that amount of money on the land was sufficient evidence of the perfect good faith of this man in going into this remote and difficult region.

We have provided, however, not that he should have the land at all, but, notwithstanding the fact that he had once exercised his homestead right and his entry had been thus canceled, as he did not make his proof within the period limited by the statute, which was then seven years, we simply waive that requirement and permit him to make a new entry of the land. Then, residing upon the land and cultivating it, he will be entitled to patent to it.

Mr. POMERENE. This gives him how many acres in addition to the usual homestead rights?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Nothing additional. It simply practically restores his homestead right as to that tract.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Ohio will not object to the bill, because it is a meritorious bill. In early years this claimant settled, by what is known as a squatter's right, on land on which he had a perfect right to settle. In 1906 the Government of the United States withdrew the land and put it into a forest reserve, before he secured title to it, although he had spent $3,000 on the land itself. He carried out every requirement of the law as to the amount of time he should live upon the land, but when that blanket withdrawal was put over him as well as others in that forest he had not received the title to his land, and therefore he can not get title to that land. As long as he has spent his $3,000, as long as he has lived there, and as long as he has done all that the law required him to do, the least that Congress can do is to give him a chance to take 160 acres of public land to-day, and that is all that the bill does.

Mr. POMERENE. The explanation seems to give him some equitable rights. It does seem to me, however, that the bill is unfortunately phrased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of the bankruptcy bill, objection to which was made a short time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana requests unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of Order of Business 589, Senate bill 2921. Is there objection?

Mr. SPENCER. There is objection. There is an amendment to that bill, which was adopted by the committee of the American Bar Association, which I introduced yesterday. There is a brief filed with that bill, which I have in my office, which I thought I had here. If that amendment appeals to the Senator from Montana, and can be incorporated in the bill, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill; but if it does not, I think the Senator will want to hear the reasons which the American Bar Association advanced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri to object to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. SPENCER. Unless the amendment is agreeable to the Senator from Montana; and I have not had time to discuss it with him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to say to the Senator, by way of explanation, that I know that the greater portion of the amendment introduced by him has had the careful attention of the committee, and, so far as that part is concerned, I thought the Senator might be able to present his reasons why the amendment ought to be adopted and the committee could easily explain the considerations that induced them to reject it, and we might dispose of the matter.

Mr. SPENCER. As I said when I started, the reasons which I really want to present to the Senate are reasons not so much of my own but of the committee of the American Bar Association, and I have not them at hand. It would be very unfair to them for me to repeat merely what I remember of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

COMMISSIONING OF MIDSHIPMEN IN THE MARINE CORPS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 274) authorizing the commissioning in the Marine Corps of midshipmen under certain conditions was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I trust that no objection will be made to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the joint resolution was before the Committee on Naval Affairs. At the time it was presented I believe the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] indicated, and I also indicated, some objection to it. It is fair to say that since that time the Senator from Virginia has represented to me that he had no opposition to the measure, and, indeed, he asked me to give support to it. I told him that with the understanding that I had—that understanding being largely the result of the discussion in the committee, in which the Senator from Virginia participated—I could not consent.

If the facts were different from what I understood them to be, I might have no objection; but I understand that the bill is merely in the interest of one particular person who failed to pass the examination, and it is sought now, because of that failure, to give him a standing to which otherwise he would not be entitled.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to state to the Senator the facts as they were disclosed.

Mr. KING. I withhold objection pending the explanation of the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I believe that the joint resolution is a very meritorious one and ought to be passed. There is a general statute to the effect that no midshipman or former midshipman of the United States Naval Academy shall be commissioned by appointment in the Marine Corps so that his commission shall precede the date when his class graduated. That is a very proper provision, in view of a practice that had grown up of midshipmen resigning from the Naval Academy, or being dismissed for any reason, and, having some political influence, securing an appointment and a commission in the Marine Corps, or in some of the staff corps of the Navy. It was to prevent that abuse that the statute was provided; but since the enactment of that statute the law has permitted anyone who enlists as a private in the Marine Corps to take the examination eventually in the Marine Corps and get a commission in that way. That law enables any enlisted man in the Marine Corps to take that course and get his commission.

The Senator refers to a particular case. The joint resolution, as a matter of fact, does have application to a particular case just now; but the statute will be general and applicable generally hereafter. If this boy, in particular, who at one time was a midshipman in the Naval Academy, had never been in the Naval Academy, he would be able to take the examination as he did take the examination and be entitled to his commission. He simply sought to be relieved from the operation of that statute and put upon the same footing as any other enlisted man in the Marine Corps. In other words, having endeavored to get a commission under the provisions of one law by going through the Naval Academy, and not succeeding in that way, he enlisted as a private in the Marine Corps, and there prosecuted his studies with such success that he eventually took an examination and became entitled to a commission but for this particular statute, while his fellows who also enlisted in the Marine Corps with him and who took the examination are entitled to get their commissions. So that the existing statute is eminently unfair to him or to any young man who goes into the Naval Academy, and then, finding for some reason or other that he is not able to go through there, is still determined to fit himself for service in this way, and enlists as a private in the Marine Corps, and then fits himself by proper study and that kind of thing, and eventually takes the examination. There is not any reason on earth why he should be penalized, and he is obliged to serve 12 months before he can take the examination.

Mr. KING. It means, then, Mr. President, if I understand the Senator, that a young man may fail at Annapolis, after attempting to obtain his commission there, and go out and enlist as a private and take the examination prescribed by law——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. After he has served a year.

Mr. KING. Which examination perhaps is not as severe as the examination at Annapolis; or is it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I could not say as to that; but it is severe enough to warrant the giving of a commission to an enlisted man.

Mr. KING. When he obtains a commission would it be a higher commission than he would have obtained if he had been a diligent student and obtained a commission at Annapolis?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They all come in as ensigns, as the Senator knows.

Mr. KING. Would it give him a higher rating and a higher place on the list of officers than if he had succeeded in Annapolis?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. His commission would antedate, of course, those of the men who went through in the other way.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, when I first looked at this joint resolution casually I had an idea that it repealed a law which I favored and which I think was largely instrumental in having passed. There had grown up a method by which people who had failed at the examination at the Naval Academy were immediately put in as officers in the Marine Corps, getting commissions higher than those given the men who were their classmates; but those were cases in which the man did not enlist as a private.

Recently we have tried to encourage young men to enter both the Navy and the Marine Corps as privates and give them the privilege, when they stand certain examinations, of being commissioned as officers. They do that in the Navy now with enlisted men.

There was no intention, when the act was passed, to in any way affect the right of enlisted men who could stand the examination prescribed by the department, showing their qualifications to be commissioned when they had passed the examination. Nobody had an idea it would operate in this way until this case came up.

This is the case of a young man at the Naval Academy who for some reason failed. I do not know the particulars of it, but he was devoted to the service, and instead of trying to get a commission as a marine officer immediately, as heretofore had been done, enlisted as a private. He served as a private for 12 months, as prescribed by law, and then came up and stood an examination as an enlisted man, a private, to get his commission. When the department were preparing to commission him they looked up the statute, which provided that he could not be commissioned until the other men who were classmates of his had been commissioned.

He had served faithfully. The law simply put all enlisted men on an equality. If a man fails at the academy and enlists in the Navy or the Marine Corps he has a chance to get a commission under the law relating to enlisted men. He can not get a commission except under that law. When the matter is brought before the Senate there seems to be a prejudice against him because at one time he attended the academy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me put the case this way: Let us suppose that there are two young men, one of whom goes to Georgetown University, studies at Georgetown for two years, and then enlists in the Marine Corps. The other boy gets into the Naval Academy at Annapolis. We will suppose that they are chums, that one stays at Annapolis for two years, then quits and enlists in the Navy, and they both take the examination for a commission, and both pass. The boy who came from Georgetown gets his commission and the boy who came from Annapolis and received whatever benefit there is to be obtained from a course in that academy, instead of an ordinary college, can not get a commission. Of course, the Senator can see that that is not right.

Mr. KING. Let me ask either of the Senators whether the boy who was at Annapolis gets precedence over those in his class because he may have passed the examination before they had obtained their commissions?

Mr. SWANSON. If he passes his examination and comes up for his commission, and the examination and commission antedate the graduation of the class he was in, he does get a commission ahead of them, as any other enlisted man would do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am sure the Senator would not want to have it otherwise. If a boy in the Naval Academy quits the Naval Academy and enlists in the Marine Corps, and goes on and takes his examination and reaches a result, by determination upon his part, sooner than the men who remain at the Naval Academy, why should he not have a commission?

Mr. KING. It simply means that if two young men go to the Naval Academy and take the examination, and one passes and the other fails, and the one who fails goes out and takes another examination, after enlisting as a private in the Marine Corps, and passes, he may get a higher rating and be commissioned in advance of the man who did his duty and passed an A1 examination at Annapolis. It is rather paradoxical.

Mr. SWANSON. To encourage men to enlist and get a high order of men in the Marine Corps, we allow men to enlist as privates and under certain conditions receive commissions as officers. First, their record has to be fine, and service as a private in the Marine Corps for 12 months, with all of its privations and hardships, is a pretty stiff test. After they have stood that test as enlisted men, they have then to stand an examination to show their mental qualifications, and any man who can enlist as a private and do that should not be discriminated against, whether he did or did not attend the Naval Academy. This discrimination occurs under a statute passed to get rid of an abuse, and we require them to serve 12 months as enlisted men before they can be commissioned. I think it is a good thing to encourage the men.

Under the old conditions, if a man failed at the Naval Academy he could go and stand an examination at once and get ahead of his class. Under the existing statute he must first enlist as a private and serve 12 months, and then he may obtain his commission.

Mr. KING. I follow the Senator from Virginia in the Naval Affairs Committee because of his superior knowledge. I think I shall follow him now, and I am sure to be right one way or the other, and he is sure to be wrong one time or another.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That any midshipman of the United States Naval Academy who has heretofore failed to graduate therefrom and who shall have served honorably in the Marine Corps for a period of one year, and who has passed satisfactorily the examination for appointment as a commissioned officer of the Marine Corps, may be commissioned prior to the graduation of the class at the Naval Academy of which he was a member.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY CORDES.

The bill (S. 3291) for the relief of Henry Cordes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to deduct from the time required of Henry Cordes, of Fort Laramie, Wyo., to perfect title to a new homestead entry the time he spent in residence and cultivation upon homestead entry, Cheyenne, 027226, which was canceled because erroneously allowed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The bill (S. 2436) to amend section 25 (a) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I object.

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment, I will state that the only object of the bill, as I understand it, is to permit these banks to become members of the Federal reserve system, as other institutions are. I think that is all the bill does. At the present time they are outside of the system, and it was thought they would have better supervisory control over them if they were members of the system, just as other banking institutions are. I think that is as far as the bill goes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. There does not seem to be any need for haste, and I would like to look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

The bill (S. 2743) to amend an act approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, to strike out the words "or near the" and to insert in lieu thereof "the exterior boundaries of the existing," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved June 20, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended, subject to the consent to the terms hereof by the State of New Mexico, by adding the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to any land within the exterior boundaries of the existing national forests in the State of New Mexico, title to which is in said State, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may give not to exceed an equal value of unappropriated ungranted national forest or other Government lands belonging to the United States within the said State of New Mexico, as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior and acceptable to the State as a fair compensation, consideration being given to any reservation which either the State or the United States may make of timber, mineral, or easements. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become a part of the national forest within or near to which they are situated."

Mr. KING. I would like to have the Senator from New Mexico explain the purpose of the bill generally. There is no report here. I do not object to the bill at all.

Mr. BURSUM. The purpose of this act is to authorize the State of New Mexico to make exchanges within the forests of school sections. In order to do that it is necessary to amend the enabling act authorizing New Mexico and Arizona to form a constitution. It will be necessary, unless the bill is passed, for the people of New Mexico to amend the constitution and provide legislation authorizing this exchange.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from New Mexico said it authorized them to make exchanges of school lands. Exchanges with whom?

Mr. BURSUM. With the United States, to surrender to the Forest Service school sections within the forests for public lands of equal value outside of the forests.

Mr. POMERENE. Is that to be done under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BURSUM. It is.

Mr. POMERENE. And subject to his approval?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; subject to his approval and subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN NEW MEXICO.

The bill (S. 3163) to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that may go over.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will withhold his objection. The object of this bill is to make available an appropriation which was made over nine years ago for a post-office building at Las Vegas in New Mexico. This legislation becomes necessary because the amount of money appropriated is not sufficient to erect the kind of a building authorized under the previous legislation.

The legislation at present on the statute books provides for the erection of a courthouse and a post office, and the amount of money available is not sufficient for that purpose. The object of the bill is to provide that they may use the money, which has already been appropriated, for the construction of a post office only. The matter has been taken up with the Treasury Department on different occasions, and this bill is recommended by the Treasury Department. At Las Vegas there are two post offices now, and the result is great confusion in the mails. The purpose of the bill is to erect one building to provide for the two communities.

It will reduce the expense of the post offices there and avoid that very great confusion which results from the fact that there are two post offices, one under the name of Las Vegas and one under the name of East Las Vegas. It so happens the post office of East Las Vegas is in the city of Las Vegas and the post office of East Las Vegas is in the town of Las Vegas. I sincerely hope that the Senator will withhold his objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose there is not a State in the Union that is not somewhat in the same condition. I know that in my own State we have authorized appropriations for post-office buildings at Spanish Fork, Eureka, Manti, Ephraim, and I know there are at least half a dozen others that do not come to my mind now. The only way we are ever going to get any relief is to wait until there is an omnibus bill passed. The Senator knows that we put items on appropriation bills time and time again on the floor of the Senate for the same purpose that is contemplated in the pending bill. The House has invariably objected to those items. They say they will not pass a bill of this character until an omnibus bill is presented. Why is there any use of going to the expense of passing these bills in the Senate and sending them to the House when we know the House will not act on them?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The situation in this case is a very peculiar one. I do not know of another instance in the history of the United States where conditions are such as they are at this place. We want to consolidate two post offices. The appropriation was made back in 1913 when my predecessor was in office. It was through his action that the appropriation was then made.

Las Vegas is the second largest town in the State of New Mexico. It has no public building whatever, and there are the two post offices rented now, with two postmasters and two sets of clerks. It is more expensive to carry the mail from the railroad station to those offices than it will be under the new régime. For business purposes and business reasons and to facilitate business the bill should be passed. Hundreds of letters every day go to the wrong post office and must be transferred from that post office over to the right one. The situation is almost intolerable.

The appropriation was made back in 1913, and it is only by reason of the fact that during the war all public building work was stopped, and since the war the cost of building has increased so that they could not erect the building according to the original design for the amount of money which was appropriated.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the same reason advanced in all the other cases. I am quite sure the bill will not pass the House, but if it is going to assist the Senator from New Mexico in any way to go to the expense of passing the bill here and sending it over to the House, I shall not object. I am quite sure, I will say to the Senator from New Mexico, that their policy is a fixed policy, and if the future is to be judged by the past, if we can tell from what has been going on in the House for years past, they will not consider the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I thank the Senator for withdrawing his objection to the consideration of the bill by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if this bill passes I am quite sure we can then insist upon at least 100 or more similar bills passing, and insist upon the House passing other bills in the same way. The appropriation of $50,000 for erecting a building back in 1912 and 1913, at the very time when authorization for the appropriation was made, perhaps would have erected such a building as is required at this place. Building costs have advanced so that they can not now erect any kind of a building, nor can they erect the building which the department wants to erect. Therefore, all the appropriations are being held up in all such cases.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 11, to strike out "$115,940.41, and said building shall be so constructed that accommodations for the United States courts and other governmental offices may be provided at a later date at an increase in the limit of cost to be hereafter fixed," and to insert in lieu thereof "$115,930.40," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 16 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., p. 883), which directed the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site, or acquire it by condemnation or otherwise, on land at a convenient point between the incorporated city of East Las Vegas, N. Mex., and the incorporated town of Las Vegas, N. Mex., and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the post office, courthouse, and other governmental offices, and so forth, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be erected, on the site heretofore acquired by the United States for the purpose, a suitable and commodious building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, approaches, etc., complete, for the use and accommodation of the post office, at a limit of cost not to exceed $115,930.40.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to state that there was an error of 1 cent in the amount of money which it was found necessary to change, and the remainder of the matter which is stricken out by the amendment was considered unnecessary, both by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and by the Treasury Department. I therefore think it advisable to adopt the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 600, the bill (S. 2436) to amend section 25 (a) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] objected to the consideration of the bill, but he has just informed me that after reading the bill he will withdraw the objection.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, having examined the bill, I have no objection to it, although I am opposed to the entire Federal reserve system.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from New Jersey the purpose of the bill?

Mr. EDGE. The purpose of the bill is simply to permit any corporation engaged in the kinds of business described in section 25 of the Federal reserve act to become members of the Federal reserve system, so the Federal reserve system can have much greater supervision over their activities.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator if existing law prohibits that?

Mr. EDGE. Under existing law there is no way for them to apply for membership and to become members of the Federal reserve system. The pending bill provides an amendment of section 25 (a) of the Federal reserve act, under which corporations engaged in the kinds of business described in that section may make application to the Federal Reserve Board and by the purchase of the necessary stock in a Federal reserve bank become members of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. KING. This is not for the purpose of forcing banks into the Federal reserve system?

Mr. EDGE. Absolutely not. It is entirely voluntary.

Mr. KING. There is nothing here that would be discriminatory against State banks and be used as a club to compel them to join the Federal reserve system?

Mr. EDGE. Absolutely not. It is absolutely voluntary. It simply provides that they can apply for membership, and by the purchase of stock in a Federal Reserve Bank can then become members of the Federal reserve system. It is entirely voluntary.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows there has been a good deal of complaint that there was discrimination against certain banks and an effort made to force all of them into the Federal reserve system willy-nilly.

Mr. EDGE. I will read the Senator the first three lines of the proposed amendment of the act, and he will see that it does not contemplate that—

Any corporation engaged in business of the kinds described in section 25 of this act, and any corporation organized under the provisions of this section, may make application to the Federal Reserve Board—

And so forth.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New Jersey whether the provisions of the bill will permit private corporations to become members of the Federal reserve system?

Mr. EDGE. No; it simply provides for that class of banks organized under section 25 (a) of the Federal reserve act, and which are known, if I may remind the Senator, as Edge banks, to become members of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. GLASS. Foreign banking corporations?

Mr. EDGE. Yes.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 25 (a) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved February 27, 1921, and June 14, 1921, be further amended by striking out that paragraph of said section which reads as follows: "Shareholders in any corporation organized under the provisions of this section shall be liable for the amount of their unpaid stock subscriptions. No such corporation shall become a member of any Federal reserve bank," and by substituting in lieu of said paragraph the following:

"Shareholders in any corporation organized under the provisions of this section shall be liable for the amount of their unpaid stock subscriptions.

"Any corporation engaged in business of the kinds described in section 25 of this act, and any corporation organized under the provisions of this section, may make application to the Federal Reserve Board, under such rules and regulations as said board may prescribe, to subscribe to stock of the Federal reserve bank of the district within which the applying corporation is located in an amount equal to 6 per cent of the paid-up capital and surplus of the applying corporation. The Federal Reserve Board, subject to such conditions as it may prescribe, may, in its discretion, permit the applying corporation to become a stockholder of such Federal reserve bank. All such corporations becoming members of the Federal reserve system shall be subject to the provisions of this act which relate specifically to member banks: Provided, That such corporations shall not be subject to examination by examiners of the Comptroller of the Currency under the provisions of the first two paragraphs of section 5240 of the Revised Statutes as amended by section 21 of this act, and shall not be subject to any limitations upon the exercise of the power to accept drafts and bills of exchange drawn upon them, except such as are imposed by regulations prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORPORATE POWERS OF ASSOCIATIONS.

The bill (S. 3255) to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 57) making the provisions of section 2296 of the United States Revised Statutes applicable to all entries made under the homestead laws and laws supplemental and amendatory thereof was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of section 2296 of the United States Revised Statutes have been and are applicable to all entries made under the homestead laws and laws supplemental and amendatory thereof.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 2140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the University of Arizona, State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz., for a certain described tract of land, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, in line 4, to strike out "in fee simple" and to insert in lieu thereof "as hereinafter limited," so as to make the sentence read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent as hereinafter limited to the University of Arizona, State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz., for the following-described tract of land.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] if the designation of the university is right? It seems to be a little awkward. It reads "University of Arizona, State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz."

Mr. ASHURST. That is the designation on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; "University of Arizona"; but then it reads "State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz."

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is reading from the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I am reading from the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. The bill read that way when it was considered in the Sixty-sixth Congress and was considered by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to address an inquiry to the Senator from Utah. The State of Arizona is, of course, an incorporated body. I think the grant should be made to the State of Arizona for the use of the University of Arizona. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, too. I will say to the Senator that I never noticed that in the bill and I believe the bill is not properly drawn in that respect. I think we ought to consider it before we pass it. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. ASHURST. I am willing that the bill should be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys for correction.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; that can be done on the floor, and there is no necessity for sending it back to the committee. There is no objection to the bill itself.

Mr. ASHURST. Do the Senators who have addressed the Senate believe the grant should be to the State of Arizona for the use and benefit of the State of Arizona?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

WITHDRAWAL OF MINERAL LAND IN UTAH.

The bill (S. 2460) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That for the period of 12 months from and after the approval of this act the provisions of section 18a of an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stats., p. 437), be, and the same are hereby, extended to land in Utah embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued October 4, 1909: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as otherwise enlarging, continuing, or extending the provisions of the aforesaid section 18a of the act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stats., p. 437).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat., p. 437), to certain lands in Utah."

TITLE TO SCHOOL LANDS.

The bill (S. 889) further to assure title to lands granted the several States in place, in aid of public schools, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with the following amendments: On page 1, line 9, after the word "listed," insert the words "not exchanged for other lands of the United States"; strike out all of the first proviso, beginning with the word "Provided," on page 1, line 12, and ending with the word "office," on page 2, line 6; on page 2, line 7, strike out the word "further"; on page 2, line 9, strike out the second "of"; on page 2, line 10, strike out the words "at all" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "it has attached, nor to deprive any court of jurisdiction it may now have to determine any controversy which may arise touching the title of the State or any of its assignees to any such land"; on page 2, line 11, strike out the word "designated" and insert in lieu thereof the word "granted"; on page 2, line 15, insert, after the word "Office" the following: "in proceedings initiated under the provisions of this act"; on page 2, line 20, after the word "States," insert the following: "and of rights to prospect for, mine, and remove the same in accordance with the provisions of existing laws"; on page 2, line 21, after the word "reservation," insert the following: "except as to metalliferous minerals," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That where a grant of lands, in place, has heretofore been made or may hereafter be made to any State in aid of public schools the governor of any such State may cause to be listed with the Secretary of the Interior any sections or parts of sections as designated in the grant, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the State in further assurance of title of all tracts thus listed, not exchanged for other lands of the United States, and found to be of the character granted and free from valid, adverse claim at the time when the rights of the State attach: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to postpone the time of the attachment of the grant of such lands under the law existent at the time the State's right attached thereto, if it has attached, nor to deprive any court of jurisdiction it may now have to determine any controversy which may arise touching the title of the State or any of its assignees to any such land.

SEC. 2. That in any case wherein lands so granted have been purchased in good faith from any State and hereafter are found by final decree of a Federal court or final judgment of the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of the General Land Office in proceedings initiated under the provisions of this act to have been of known mineral character at the time the grant to the State would have otherwise attached, the transferees of the State, mediate or immediate, shall have a right to a confirmatory patent from the United States with reservation of the mineral deposits in the land to the United States, and of rights to prospect for, mine, and remove the same in accordance with the provisions of existing laws, upon payment of $1.25 per acre, or to a patent without such reservation, except as to metalliferous minerals, upon payment of the appraised price of the land as such purchaser may elect: Provided, That 50 per cent of all moneys received from sales under the provisions of this act shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, after the expiration of the fiscal year, to the State within the boundaries of which the lands are located, said moneys to be used by such State for the support of public schools therein, and the balance thereof shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress, known as the reclamation act, approved June 17, 1902: Provided further, That until otherwise provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to prescribe fees and commissions to be paid registers and receivers of United States land offices on account of business transacted under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That hereafter, on approval by the Secretary of the Interior of selections made by any State under grants made by Congress, he shall direct the issuance of patent for the land so selected and approved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the pending bill passes, I believe that a statement concerning its purposes should be made, inasmuch as the passage of the bill marks somewhat of a departure in the practice in relation to grants which are made to various States for the benefit of schools. If I may be permitted, I shall undertake to state the object of the bill.

All of the States on their admission to the Union have been granted sections 16 and 36 of nonmineral public lands and certain States have been granted four sections. I think the State of Utah was amongst those.

It has always been held that any land which was not known to be mineral at the time the State was admitted into the Union passed to the State under that grant, but if a certain section 16 or section 36 was then known to be mineral it did not pass. No patent is given to a State for its lands in place sections 16 and 36; but whether they were mineral or not at the time the State was admitted into the Union is the determinative question upon which the title of the State depends. That may be brought into question at any time—that is to say, 20 years after the State has been admitted into the Union, during all of which time it has claimed title to sections 16 and 36, and no question has been raised that the land was nonmineral at the time the State was admitted, some one may go upon that land, locate it as mineral land, claiming that it was known to be mineral at the time the State was admitted into the Union—and then the question is tried out in the courts. So the title of one purchasing from the State a portion of either section 16 or section 36 is always more or less clouded by reason of the fact that some one at some time or other may come in and assert that the land was, in fact, mineral at the time the State was admitted into the Union.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Montana has made a very clear statement in reference to the matter, and I merely wish to refer to a case of which I am aware which is illustrative of what he has stated. Twenty-two years ago a part of a section in my State was purchased by an individual from the State. Later some one went upon it and claimed that at the time of the admission of Utah to Statehood the land was known to have been mineral. The question immediately arose as to title of the property, and, no matter what the purchaser may have expended upon the land, even though he may have expended upon it his entire means, there still rests a cloud upon his title.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The purpose of this proposed act is to permit the State to apply to the Secretary of the Interior for a patent to lands granted to it in place sections 16 and 36. It will then be obliged to claim that the lands are nonmineral, and the Secretary of the Interior will institute an inquiry thereupon as to whether or not the land is mineral or was known to be mineral at the time the State was admitted into the Union. If he determines that it was not known to be mineral at that time, but was known to be agricultural, a patent to the State will issue, and that settles the controversy for all time, so anyone thereafter buying from the State will know that he gets a good title to the land. The condition which I have stated has given rise to many unfortunate controversies, which this bill endeavors to prevent in the future.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is the meaning of the expression "in place"?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Lands granted to a State are either "in place" or by selection. As I have indicated, place grants are always of sections 16 and 36. Besides that, the State receives grants in bulk for its educational institutions, its State university, its agricultural college, and its college of mines, and so forth; that is, of a certain number of acres of land which it may select throughout the State. Having selected those lands, the Secretary enters upon an inquiry as to whether or not they are mineral, and finding them not to be mineral, patents will be issued to those lands. That is a floating grant, as the Senator will see; it does not attach to any particular lands until the State selects the lands.

The other lands the State does not select at all, but they are already fixed "in place"; that is, sections 16 and 36. We find no difficulty at all, so far as the lands are concerned, which the States are obliged to select, because as to those the States get patent now under the law. It is only as to those lands which are "in place" with respect to which the States do not get title; so that it always remains a matter of doubt as to whether or not the State has title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

CLAIMS OF CHEROKEE, CREEK, AND SEMINOLE INDIANS.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 545, being the bill (S. 514) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator briefly explain the measure.

Mr. OWEN. The bill was carried over on my objection. I now withdraw the objection and have no objection to its passage as it came from the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. What does the bill provide?

Mr. OWEN. It provides that the Indians named in the bill may go into the Court of Claims and wind up their affairs in connection with certain claims which they have against the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. The compensation of attorneys is limited, is it?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it is limited both as to percentage and as to the gross amount which may be paid.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 22, after the name "United States," to insert "nor more than $25,000 to be paid by any one nation or tribe," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any and all claims arising under or growing out of any treaty stipulation or agreement of the United States with the Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole Indian Nations or Tribes, or any act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs which said Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole Indian Nations or Tribes may have against the United States and which claims have not heretofore been determined or adjudicated: Provided, That said Court of Claims shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Indian nations: Provided further, That the suits be instituted within two years from date of approval of this act: Provided also, That from decisions of the Court of Claims in said suits appeals may be taken as in other cases to the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided further, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to confer jurisdiction upon the court to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any balance claimed to be due on the so-called Loyal Creek Claim, or any amount claimed to be due to equalize allotments among members of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suits any or all persons deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

The claim or claims of each of said Indian nations shall be presented separately or jointly by petition in the Court of Claims, and such action shall make the petitioner party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant. Such petition on the part of any such nation or tribe shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract or contracts with the principal chief or governor of the nation or tribe interested and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. A copy of the petition shall, in each case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he or some attorney from the Department of Justice, to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in said cases.

Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed in the Court of Claims within two years from the date of approval of this act as provided herein. Upon the final determination of any suit or action instituted under this act the Court of Claims shall decree such amount or amounts as it shall find reasonable to pay the attorney or attorneys employed therein by any of the above-named Indian nations for their services and expenses, and in no case shall the aggregate amounts decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amount or amounts stipulated in the contract of employment, or in excess of a sum equal to 10 per centum of the amount of recovery against the United States, nor more than $25,000 to be paid by any one nation or tribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK GRYGLA.

The bill (S. 910) for the relief of Frank Grygla was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Utah will withhold his objection.

Mr. KING. I will withhold it in order to hear the explanation the Senator may make.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The explanation is simply that Mr. Grygla in his lifetime was improperly suspended, and his salary was not paid during the time of such suspension. No reference was made in the suspension order as to the payment of salary. The matter has been investigated and the Secretary of the Interior reports that Mr. Grygla could have gotten his claim allowed through the Court of Claims, but there would still have to be an appropriation for it. So this means of securing relief was adopted rather than resorting to the Court of Claims and then securing an appropriation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator, if I may, when was the employee suspended? Of course, he rendered no service during the time of his suspension?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He was, of course, engaged during that time in clearing up the charges which had been made against him. He was not discharged from the service; he was merely suspended from the performance of his duties, and he was engaged in the interim, of course, in bringing about an investigation of the charges. The charges were found to be unfounded, and he was restored to his status in the Government service. The Secretary of the Interior reports that the Court of Claims has allowed such claims as this where cases have been presented to that court. Under the law he is entitled to this amount of money.

Mr. KING. If a man in private employment is suspended, which means, of course, discharged and later hired; if he is discharged because the master feels that he has been inattentive or inefficient, or believes that he has been guilty of some embezzlement or other criminal act, it would not legally, and I do not think morally, entitle him to compensation from the master. If the Federal Government runs the risk of having to pay every person who may be discharged or suspended it seems to me it might deter——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I can state to the Senator that it is a common occurrence in the different departments of the United States Government—such cases arise almost daily—for some employee who has been suspended pending investigation to receive his salary right along during the period of suspension.

Another employee, through a failure so to provide in the order, or for some other reason, does not receive pay during the period of suspension; but if he is restored to duty, and the charges prove to be unfounded, then under the law he is entitled to his salary, and the Secretary of the Interior so reports upon this bill.

Mr. KING. Would not the Secretary be authorized to make payment after the man had been exculpated from the charges against him which led to his suspension?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He can not, because the appropriation for such purposes lapses at the end of each fiscal year.

Mr. KING. But if the exculpation occurred prior to the lapsing of the appropriation he would have that authority?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I can not answer the Senator with assurance.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that it comes down to the question as to whether or not he was an employee of the Government. If not, if the suspension operated to sever his relations with the Government, then it seems to me the Government is not legally liable.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will read to the Senator a paragraph from the report of the Secretary of the Interior:

In view of the fact that Mr. Grygla was fully exonerated after investigation of the charges, of the fact that the Interior Department can not under the law reimburse him for losses incurred by his suspension, and of the further fact that similar claims have been allowed by the Court of Claims (41 C. Cls. R. 514, case No. 27948), I think it proper that relief as proposed in Senate bill 2701 be granted.

That is signed by John Barton Payne, Secretary of the Interior. The bill has been pending in the Committee on Claims for some time, as Senators will observe, and the committee has recently made the report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not bring myself to believe that a person who is not serving the Government, who is doing no work whatever, should be paid by the Government the salary that he would have drawn if he had continued in the service of the Government. There was some reason why these charges were preferred against that man, and the Government, the employer of the man, thought they were of sufficient importance to suspend him. During that time he could have worked anywhere he wanted to, providing he could have gotten work. The Government received nothing from him. His services were of no use whatever to the Government. Why the Government should be called upon to pay him compensation during the time when he was not serving the Government, I can not see.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I can state to the Senator that just that sort of thing is being done every day in the departments of the Government. Where employees are suspended, pending an investigation, in many cases the order specifically provides that the suspension shall not be without pay. In the other cases where they have been suspended and the charges have proven unfounded, upon reinstatement the employee has his claim against the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this happened 21 years ago. It seems to me that if this man had any just claim against the Government of the United States he would have made that claim long before this; and upon the face of it I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1723) for the relief of William Hensley was announced as next in order and was read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is no report here. I am going to object to this bill, not because I am not in sympathy with this man if he is entitled to compensation, but because we have a general compensation act to deal with persons who are injured in the employ of the Government; and if we constantly pass special bills we might just as well repeal the general compensation act.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question: The operation of the compensation act is within a certain time limit, is it not? Certain injuries for which claims might be brought here can not be considered by the compensation commission. It is possible that this bill may refer to one of those.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that in a number of instances where the injury occurred anterior to the time of the passage of the act we have passed bills that gave the claimants the status of persons who were injured similarly after the passage of the act; and if this man is entitled to compensation we ought to give him the benefit of that act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

THE CORNWELL CO., SAGINAW, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 449) for the relief of the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich., was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this bill seems to authorize the repayment of a fine which was assessed, and there is no report on it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no report on my calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. There is none on my calendar; and until there is some explanation of the bill, I am going to object.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask that the bill go over, because the member of the committee who had charge of it is not present.

Mr. POMERENE. A page has just handed me a copy of the report, which has just come in. There has been no opportunity to go over it, and I still object to consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

H. C. MULLINS AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 1009) for the relief of H. C. Mullins, his wife, and minor children, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to H. C. Mullins, of Fort Worth, Tex., the sum of $4,522.50, in full compensation for injuries sustained by the said H. C. Mullins, his wife, Ovilla Nelson Mullins, his minor child, Ina Flora Mullins, and for the death by reason of said injuries sustained by his minor child, Leona Pearl Mullins, due to an airplane, owned by the United States Government, while engaged in practice flying in Tarrant County, Tex., on the 20th day of June, A. D. 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have some explanation of this bill. Can the Senator from Kansas explain the details of the bill? I have no report on it.

Mr. KING. I think the facts will show that a lieutenant was flying in one of the fields in Texas, being engaged in a sort of practice flight; people gathered there from some distance around to witness the exhibition; and in attempting to rise above the fence which circumscribed the limits of the field, the machine caught against the top of the automobile in which Mr. Mullins and his wife and children were sitting, overturned it, injured all of them quite seriously, and killed one member of the family. It is simply a question as to whether or not the Government of the United States ought to make compensation. There was no carelessness upon the part of the flier. It was one of these very unfortunate circumstances that occur in life.

Mr. CAPPER. The report shows that the War Department investigated the matter pretty carefully, and says that there is merit in the claim. That is all the information that we have. The bill has passed the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF OSCAR CHRYSLER.

The bill (H. R. 3346) for the relief of the heirs of Oscar Chrysler was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,400 to Birdseye Knox Chrysler, Laura A. Chrysler, Harriet L. Chrysler, and Frederick Knox Chrysler, widow and minor children of and heirs at law of Oscar Chrysler, late surgeon in charge at the National Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee, Wis., who was killed while in discharge of his official duty on October 29, 1913, without fault or negligence on his part.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this is a bill to compensate the heirs of Doctor Chrysler, who was killed while in the discharge of his official duty on October 29, 1913. Doctor Chrysler was chief surgeon of the Milwaukee National Home for Disabled Soldiers. He had been in the service for 21 years at the time of his death. His death occurred through an inspection by him of a sterilizing apparatus which had been put into the home, which had been inspected twice before and found to work satisfactorily, but at this time they put it into real operation; and in some way unknown, apparently through some defect in the apparatus, but what particular defect never has been discovered, an explosion occurred which almost instantly killed Doctor Chrysler. There was a very complete investigation. There was no fault or negligence upon the part of Doctor Chrysler, and apparently the particular defect could not be found that would hold the makers of the appliance for negligence in the making.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, who is a very just man and a good lawyer, what policy he thinks the Government ought to pursue in view of the large number of claims that are presented against the Government for the torts or the negligences or the alleged negligences of the hundreds of thousands of employees of the Government. I do not mean to say that hundreds of thousands are guilty of torts or negligences, but scarcely a day passes that some claim or a good many claims are not filed with some branch of the Government.

It is alleged that some man in the employ of the Government—for instance, somebody driving the mail or some boy riding upon a bicycle, carrying a message from one department to another, runs into some person upon the street and overturns him, and the person is injured, or, as in the case which we have just considered, a flying machine is under the control of some official of the Government, some soldier or person in the Air Service, and the flying machine runs into a house or some person and inflicts injury either upon property or upon person. In view of the fact that there are perhaps a million employees of the Government, and a large number in the Army and in the Navy—and of course the number in the Government service will increase as the years go by—in view of the fact that those persons are bound, no matter how careful they may be, to do some act or be guilty of some omission that results in injury, and some of them by acts of omission and some by acts of negligence, perhaps some of them willful negligence, do injury to other persons—in view of all those facts, I ask the Senator whether we can recognize or ought to recognize the theory that the Government is responsible and must pay compensation for all the injuries to person and property?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, of course the Senator's question is not directed to the class of cases covered by this bill.

Mr. KING. No; to the general proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. There is a very clear distinction between the moral obligation upon the part of the Government to make compensation for injuries occurring to its own employees and its own officers and its obligation to make compensation for injuries occurring to a stranger through some act of a Government employee or officer.

I take it the latter is the condition about which the Senator inquires my view. I would say, with reference to that, that I think the Government should occupy exactly the same status occupied by a private employer. If there be any negligence on the part of a Government employee or Government officer which injures a stranger, the Government ought to compensate that third party for the injury sustained, just as a private employer is compelled to do under the law.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that under the common law, which applies in most of the States, the torts of municipal officers and of county officers do not fix liability upon the municipality or the county.

Mr. LENROOT. No; and there was an old doctrine also of the common law further back that the king can do no wrong, and that each municipality occupies a position of sovereignty. But while that is true in law, it is not true in morals. I think the moral liability of a Government, a State or a municipality, should be as great as that of a private individual or corporation, and, as the Senator knows, in every State in the Union that liability upon the part of a municipality is now established by statute, with certain limitations of damages.

Mr. DIAL. Would it not be going far enough for Congress to refer these cases to a court? We do not look into the cases of accidents sufficiently. I am not speaking of this case especially, but I am embarrassed about a good many of these cases, because I regret to have to object. I want to treat everybody fairly, but whether or not it would be going far enough for us to authorize them to sue is a question which should be inquired into.

Mr. LENROOT. I should think that might well be done in all these cases where the obligation, if there be any, rests on a party outside of the service of the Government; but as to a Government employee, I do not think he should be called upon to sue.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that Government employees come under the Federal compensation act.

Mr. LENROOT. Most of them do. This particular case does not. But the same rule of compensation is applied in this particular case, though it does not come under it. It is one year's salary.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that with the large number of employees of the Government, and the large number of soldiers, the fact that we have perhaps 200,000 automobiles operated by the Government directly and indirectly, possibly more, unless some policy shall be adopted, we are going to have these claims here by the thousands, and the Government will be called upon to pay millions of dollars.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not think the Government should not assume the same liability that a private corporation under the law would be compelled to assume? Is it fair to make the individual who has been injured suffer alone?

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that none of the States and, so far as I know, none of the counties, at least, account for the torts of their officers, and they do not pay damages unless it is by special act of the legislature. If any of the counties permit suits, it has been provided for recently by statute.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly. I do not happen to know of a single State that does not provide by statute for damages where, for instance, there is a hole in the sidewalk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under Rule VIII the Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SMOOT. I am going to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. The doctor in this case was a surgeon in charge at the National Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee, Wis.?

Mr. LENROOT. He was the surgeon in charge. He was not in command of the home.

Mr. SMOOT. He was killed, while in the discharge of his official duties, on October 29, 1913, according to the report. What official duty was he performing when he went to make the examination?

Mr. LENROOT. He was examining a sterilizing apparatus.

Mr. SMOOT. A sterilizing apparatus for whom?

Mr. LENROOT. For the hospital.

Mr. SMOOT. It was in the hospital itself?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; in the hospital of the home. He was clearly acting in the line of duty, and General Wood so held in his report.

Mr. KING. Why has this case not been presented sooner?

Mr. LENROOT. It has been. I presented it once, and I am afraid it is true of this as of many other cases, that there has been some neglect.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN LIBERTY LOAN SUBSCRIBERS.

The bill (H. R. 5775) for the relief of Liberty loan subscribers of the North Penn Bank, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Santa Rosa National Bank, Santa Rosa, Calif.; Mineral City Bank, Mineral City, Ohio; Robbinsdale State Bank, Robbinsdale, Minn.; and Farmers & Merchants' State Bank, Kenmare, N. Dak., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I hope the objection will not be insisted upon. This is for the relief of the subscribers to certain Liberty loans. Under the regulations of the Treasury Department different banks were often made agencies of the Treasury. In certain other instances the committee which solicited these loans were invited to ask them to have the subscribers pay to their own banks. I have special knowledge as to one bank, at Mineral City, Ohio, and I think from the hearings the facts were substantially the same in all the cases.

These subscribers, most of whom were people of very, very modest means, paid on account of their subscriptions to these banks. The banks failed for one reason or another before the bonds were delivered. In the case of the Mineral City Bank, subscriptions were made and paid in aggregating over $25,000. One of the executive officers of the bank got to speculating, and, as I now recall, later on committed suicide as a result of his mental state.

The question simply is, shall these bond subscribers who were subscribing out of the patriotism of their own hearts be made the losers? It does seem to me that the great Government of the United States ought to protect these unfortunate subscribers to the amount of the money that has been paid in. That is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator why it is that the Government is not to be protected in a case like that? It is in the position of having appointed an agent or trustee who has received a lot of money for the Government. If the bank is an agent or trustee, it has received the Government's money. It is not merely a claim by the Government against these banks, but it seems to me that puts them on the basis of an ordinary creditor of the bank. They can insist on this money being paid, or they can prosecute the officers of that bank, and it looks as if the Government ought to be protected.

Mr. POMERENE. What are we to do with the individual losers, who paid their money into these banks?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government ought to collect that money and pay it.

Mr. POMERENE. But when the only man in the case I have in mind, and to which I have referred, was a man who, because of his criminality, dissipated the funds of the bank and afterwards committed suicide, there is no relief for anybody, and the question is whether the Government shall stand by the acts of its agents in this matter, or let these poor people sustain the loss.

Mr. JONES of Washington. These people did not get the bonds?

Mr. POMERENE. No; they did not. They were only partially paid for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They did not tender the balance due?

Mr. POMERENE. I can not answer as to that.

Mr. CAPPER. In most cases the banks sold the bonds. They were part of the assets of the banks.

Mr. SMOOT. If they sold the bonds, and the bonds belonged to the Government, then the Government of the United States ought to collect the money obtained for them from the officers of the bank. The bonds belong to the Government of the United States and were partly paid for, the Government having deposited those bonds with them to be sold.

Mr. KING. The Government would have a lien upon everything the bank had.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt but that the Government can collect the money from the officers of those banks.

Mr. POMERENE. If the facts are such as to permit the Government to do it, certainly the Government ought to.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator that the good people who subscribed to those bonds should not lose 1 cent, and there is no need of losing 1 cent, because the Government not only can collect from the officers of the banks what those good people paid and then pay it back to them, but they can collect from them every dollar they got for those bonds.

Mr. POMERENE. That is a matter for the Government to look after later on, and it should not keep these people out of their money. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I notice a provision in the bill to the effect that these people have assigned to the Government any claim they may have against anybody for these bonds. So the Government is subrogated to their rights. But what troubles me about it is, how did these banks become the agents of the United States?

Mr. KING. That is the point; they are not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It seems to me they were simply the agents of the purchasers, and that the purchasers there stand upon just exactly the same footing as if they put money into a bank to purchase stock on the exchange.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not know how this matter was conducted in other sections of the country, but I do know that the Treasury Department, through the Federal reserve bank officers, had committees appointed, as we had in my own home city. Those committees divided up the city, made their drives for the subscriptions, and the subscription blanks provided that the money was to be paid into the particular bank where the subscriber did his business, and bonds were sent to those banks to be delivered when they were paid for.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then the contention of the Senator is that the banks became the agents of the Government for the purpose of selling the bonds?

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly so. I know, for instance, in making my own subscriptions I several times subscribed through the bank in Canton where I keep my account. The bonds would be delivered at the bank. A part of these subscriptions were paid in installments and a part of them in cash. Whenever they were paid up the bond was delivered. There can not be any question about these various banks being the agents of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. The matter may have been handled in that way in Ohio, but it was not handled in that way in Utah. For instance, the Provo Commercial and Savings Bank acted for the committee appointed to sell those bonds. They subscribed for the bonds they were asked to subscribe for by their customers. They paid for those bonds. The bank was responsible to the Government for the bonds, and in many, many cases there was a part payment to the bank made upon the bonds, and the interest which the bonds provided would be paid to the bank for carrying the bonds. The bank was entirely responsible. It is more than likely that it was that way in this case. I am not sure about that, however, I will say. That was the practice in vogue in the West.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me, I will read a paragraph from the report, which shows the plan which prevailed. It is as follows:

> The method of securing the applications of these subscribers by the Government was according to the plan followed generally throughout the country. Applications were required to reach the Treasury Department, Federal reserve bank, "or some incorporated bank" before a specified date. Application blanks on Government forms were widely distributed for this purpose, addressed directly to the Secretary of the Treasury. A notice, relating to the third Liberty loan, provided: "It is strongly recommended that subscribers avail themselves of the assistance of their own banks and trust companies, in which case they will, of course, make payment through such institutions." After applications were received by the banks, notice to subscribers to pay was given on mail carried under Government frank and in the name of the "United States Treasury Department," instructing the subscribers to call upon the bank to complete their subscriptions.

That was the general practice which prevailed in my section of the country. This little bank is in a village about 15 miles from my home. I have seen a good many of these people, and in a general way I know how they made their payments to this particular bank. It would be a burning shame if the Government should seize upon any little technicality to deprive of their money people who through patriotic impulses subscribed for bonds and paid their money into the bank, and many of whom could not afford to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not so much interested in the Government paying the money here involved as I am in the Government getting back the money for which the bonds were sold and which was paid into the banks.

Mr. POMERENE. If there is any liability there, I am in entire accord with the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Another point is, have these banks made final settlement? Do we know whether or not there will be other dividends paid to these people? They have reduced the losses somewhat by dividends collected from the banks.

Mr. POMERENE. I have gone hastily over the matter, and I find in connection with one of the banks they say there will be a further dividend. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] was chairman of the committee which had hearings and heard the evidence, and I think he can give further information with reference to the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is one national bank involved, and the others are probably not national banks. In the case of the national banks all their stockholders are liable. It would take some time to wind up their affairs. The receivers are perhaps not yet discharged, and it may be that there will be other dividends coming to these people.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Florida will observe that they are required to assign all claims they have to the Government. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury—> shall thereupon have power to pay claimant such sum upon the claimant assigning to the said Secretary for the benefit of the United States all interest he may have in any additional sum which may become payable to such claimant from said banks or the receiver thereof on account of his payment for such Liberty bonds.

Mr. FLETCHER. My point is that we do not know what we are appropriating. We may be appropriating the entire amount.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no. The matter is referred to the Comptroller General, and he is to make an investigation. We are not appropriating it directly.

Mr. FLETCHER. We are directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay whatever is ascertained to be due these people.

Mr. POMERENE. That is true; but it is after an investigation by the Comptroller General of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I objected and, at the risk of incurring the displeasure of my good friend from Ohio, I shall persist in my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING. May I have one moment? I would like to say that I am objecting principally because we do not know the facts. It is not clear yet whether the banks were the agents of the individuals who deposited the money in the banks or whether the banks were the agents of the Government. If they were the agents of the individuals, obviously there is no liability on the part of the Government. If the banks were the agents of the Government, of course the Government ought to pay; but the Government, as I recollect the law, would have a lien upon all the assets of the banks, or, at any rate, upon the money which was deposited there, and would have the first claim in payment. In that event undoubtedly the assets of the bank would be sufficient to liquidate any claims of the Government. Then, too, there is the stockholders' liability.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the trust fund.

Mr. KING. Yes. When the facts are a little more clearly presented to us, as well as the amount involved, I have no doubt the Congress will make a just disposition of the matter; but I wish to say to my friend from Ohio that I shall not be willing to vote for this until we know approximately what it is, whether it is $1,000 or $100,000.

Mr. POMERENE. The report shows the amount.

Mr. KING. I have not the report here.

Mr. POMERENE. This statement is found on page 2 of the report:

> The total amount of sums paid to said banks are approximately as follows: North Penn Bank, $165,000; Mineral City Bank, $25,000; Santa Rosa National Bank, $92,000; Robbinsdale State Bank, $31,000; Farmers & Merchants State Bank, $7,000. Dividends already paid have reduced the losses to the subscribers of the Santa Rosa National Bank to $38,000, and of the Robbinsdale State Bank to $19,000. Further dividends to be paid will somewhat reduce the total liability to such bond purchasers, which now does not exceed $254,000, and which sum may now be accepted as the maximum liability under this bill. This sum will be reduced by whatever additional dividends are paid to the subscribers.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator, before the next calendar day, will get further facts. If not, I shall in the meantime get them myself.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] can correct me if I am mistaken, but I think the Treasury Department already has detailed information about the matter. Am I not right about it?

Mr. CAPPER. The Treasury Department has gone into the matter very fully. I think myself, I will say to the Senator from Ohio, that it would be well to let the bill go over for the day, because some other Senators are better informed as to the Pennsylvania case, for instance. I will say that every effort that is possible to be made to recover before appealing to the Government for relief has been made, in my opinion. The committee held hearings, and I regret that the report of the hearings does not seem to be here for the use of Senators. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] I know is particularly well informed as to that case.

The details as to the four banks are quite different in each case. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind but that these are meritorious claims, and I think that there is no Senator who will object to the provision for payment when the facts are presented to him. However, there are four States involved, and if the Senator from Ohio will permit I would suggest that he let the bill go over.

Mr. POMERENE. Objection has been made, and, of course, any Senator has the parliamentary right to do that. I shall try to call up the bill at a very early date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

EXECUTIVE AND SUNDRY INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask permission to present the conference report on the Executive and sundry independent offices appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 31.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Salaries: Comptroller General, $10,000; Assistant Comptroller General, $7,500; assistants to Comptroller General—4 at $6,000 each; chief clerk, $3,000; chiefs of divisions—7 at $3,000 each; chief of appointment division, $2,500; assistants to chiefs of divisions—3 at $2,750 each, 4 at $2,500 each; chiefs of sections—10 at $2,500 each, 13 at $2,250 each, 2 at $2,000 each; assistant chiefs of sections—11 at $2,000 each, 1 at $1,900; chiefs of subsections—3 at $2,000 each; disbursing officer, $3,000; deputy disbursing officer, $1,800; private secretary, $1,800; attorneys—1 $5,000, 4 at $4,000 each, 4 at $3,600 each, 1 $3,100, 5 at $3,000 each, 1 $2,750; law clerks—1 $2,500, 4 at $2,400 each, 4 at $2,250 each, 2 at $2,200 each, 9 at $2,000 each, 4 at $1,800 each, 1 $1,600; accountants—1 $2,500, 2 at $2,400 each, 3 at $2,100 each, 3 at $2,000 each; investigators—1 $4,000, 1 $3,000, 20 at $2,000 each; reviewers—8 at $2,100 each; principal clerks—17 at $2,000 each; clerks—164 of class 4, 218 of class 3, 255 of class 2, 267 of class 1, 56 at $1,000 each, 70 at $900 each; check assorters—4 at $1,000 each; duplicating machine operator, $900; carpenter, $1,400; foreman of messengers and laborers, $1,400; chief messenger, $1,000; messengers—1 $1,000, 15 at $840 each; assistant messengers—29 at $720 each; laborers—1 $720, 21 at $660 each; messenger boys—14 at $480 each, 1 $420; forewoman of charwomen, $660; charwomen—22 at $240 each; and temporary clerks, stenographers, typists, and other assistants, to be paid at a rate not exceeding $1,800 per annum, $375,000; in all, $2,293,190.

"Contingent expenses: For traveling expenses, rent, telephone service, purchase and exchange of books, office supplies (including stationery) and equipment, repairs and maintenance, and miscellaneous items, $175,261."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "No officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid a salary or compensation at a rate per annum in excess of $11,000 except the following: Six at not to exceed $25,000 each, two at not to exceed $20,000 each, and one at not to exceed $15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
W. L. JONES,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
CARTER GLASS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the report may be agreed to.

The report was agreed to.

CORTEZ OIL CO.

The bill (H. R. 6525) for the relief of the Cortez Oil Co. was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether this claim has been referred to the Court of Claims, or is this a direct appropriation without reference to the Court of Claims? In the absence of explanation, I must object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE CISZEK AND ANNA CISZEK.

The bill (H. R. 6686) for the relief of George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek the sum of $1,500 for damage done to their dwelling house on July 1, 1919, due to the explosion of the United States Navy dirigible balloon C–8 at a point near Camp Holabird, Md.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask whether the Navy Department has recommended the passage of the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the Navy Department very strongly recommends its passage. I call the Senator's attention to the last paragraph on page 2 of the letter from Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, in which he says:

I strongly recommend that the present bill—H. R. 6686—be amended so as to carry an appropriation of $1,500 and passed.

He gives a very clear statement of it, and I think there is no question that it is a meritorious claim.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN B. WALKER.

The bill (S. 907) for the relief of Ellen B. Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Ellen B. Walker, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., as full compensation for the death of her husband, Thomas A. Walker, who, while in the employ of the United States Government, in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, lost his life by the collapse of a water-tower structure at Paguate, N. Mex., on July 17, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. WALKER.

The bill (S. 2584) for the relief of John H. Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,690.52 to John H. Walker, of Pasadena, Calif., as compensation in full for services rendered by him in the matter of the survey of public lands under contract No. 385, New Mexico.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire if there is any report accompanying the bill?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There is a report, but I can state briefly just what the facts are. Mr. Walker did some surveying under a contract with the Government and his accounts were not allowed until the appropriation for the work had lapsed. This bill proposes to make a special appropriation for his work. The account has since been allowed by the Interior Department, and the Interior Department asks that the appropriation may be made.

Mr. KING. It is not an appropriation in addition to the regular contract price?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is for the contract price of the work.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely want to ask the Senator from New Mexico why it is that under the state of facts which he has recited the department could not send in a supplemental or a deficiency estimate and have the claim taken care of in that way instead of having it possibly come before two or three Congresses before the claim will be finally paid under the method which has been followed. It seems to me, in view of the statement of facts which the Senator has made, the Secretary of the Interior could send down a supplemental or deficiency estimate and the matter could be taken care of in that way.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Washington, but that has not been done. It did not occur to me to request the department to proceed in that way; that is all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the Senator that he propose that course to the department.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I thank the Senator from Washington for the suggestion, and I may yet have to adopt it so far as this claim is concerned. I will look into the Senator's suggestion and see if it is not advisable to get the claim put on a deficiency appropriation bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATES OF DAVID B. LANDIS AND JACOB F. SHEAFFER.

The bill (S. 1599) for the relief of the estate of David B. Landis, deceased, and the estate of Jacob F. Sheaffer, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

JOHN BURKE.

The bill (H. R. 6523) for the relief of John Burke, former Treasurer of the United States, for lost bonds without default or negligence on the part of said former Treasurer, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my attention was called to this bill this morning by a Senator who, I think, has some objection to the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I hope no objection to this bill will be interposed. The situation is rather critical just at the present time. Mr. Burke, it will be remembered, is in some financial difficulties.

Mr. KING. Yes. Let me state to the Senator what I understand the objection to the bill is, namely, that Governor Burke in transferring bonds from one building to another or from one department to another, or, possibly, from one bank to another—I have not inquired into the matter, but I am only stating the situation as the matter was hurriedly detailed to me—failed, it is charged, to exercise reasonable diligence; he did not follow up the transmission of the bonds to ascertain whether or not there was a delivery; he asked for no receipt; and the whole circumstances, it is claimed, indicate negligence upon the part of the proposed beneficiary of this act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have examined with very great care the reports which have been submitted to us in this connection and they all assert—and the assertion seems to be fully sustained by the recital of the facts—that no kind of culpability may be attached to Governor Burke at all in the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not expect the bill to come up to-day, but I have a letter in reference to this matter, calling my attention to the circumstances as, it is claimed, they actually happened. I do not know whether the statement in the letter is correct, but if there was gross negligence on the part of the department, and particularly on the part of Mr. Burke—I do not know that that is the case—I should not want the bill passed upon now.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The facts are very briefly stated in the report as given by the Secretary of the Treasury. The report of the Senate Committee on Claims states:

> In December, 1918, the Peoples National Bank of Hillsboro, Ill., wrote the Reserve Bank of St. Louis, Mo., to forward to the Treasurer of the United States five $1,000 coupon bonds for postal savings securities, and instead of sending bonds to the Treasurer of the United States, the reserve bank sent them to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Treasurer's Office knew nothing about the bonds until a letter was received from the bank of Hillsboro, Ill., about 10 days later, and upon investigation a receipt book in the Secretary's Office showed the signature of a girl in the Treasurer's Office, and a colored messenger claimed to have brought the package to the Treasurer's Office at 4.30 in the evening, just at the time when everyone was going home. The lady in the Treasurer's Office recognized her signature but did not remember the occasion, it being about two weeks later. A thorough search was made for the bonds, but they have not been found.
>
> On July 14, 1920, the First National Bank of Fairmount, N. Dak., sent to the Treasurer of the United States coupon bonds amounting to $2,950 to be exchanged for registered bonds. The Treasurer has nothing to do with registered bonds and in this case the bonds should have been sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, Loans and Currency Division. A record was made of them in the Treasurer's Office and they were sent to the Secretary's Office by messenger, but the records do not show that they ever reached there.
>
> These are the only losses of the kind, and there would have been no loss in either case if the bonds had been sent to the proper office. Congress has always relieved the Treasurer for losses without fault on his part. The losses seem very small when the tremendous volume of business the war brought to the Treasurer's Office is considered.
>
> Attached hereto and made a part of this report are two letters from the Secretary of the Treasury addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, giving the facts in these two cases more in detail.

That is a recital of the facts, which seems to be fully supported by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. I think it would be an exceedingly harsh rule to hold the Treasurer liable under such circumstances, and I can not conceive how he would be in any manner culpable. The bonds were sent to the Treasurer's office by the two banks when they should not have been sent there.

Mr. KING. Will there result an entire loss to the Government?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Apparently so. In one case a letter was received by the Treasury from some one who returned a number of the bonds, including some of these bonds, amounting to about $500 worth, who said he had picked them up on the floor and needed them very much and would keep the remainder in the nature of a loan. So evidently the bonds were stolen either by the messenger or by some one who picked them up on the floor where they were dropped by the messenger. I can not see how, if the facts are here correctly stated, there could be any negligence on the part of the Treasurer.

Mr. KING. I shall make no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6524) to permit the correction of the general account of John Burke, former Treasurer of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill also may go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite different from the other bill, and I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have that bill also go over, because I desire to make some examination of the letter to which I have referred. I will say to the Senator that I received the letter only day before yesterday.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me remark in this connection that I hope the Senator will make an immediate investigation. I will ask that the bill be taken up some day during the ensuing week in the morning hour unless the calendar is proceeded with again in the meantime.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Utah is aware of the situation in which Governor Burke is at the present time?

Mr. SMOOT. I know Governor Burke very well, and I understand the situation to which the Senator refers.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. These matters are an embarrassment to him in the arrangements which he is desirous of making for the adjustment of his financial affairs, and I hope the Senator will find it possible to consent to the early consideration of the bills.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that what the Senator says is true, but really I have not had an opportunity to make an investigation or even answer the letter which I have received. The letter is from a person in the department and recites, in substance, information which the writer contends he possesses. I do not know whether or not there is a word of truth in what he says.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over. This completes the calendar. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by title and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 463. An act granting a patent to Joseph Robicheau; to the Committee on Patents.

H. R. 546. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay war-risk insurance to the foster parents of Edward Short; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 1290. An act for the relief of Cornelius Dugan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 2614. An act for the relief of Luke Ratigan; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 10643. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 7967. An act granting certain lands to Escambia County, Fla., for a public park; and

H. R. 8845. An act for the relief of Mattie Alexander; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 241. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a perpetual easement for railroad right of way and a right of way for a public highway over and upon a portion of the military reservation of Fort Sheridan, in the State of Illinois;

H. R. 1482. An act for the relief of James T. Farrill;

H. R. 4845. An act for the relief of J. W. La Bare;

H. R. 4894. An act for the relief of George W. Posey;

H. R. 5768. An act to amend and correct the military record of Alvah B. Doble; and

H. R. 6966. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup major of Field Artillery in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 540. An act for the relief of Bradley Sykes;

H. R. 1723. An act for the relief of Edward J. Schaefer;

H. R. 1892. An act for the relief of L. A. McMullen;

H. R. 2694. An act for the relief of Seth J. Harris, Jimmie Lou Martin, Mary Holloman, and William Henry Coleman;

H. R. 2722. An act for the relief of W. W. McGrath;

H. R. 3034. An act for the relief of Lizzie Askeli;

H. R. 4619. An act for the relief of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.;

H. R. 4622. An act for the relief of the Lloyd Mediterraneo Societa Italiana di Navigazione, owners of the Italian steamer Titania;

H. R. 5251. An act for the relief of Ruperto Vilche;

H. R. 5668. An act for the relief of Cora T. Dering;

H. R. 5791. An act for the relief of Robert Russell;

H. R. 5918. An act for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.;

H. R. 6134. An act for the relief of the estate of Anne C. Shymer;

H. R. 7052. An act for the relief of G. C. Caldwell;

H. R. 7425. An act for the relief of Zah Barmon;

H. R. 7695. An act for the relief of James F. Connors;

H. R. 8073. An act for the relief of the Kineo Trust Co.;

H. R. 8374. An act for the relief of the estate of Frank W. Knight;

H. R. 8767. An act for the relief of F. E. Taylor and B. C. Broom;

H. R. 9866. An act authorizing the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. to sue the United States to recover damages resulting from collision; and

H. R. 10179. An act for the relief of Americus Enfield; to the Committee on Claims.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSION.

Mr. BURSUM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 509, being House bill 4.

Mr. KING. What is the title of the bill, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4) granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors; and to certain Army nurses.

Mr. KING. That bill will take some time, and I shall have to ask for a quorum if the Senator is going to insist upon taking it up this afternoon.

Mr. BURSUM. I have no objection to the Senator calling for a quorum, but the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has a bill which I understand he is desirous of having considered, and if that bill may be considered and no objection is offered to it, I shall make no objection to withholding the motion I have made pending the consideration of the bill in which the Senator from Kansas is interested, provided it will not lead to debate.

Mr. KING. I am sure the Senator does not want a call for a quorum this afternoon. It will be impossible to obtain one at this hour.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, that is the attitude of the Senator from Utah every time a pension bill comes up.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Sheppard
Capper	Jones, Wash.	New	Smoot
Dial	Kendrick	Oddie	Spencer
Gooding	King	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Harris	Lodge	Page
Heflin	Moses	Phipps

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. DIAL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, pursuant to the unanimous consent entered into to-day, when the Senate concludes its business this afternoon it must recess until Monday.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate stand in recess.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I make the point of order that that can not be done without a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; a recess may be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A unanimous-consent agreement has heretofore been made that the Senate shall take a recess at the conclusion of business this afternoon.

Mr. DIAL. I did not know of that order, Mr. President. If I had known of it, I should not have made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. The order was made early in the day. It is now half past 4 in the afternoon, and I do not think it is worth while to endeavor to obtain a quorum.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senate can not conclude its business without a quorum.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, the Senate will stand in recess until Monday at 12 o'clock noon.

Thereupon (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, April 24, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 24, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McCumber	Sheppard
Borah	Hale	McKellar	Smoot
Brandegee	Harreld	McNary	Spencer
Broussard	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Bursum	Harrison	New	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Newberry	Sutherland
Caraway	Johnson	Nicholson	Swanson
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kellogg	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Keyes	Pepper	Warren
du Pont	King	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	Ladd	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	La Follette	Pomerene	Weller
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Ransdell	Willis
Glass	McCormick	Rawson

Mr. STANLEY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness. I ask that this announcement may continue through the day.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INVITATION TO VISIT QUANTICO (VA.) MARINE CORPS BASE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, inviting Members of the Senate to visit the Marine Corps base at Quantico, Va., May 5, 1922, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 20, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: You may recall that about a year ago a number of the Senators visited the Marine Corps base at Quantico, Va., and I feel that it would be advisable to again make arrangements for a similar visit on May 5 next. Quantico is the station of the Marine Corps Expeditionary Force, which is held in readiness for active service in an emergency either at home or abroad.

The President has placed the U. S. S. Mayflower at the disposal of the Navy Department for this occasion, and that vessel will sail from the navy yard for Quantico at 8 a. m. on the above-mentioned date, and will leave Quantico on the return trip to Washington at about 6 p. m. the same day. Dinner and supper will be provided at Quantico. Those who desire to return to Washington earlier than the return trip of the Mayflower may do so by train on the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad.

I will thank you to extend this invitation to the Members of the Senate, and I would be glad if a large number of them could arrange to make the trip. A ticket will be issued, through the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, to each Senator desiring to visit Quantico. These tickets should be presented at the navy yard gate and at the gangway of the Mayflower.

Trusting that I may have the pleasure of welcoming a large delegation from the Senate, and with my best personal wishes, I am,
Most sincerely yours,

EDWIN DENBY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. CALVIN COOLIDGE,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

J. B. WATERMAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1059) for the relief of J B. Waterman, which was on page 1, line 4, after the word "directed" to insert the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the amendment of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Toledo, at Tiffin, and the Presbytery of Xenia, at Columbus, both in the State of Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Toledo, at Tiffin, and the Presbytery of Xenia, at Columbus, both in the State of Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Toledo at Tiffin, the Presbytery of Xenia at Columbus, and the Presbytery of Lima at Lima, all in the State of Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Hamilton County Memorial Association, of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring the maintenance of a strong and efficient Navy, both in vessels and in personnel, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Kiwanis Club, of Youngstown, Ohio, indorsing the Zionist movement and favoring the passage of the Lodge joint resolution for the establishment in Palestine of the National Home for the Jewish people, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SPENCER presented a petition of members of the Needlecraft Club, of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the enactment of the Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the American Steamship Owners' Association, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the acquisition by the Government of the Cape Cod Canal, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions and telegrams in the nature of petitions from the United Hebrew Orthodox Congregations of Pittsburgh, Pa.; of the Tikwath Jehuda Zion Club, the Kartuz Brezer Congregation, the Yorkville Synagogue, the Jewish Tribune, of New York City; the Jewish Synagogues, the Vaad Hakohol, the Temple Bethel, and the Young Men's Hebrew Association, of Utica, N. Y.; the Jewish Congregation of Bnai Emunah and the Ohel Congregation, of Tulsa, Okla.; the Zion Land Enterprise, the Congregation Hadrat Israel, the Congregation Agudath, the Palestine Youth Society, the Greater Boston Jewish Congress Committee, and the Young Israel of Greater Boston, all of Boston, Mass.; Jewish citizens of Fall River, Mass., by Rabbi Abraham Lipschitz; the Congregation Anshi and the Congregation Ahabat Shalom, of Lynn, Mass.; the Daughters of the White and Blue, the Tikvas Zion, and the Knights of Judaea, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 191, favoring the establishment in Palestine of the National Home for the Jewish people, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CAREY SEGREGATION PROJECT IN COLORADO.

Mr. PHIPPS. From the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 3195) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept completion of Carey segregation No. 11, and to issue patent therefor, and I submit a report (No. 629) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. If it shall lead to any discussion I will, of course, withdraw the request. The Department of the Interior has reported favorably on the measure. It is simply a matter of authorization.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "therein" to strike out the proviso in the following words: "Provided, however, That the State shall thereafter issue patent only to the individual settlers upon payment to the Mutual Carey Irrigation Co. by such settlers of such sums as, together with the assessments already paid in, shall aggregate a total of $40 per acre, to be expended under the direction of the State land board for extension of irrigation works for said project," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to accept work already performed and the proof submitted under Carey segregation No. 11, State of Colorado, and to issue patent to the State of Colorado for lands embraced therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5634) for the relief of Frank William Brown and Clara Bryan Brown (Rept. No. 630);

A bill (H. R. 7923) for the relief of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. (Rept. No. 631); and

A bill (H. R. 7984) for the relief of James Kelly (Rept. No. 632).

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 249) requesting the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the power of the President to appoint an ambassador to Haiti without the advice and consent of the Senate, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 633) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that April 22, 1922, they presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3317) to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Cass Lake and Bemidji, in or about section 25, township 146 north, range 32 west, Beltrami County, Minn.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 3503) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Commercial Pacific Cable Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3504) granting an increase of pension to Nancy Heffelfinger (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3505) in reference to the summoning of grand juries in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

APPOINTMENTS BY EXECUTIVE ORDER.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate Resolution 258 requesting the President to furnish the Senate information concerning appointments by Executive order. There will be no discussion of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object if it leads to no discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with an amendment, in line 3, to strike out the words "setting aside" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "whose appointment is by such order excepted from," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to furnish to the Senate the name of every person appointed by Executive order since March 4, 1921, whose appointment is by such order excepted from the civil-service rules, and to furnish to the Senate the reasons therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 274) authorizing the commissioning in the Marine Corps of midshipmen under certain conditions, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. GOODING. I wish to present several petitions from various peanut growers. I shall ask that only one petition be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Idaho, if it is going to take very long, to allow me to proceed, as I have an important meeting to attend this afternoon, and I desire to get through my speech in time to attend that meeting.

Mr. GOODING. I think, unless there is objection, it will not take more than a minute or two. If there is objection, I shall withdraw the request.

I present 13 petitions from peanut growers of Virginia, 2 from Florida, 33 from Texas, 22 from Georgia, 7 from North Carolina, 1 from South Carolina, 4 from Tennessee, and 1 from Alabama, praying for a duty on imported peanuts. I ask that only one of the petitions may be read, together with a short letter from Mr. P. D. Bain, president of the United Peanut Associations of America.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Idaho to allow me to proceed now, and after I have finished he can have the letter and petition read.

Mr. GOODING. Very well. I will withhold the request until the Senator from Utah concludes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not now going to undertake to discuss any of the rates of the pending bill. What I have to say to-day will relate to its administrative features. I think those features of the bill are most important, and I have given considerable time to their consideration and study. I intend now as briefly as possible to present my views upon them.

BASIS OF VALUATION AND THE ELASTIC TARIFF.

The President, speaking in his message of December 6 of tariff legislation, expressed the hope that a way would be found "to make for flexibility and elasticity so that rates may be adjusted to meet unusual and changing conditions which can not be accurately anticipated." At first the full force of this constructive proposal escaped the attention of many. At present an awakening sense of its significance is being reflected in the press and is commanding more and more support for the Senate bill. The elastic tariff proposals not only provide a satisfactory solution of the particular tariff problem now before Congress, but it also suggests a practical basis for a continuing scientific adjustment of the tariff in the future. Once they are understood, I believe, every Member of Congress will welcome legislation which will in part free us from dealing with burdensome details and from the exactions of putting through a general tariff revision in a single bill.

Mr. President, never in the world's history has there been a time when commercial and economic conditions were in so unsettled or unsatisfactory condition. No two countries have identical problems, but all are planning, working, struggling, and hoping for a successful solution of the horrible conditions brought about through the recent World War. Your committee was confronted with the fact that in some cases a fairly protective rate against one country was next to prohibitory against another; but, fortunately, in the great majority of such cases the goods made in such countries are not comparable, and the rates imposed are on a basis of fair protection of American industries under existing conditions. The rates based upon foreign valuation, as reported to the Senate, are much lower relatively than the House rates based upon American valuation. A detailed study of these conditions occupied a great deal of the time of your committee in the consideration of the bill and in the final conclusion as to the proper rates to impose.

I need not enlarge upon the amount of time which it has required to bring this tariff revision to its present stage. Senators know only too well to what extent it has delayed other important legislation. But I may call your attention to the fact that with the progress of invention and the development of American industry, the number and diversity of the articles with which a tariff necessarily deals, increase from one revision to the next. The tariff of 1890, including the free list and omitting all administrative regulations, covers 47 large pages, the act of 1909, 71 pages, and the present tariff act is likely to cover 85 pages of the same size of type. It must be expected that every conscientious revision of the tariff will encroach to a greater extent than the previous one upon the time of the legislative branch. We are already in almost continuous session, and it becomes increasingly necessary for us to delegate to executive and administrative agencies the working out of detailed adjustments. Business interests also will, no doubt, welcome measures which will render less frequent and less violent the upheavals incident to tariff revision and which will accordingly contribute to commercial and industrial stability.

SUMMARY OF PROPOSED MEASURES.

Flexibility in tariff rates is not by any means a new departure in American tariff legislation. In the act of 1909 there was a maximum and minimum provision, the object of which was to protect our foreign commerce against discriminations. In existing law, when it is found that any foreign government grants a bounty on the production of any product, countervailing duties shall be imposed upon such products when imported into the United States. This provision is incorporated in the bill now before the Senate and is strengthened by providing that countervailing duties shall apply not only to bounties granted by governments but also to bounties granted by persons, partnerships, associations, cartels, or corporations. Our antidumping statutes have also been an application of the principle of flexibility in tariff making in order that the tariff might be a means of protecting our industry against unfair competition. Following these precedents and extending them to meet the new conditions which to-day confront us, it is now proposed to authorize the President:

(a) To modify tariff rates either upward or downward within prescribed limits and in accordance with definite rules laid down by Congress, so that the rates may at all times conform to existing conditions.

(b) To change the basis for the assessment of ad valorem duties on selected items from the foreign value to the value of the domestic article in the American market when the foreign value is not a certain basis for the assessment of duties on such items.

(c) To impose penalty duties or prohibit the importation of particular goods for the purpose of preventing unfair methods of competition in the importation of goods.

(d) To impose additional duties on the whole or any part of the imports into the United States from any country which discriminates against our overseas commerce. These additional duties are limited to the amount of the discrimination, but if the discrimination is maintained the importation of the merchandise may be prohibited.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah leaves the topic which he is now discussing will he allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

